School of Theology at Claremont

The Library

of the School of Theology at Claremont

1325 North College Avenue Claremont, CA 91711

8X 9840 P7

A HISTORY

F THE

ORRUPTIONS OF CHRISTIANITY

BY

JOSEPH PRIESTLEY, LL.D., F.R.S.,

ETC. ETC.

REPRINTED FROM RUTT'S EDITION, WITH NOTES.

TO WHICH ARE APPENDED

CONSIDERATIONS IN EVIDENCE THAT THE APOSTOLIC AND PRIMITIVE CHURCH WAS UNITARIAN, EXTRAOTED FROM PRIESTLEY'S REPLIES TO BISHOP HORSLEY, THE BENCH OF BISHOPS, AND OTHERS.

TENTH THOUSAND.

LONDON:

HE BRITISH AND FOREIGN UNITARIAN ASSOCIATION, 178, STRAND.

1871.

Price 28. 6d.

mole.

A HISTORY

CORRUPTIONS OF CHRISTIANITY

JOSEPH PRIESTERY, M.D. P.R.S.

[** A few Explanatory Notes have been added to the ensuing pages. To distinguish these from Rutt's and Priestley's Notes, they have been enclosed in brackets.]

University of Southern California

PRINTED BY WOODFALL AND KINDER, MILFORD LANE, STRAND, LONDON, W.C.

Price 21 B&

CONTENTS.

					PAGE
LIST OF ECCLESIASTICAL WRITERS					vi
PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION OF 1871					vii
PREFACE TO RUTT'S EDITION					1X
PREFACE BY DR. PRIESTLEY
DEDICATION BY DR. PRIESTLEY	THE SHEET	AND ON H	Participate 3	mmill of	XIV
	- Winner

PART I.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO JESUS CHRIST.

The Introduction, page 1—Sect. I. Of the Opinion of the ancient Jewish and Gentile Churches, 3—Sect. II. Of the first Step that was made towards the Deification of Christ, by the Personification of the Logos, 8—Sect. III. The Supremacy was always ascribed to the Father before the Council of Nice, 16—Sect. IV. Of the Difficulty with which the Doctrine of the Divinity of Christ was established, 19—Sect. V. An Account of the Unitarians before the Council of Nice, 24—Sect. VII. Of the Arian Controversy, 26—Sect. VII. Of the Doctrine concerning the Holy Spirit, 29—Sect. VIII. The History of the Doctrine of the Trinity, from the Councils of Nice and Constantinople, till after the Eutychian Controversy, 34—Sect. IX. The State of the Doctrine of the Trinity in the Latin Church, 38—Sect. X. The History of the Doctrine of the Trinity after the Eutychian Controversy, 42—Sect. XI. A general View of the Recovery of the genuine Doctrine of Christianity concerning the Nature of Christ, 45.

PART II.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO THE DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT.

The Introduction, page 51—Sect. I. That Christ did not die to make Satisfaction for the Sins of Men, 52—Sect. II. Of the true End and Design of the Death of Christ, 57—Sect. III. Of the Sense in which the Death of Christ is represented as a Sacrifice, and other figurative Representations of it, 60—Sect. IV. Of the Opinions of the Apostolical Fathers, 71—Sect. V. Of the Opinions of the Fathers till after the Time of Austin, 73—Sect. VI. Of the State of Opinions concerning the Doctrine of Atonement, from the Time of Austin to the Reformation, 82—Sect. VII. Of the Doctrine of the Reformers on the Subject of Atonement, 85

PART III.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS CONCERNING GRACE, ORIGINAL SIN, AND PREDESTINATION.

The Introduction, page 93—Sect. I. Of the Doctrines of Grace, &c., before the Pelagian Controversy, 95—Sect. II. Of the Pelagian Controversy and the State of Opinions in consequence of it, 97—Sect. III. Of the Doctrine of Grace, &c., in the Middle Ages, and till the Reformation, 101—Sect. IV. Of the Doctrines of Grace, Original Sin, and Predestination, since the Reformation, 103.

PART IV.

THE HISTORY CF OPINIONS RELATING TO SAINTS AND ANGELS.

The Introduction, page 108—Sect. I. Part 1. Of the Respect paid to Saints in general, till the Fall of the Western Empire, 108—Part 2. Of Pictures and Images in Churches, 111—Part 3. Of the Veneration for Relics, 111—Part 4. Of Worship paid to Saints and Angels, 113—Part 5. Of the Respect paid to the Virgin Mary, in this Period, 117—Sect. II. Part 1. Of the Worship of Saints in the Middle Ages, and till the Reformation, 118—Part 2. Of the Worship of the Virgin Mary, 123—Part 3. Of the Worship of Images in this Period, 126—Part 4. Of the Respect paid to Relics in this Period, 130.

PART V.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS CONCERNING THE STATE OF THE DEAD.

The Introduction, page 132—Sect. I. Of the Opinions concerning the Dead till the Time of Austin, 134—Sect. II. Of the Opinions concerning the State of the Dead, from the Time of Austin till the Reformation, 136—Sect. III. Of the Revival of the genuine Doctrine of Revelation concerning the State of the Dead, 139.

PART VI.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO THE LORD'S SUPPER.

The Introduction, page 140—Sect. I. The History of the Eucharist, till after the Time of Austin, 141—Sect. II. The History of the Eucharist from the Time of Austin to that of Paschasius, 148—Sect. III. The History of the Eucharist, from the Time of Paschasius to the Reformation, 153—Sect. IV. Of the Recovery of the genuine Christian Doctrine concerning the Lord's Supper, 161.

PART VII.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO BAPTISM.

The Introduction, page 164—Sect. I. Of the Opinions and Practices of the Christians relating to Baptism, till the Reformation, 169—Sect. II. The State of Opinions concerning Baptism, since the Reformation, 174.

APPENDIX TO PARTS VI. AND VII.

Containing the History of the other Sacraments besides Baptism and the Lord's Supper, page 176.

PART VIII.

- A HISTORY OF THE CHANGES THAT HAVE BEEN MADE IN THE METHOD OF CONDUCTING PUBLIC WORSHIP.
- The Introduction, page 180—Sect. I. Of Churches, and some Things belonging to them, 180—Sect. II. Of Ceremonies in general, and other Things belonging to Public Worship, 183—Sect. III. Of the proper Parts of Public Worship, 185—Sect. IV. Of Festivals, &c., in the Christian Church, 188.

PART IX.

THE HISTORY OF CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

The Introduction, page 192—Sect. I. The History of Church Discipline, in the Time of the Christian Fathers, 193—Sect. II. Of the State of Church Discipline in the Dark Ages, and till the Reformation, 195—Sect. III. Of the Method of enforcing Church Censures, or the History of Persecution, till the Time of Austin, 202—Sect. IV. Of the Methods of enforcing Ecclesiastical Censures, from the Time of Austin to the Reformation and afterwards, by the Catholics, 206—Sect. V. Of Persecution by Protestants, 211—Sect. VI. The History of Mistakes concerning Moral Virtue, 213.

PART X.

- THE HISTORY OF MINISTERS IN THE CHIRISTIAN CHURCH, AND ESPECIALLY OF BISHOPS.
- The Introduction, page 224—Sect. I. The History of Christian Ministers till the Fall of the Western Empire, 225—Sect. II. The History of the Clergy, from the Fall of the Roman Empire in the West, to the Reformation, 232.

PART XI.

THE HISTORY OF THE PAPAL POWER.

The Introduction, page 243—Sect. I. Of the State of the Papal Power till the Time of Charlemagne, 244—Sect. II. The History of the Papal Power from the Time of Charlemagne to the Reformation, 250.

APPENDICES TO PARTS X. AND XI.

APPENDIX I. The History of Councils, page 263—APPENDIX II. Of the Authority of the Secular Powers, or the Civil Magistrate, in Matters of Religion, 266—APPENDIX III. Of the Authority of Tradition, and of the Scriptures, &c., 273.

PART XII.

THE HISTORY OF THE MONASTIC LIFE.

The Introduction, page 279—Sect. I. Of the Monastic Life, till the Fall of the Western Empire, 281—Sect. II. The History of the Monks after the Fall of the Western Empire, 283.

PART XIII.

THE HISTORY OF CHURCH REVENUES.

The Introduction, page 293—Sect. I. The History of Church Revenues till the Fall of the Western Empire, 293—Sect. II. The History of Church Revenues after the Fall of the Western Empire, 295.

THE GENERAL CONCLUSION.

Part I. Containing Considerations addressed to Unbelievers, and especially to Mr. Gibbon, page 301—Part II. Containing Considerations addressed to the Advocates for the present Civil Establishments of Christianity, and especially Bishop Hurd, 311—APPENDIX. Containing a summary View of the Evidence for the Primitive Christians holding the Doctrine of the simple Humanity of Christ, 317.

NEW APPENDIX.

CONSIDERATIONS IN EVIDENCE THAT THE APOSTOLIC AND PRIMITIVE CHURCH WAS UNITABIAN, EXTRACTED FROM PRIESTLEY'S REPLIES TO BISHOP HORSLEY, THE BENCH OF BISHOPS, AND OTHERS, 319.

The following List of the principal Ecclesiastical Writers, &c., after the Apostolic Age, with the Time when they flourished, chiefly from CAVE'S HISTORIA LITERARIA, may be useful to the general reader:—

			A.D.	ļ				A.D.
Ignatius			101	Lactantius				303
Polycarp		•	108	Arius				315
Papias			110	Eusebius Pamphilus	the	historian		315
Basilides			120	Athanasius .			ı.	326
Valentinus			125	Marcellus of Ancyra				330
Marcion			130	Photinus				344
Justin Martyr .			140	Cyril of Jerusalem			,	350
Irenæus			167	Hilary				354
Theophilus			168	Eunomius				360
Hegesippus .			170	Apollinarius (sen.)				362
Montanus			172	Epiphanius .				368
Tatian			172	Optatus				368
Athenagoras .			177	Basil			ı	370
Artemon			187	Gregory (Nyssen)				370
Theodotus of Byzan	tium		192	Gregory (Nazianzen)				370
Clemens Alexandrin	as.		192	Apollinarius (jun.)				370
Tertullian			192	Ambrose				374
Symmachus .			201	Jerom			ì	378
Caius .			210	Austin			Ü	396
Hippolytus .			220	Chrysostom .				398
Origen			230	Sulpicius Severus				401
Beryllus			230	Pelagius				405
Dionysius (of Alexan			247	Theodorus of Mopsue
Cyprian			248	Cyril of Alexandria			Ì	412
v A			250	Theodoret	į.			425
Novatian .			251	Nestorius	-
Gregory of Neocesare			252	Eutyches				448
7 7 7 7			260	Claudianus Mamertus		- :		462
Babellius .		Ţ	260					540
Manes		ì	277	Gregory the Great	Ċ			590
A 7.1			303	0108017 5110 011000				-
Arnobius		1	000

PREFACE TO THE NEW EDITION OF 1871.

Believing, as all Christians do, in the divine origin of Christianity, and seeing at the present time the Church of Christ divided and distracted on a great number of questions, we may properly deem valuable whatever in any measure contributes to lead mankind to a better knowledge of the opinions and practices of the first Christians. The statement of Tertullian, "That is the true faith which is the most ancient, and that a corruption which is modern," is generally admitted; and so the New Testament, above all other books, is chiefly studied and prized. And next in importance, as helping to settle some questions about the true faith, is the knowledge of the opinions of the Christians immediately following the Apostolic age. Dr. Priestley, in an eminent degree, by the careful study of all the writings extant of the first five hundred years of the Christian era, has done a service for the reformation of religion. The present volume he spoke of as "the most valuable of all my writings." Many of its statements were severely canvassed by Bishop Horsley and others, and the author made a few corrections. "You have set me right," he said, "with respect to the exactness of two of my quotations, not one mistake having been discovered in it that at all affects my general design."-Many are not a little surprised and disappointed that Dr. Priestley should have excluded the Arians from his list of Unitarians, and thus weakened his argument by never calling into court some of the principal witnesses, simply because they believed in the pre-existence of Christ; for otherwise the Arians were essentially Unitarians. Dr. Priestley was a strict Humanitarian, regarding none as Unitarians but those who believed in Jesus Christ, "as only and properly a man;"-for this is the meaning of his phrase "a mere man," which has given much offence. Nevertheless, he was a firm believer in the supernatural power and divine mission of Christ. Dr. Priestley also unnecessarily, in one or two places of this volume, introduces his materialistic philosophy, with which not a few of his friends, in his own day, had no sympathy; and the same may be said of many Unitarians now.

The New Appendix aims but to give a few additional thoughts and quotations on an important controversy, and affords the reader some idea of his larger work, "A History of the Early Opinions concerning Jesus Christ," in two volumes. This work, which is out of print, and may possibly never be reprinted, contains some eighteen hundred quotations from the writings of the so-called orthodox fathers. The paragraphs in this Appendix are mere summaries, to convey to the reader some idea of that invaluable and scarce work. Dr. Priestley says, speaking of this history, "I find myself, in a great measure, upon new ground. At least I see reason to think that it has never been sufficiently examined by any person who has had the same general view of things that I have." Since his time other authors have gone over the ground, and with some additional results.

We are indebted to several gentlemen for services connected with this volume who have verified the numerous quotations and afforded useful hints. At the close of the last century this History stirred up much controversy, and may yet in some degree aid the religious inquirer to the solution of questions of polity and doctrine which still agitate the Christian world.

PREFACE TO RUTT'S EDITION.

of unbelievers.

those credulous Protestants who satisfy gretted that it was received with a disthemselves that the Reformers in the courtesy too nearly bordering on Warsixteenth century had left no corrup- burtonian arrogance. tions of Christianity unreformed, in churches which, under their influence, equally unsuccessful, had Dr. Priestley were established by the civil power. expected his approbation. But the Such establishments themselves, he spirit which the celebrated Historian justly regarded as no triffing corrup- discovered, on this occasion, I may find tions; and as to some of the most cen- another opportunity to describe. Yet sured representations in this Volume, I form expectations, at this moment, their Author is justified by the pub-lished opinions of not a few dignified pression of a very recent event of which Churchmen. For what are the special the painful information has reached pleadings of Bishop Burnet in his Ex- me, while concluding this Preface. I position-Bishop Hoadley's Plain Ac- refer to the lamented death of Dr. count and his Kingdom of Christ not Thomson, an encourager of this under-"metaphysical and scholastic divinity are all these but forcible though indirect attacks on the Creeds and Ritual of their own Church?

It was not, however, to the consider- his fair example. ation of a Churchman, formed in the liberal, though inconsistent, school of

DR. PRIESTLEY, as he has mentioned in Hoadley, that Dr. Priestley recom-his own Preface, designed to have added mended the following pages. Bishop this History, as a fourth Volume to the Hurd was of another school. A highly Institutes, on their first publication in accomplished classical scholar, and, in 1771. But other occupations inter- his earlier writings, no illiberal polivened, till his materials became suffi-tician, he appears to have been concient for a larger Work, and he had an tent as a Theologian to dwell in decenincreasing conviction of its utility and cies. Thus, as a Warburtonian Lecimportance. His metaphysical discusturer, in 1772, he could only discover a sions had led him still farther to conpapal Man of Sin, though Mr. Evansider the questions concerning the son, whose inquiries were more exnature of Christ; nor during his excurtended, could assure the bishop that sion to the Continent in 1774, could there were many Antichrists. Indeed, he have failed to perceive the corrupt by a prelate who had congratulated forms of religion under papal establish- the English Reformation because it ments, and their influence to foster the advanced or was retarded as the supeprejudices, and to increase the number rior judgment of the Civil Magistrate determined, Dr. Priestley's appeal would Yet Dr. Priestley was not one of not be much regarded. It is to be re-

The appeal to Mr. Gibbon was of this World-Dr. Clarke's Scrip- taking, on whose approbation of its ture Doctrine-Bishop Law's Theory progress I should have set no common "purged of ancient prejudices"-Dr. value. May his family receive all the Jortin's Remarks, where he explodes consolation which religion can bestow, when a Christian is called from the from the Christian system;"-what labours of life to the recompense of eternity, and may those who survive, especially in the same religious connexion, be taught and encouraged by

> J. T. RUTT. Clapton, May 26, 1818.

DR. PRIESTLEY'S PREFACE.

AFTER examining the foundation of our Christian faith, and having seen how much valuable information we receive from it, in my Institutes of Natural and Revealed Religion, it is with a kind of reluctance, that, according to my proposal, I must now proceed to exhibit a view of the dreadful corruptions which have debased its spirit, and almost annihilated all the happy effects which it was eminently calculated to produce. It is some satisfaction to us. however, and is more than sufficient to answer any objection that may be made to Christianity itself from the consideration of these corruptions, that they appear to have been clearly foreseen by Christ, and by several of the apostles. And we have at this day the still greater satisfaction to perceive that, according to the predictions contained in the books of Scripture, Christianity has begun to recover itself from this corrupted state, and that the reformation advances apace. And though some of the most shocking abuses still continue in many places, their virulence is very generally abated; and the number is greatly increased of those who are most zealous in the profession of Christianity, whose lives are the greatest ornament to it, and who hold it in so much purity, that, if it was fairly exhibited, and universally understood, it could hardly fail to recommend itself to the acceptance of the whole world of Jews and Gentiles.

The clear and full exhibition of truly reformed Christianity seems now to be almost the only thing that is wanting to the universal prevalence of it. But so long as all the Christianity that is known to Heathens, Mahometans, and Jews, is of a corrupted and debased kind; and particularly while the profession of it is so much connected with worldly interest, it is no wonder that mankind in general refuse to admit it, and that they can even hardly be prevailed upon to give any attention to the evidence that is alleged in its favour. Whereas, when the system itself shall appear to be less liable to objection, it is to be hoped, that they may be brought to give proper attention to it, and to the evidence on which it rests.

Disagreeable as must be the view of these corruptions of Christianity to those who love and value it, it may not be without its use, even with respect to themselves. For the more their abhorrence and indignation are excited by the consideration of what has so long passed for Christianity, the more highly will they esteem what is truly so, the contrast will be so striking, and so greatly Both these valuable in its favour. ends, I hope, will be, in some measure, answered by this attempt to exhibit, what appear to me to have been the great deviations from the genuine system and spirit of Christianity, and the causes that produced them.

The following work has been so long promised to the public, that I cannot help being apprehensive lest my friends, and others, should not find their expectations from it fully answered. But they should recollect, that it was originally promised on a much smaller scale, viz. as the concluding part of my Institutes of Natural and Revealed Religion, which were drawn up for the use of young persons only.

I have since seen reason to extend my views, and to make this a separate work, larger than the whole of the Institutes; and perhaps I may not have succeeded sufficiently well in the uniform extension of the whole design. If, therefore, in any respect, either the composition, or the citation of authorities, should appear to be more adapted to my first design, I hope the candid reader will make proper allowance considered, I flatter myself it will be thought that I have given reasonable satisfaction with respect to it; having shown that everything which I deem to be a corruption of Christianity has been a departure from the original scheme, or an innovation. It will also be seen, that I have generally been able to trace every such corruption to its proper source, and to show what cirespecially of other prevailing opinions and prejudices, made the alteration, in doctrine or practice, sufficiently natural, and the introduction and establishment of it easy. And if I have succeeded in this investigation, this historical method will be found to be one of the most satisfactory modes of argumentation, in order to prove that what I object to is really a corruption of the original scheme. For after the doctrine, that has been long established in Christian churches, it will still be asked, how, if it be no part of the scheme, it ever came to be thought so, and to be so generally acquiesced in; and in many cases the mind will not be perfectly satisfied till such questions be answered.

Besides this, I have generally given a short account of the recovery of the genuine doctrines of Christianity in the last age, though this was not my professed object; and a full history of the reformation, in all its articles, might be the subject of another large and very instructive work, though I apprehend not quite so useful as I flatter myself this will be.

I have not, however, taken notice of every departure from the original standard of Christian faith or practice, but only, or at least chiefly, such as subsists at this day, in some considerable part of the Christian world; or such as, though they may not properly subsist themselves, have left considerable vestiges in some Christian churches. have not omitted, at the same time, to If my proper and ultimate object be recite, as far as I was able, both the several steps by which each corruption has advanced, and also whatever has been urged with the greatest plausibility in favour of it; though I have made a point of being as succinct as possible in the detail of arguments, for or against any particular article of faith or practice.

In one article, however, I have considerably extended the argumentative cumstances in the state of things, and part, viz. in my account of the doctrine of atonement. To this subject I had given particular attention many years ago; and Dr. Lardner and Dr. Fleming having seen what I then wrote, prevailed upon me to allow them to publish what they thought proper of it. This they did, under the title of The Scripture Doctrine of Remission, in the year 1761. When I published the Theological Repository, I corrected and genuine Christianity, and no part of enlarged that tract, and intended to write a still larger treatise on the subclearest refutation of any particular ject, with the history of the doctrine annexed to it. I shall now, however, drop that design, contenting myself with giving the substance of the arguments in this work.

In the Conclusion of this work, I have taken the liberty, which I hope will not be thought improper, to endeavour to call the attention of unbelievers to the subject of the corruptions of Christianity (being sensible that this is one of the principal causes of infidelity), and also that of those who have influence with respect to the present establishments of Christianity, the reformation of many of the abuses I have described being very much in their power.

There is nothing, I hope, in the manner of these addresses that will been of my own. I can truly say that and to its producing its proper effects cient authority.

on the hearts and lives of men; and,

To have com coming, what it is destined to be, the greatest blessing to all the nations of the world.

As this work was originally intended to be nothing more than a Fourth Part of my Institutes, as mentioned above, of others, if we can never confide in I had contented myself with taking authorities from respectable modern some trouble by their means? writers, such as Dr. Clarke, Lardner, It will also be proper to observe, Jortin, Basnage, Beausobre, Le Clerc, that I have sometimes made use of my extended, and I was led to imagine my have recourse to the original authoricountry.

of pains to read, or at least look careoccur for my purpose. Still, however, merely to avoid a repetition of so small some things remain as I first wrote a magnitude, especially considering them, and sometimes from not having that the several publications may fall been able to purchase or conveniently into different hands. procure the original writers.

readers a high idea of the extent of my the history of opinions relating to it, reading, but simply a credible account in the Disquisitions, I have omitted it of such facts as I shall lay before them; altogether in this work, though it would and I doubt not they will be as well have been a very proper part of it. I satisfied of the fidelity of such writers have only taken from that work a few give offence, as none was intended. I I have omitted nothing, the authority trust, that from a sense of its infinite for which I think to be at all suspicious; importance, I am deeply concerned for and it will be seen that I have genethe honour of the religion I profess. I rally made use of such as, from the would, therefore, willingly do anything nature of the subject, are the least that may be in my power (and I hope liable to exception. Where no writer is with a temper not unbecoming the quoted, I suppose the fact to be well gospel) to make it both properly under- known to all who are conversant in stood, and also completely reformed, in these inquiries, and for which the comorder to its more general propagation, mon ecclesiastical historians are suffi-

To have compiled such a work as consequently, to its more speedily be- this from original authorities only, without making use of any modern writers, would have been more than any one man could have executed in the course of a long life. And what advantage do we derive from the labours them, and occasionally save ourselves

Grotius, Du Pin, Fleury, Mosheim, Le own former publications, especially Sueur, Giannone, &c. As my views those in the Theological Repository, which, indeed, were originally intended work might be of some use to a higher for farther use. Thus I have partly class of readers, I found it necessary to copied, and partly abridged, what I had there written on the subject of ties in everything of consequence, espe- Atonement, as mentioned before, and cially for such articles as might be also on that of Baptism. Some things, liable to be controverted in this too, will be found in this work copied, or abridged, from other works that Accordingly, I have taken a good deal bear my name, as the Essay on the pains to read, or at least look care- Lord's Supper, on Church Discipline, fully through, many of the most capital and the Disquisitions relating to Matworks of the ancient Christian writers, ter and Spirit. But the whole of such in order to form a just idea of their extracts will not much exceed a single general principles and turn of thinking, sheet; and I did not think it right to and to collect such passages as might leave any of the pieces imperfect,

Since, however, I have written so But my object is not to give my largely on the subject of the soul, and as I have quoted, as they would have particulars relating to the state of the

which this work would have been avail myself of the intimation, in case strikingly defective.

The whole of what I have called the Sequel to the Disquisitions (or The History of the Philosophical Doctrine concerning the Origin of the Soul, and the Nature of Matter, with its influence on Christianity, especially with respect to the doctrine of the Pre-existence of Christ, Vol. III. pp. 384-446) I wish to have considered as coming properly within the plan of this work, and essential to the principal object of Indeed, when I published the Disquisitions, I hesitated whether I should publish that part then, or reserve it for this History. But the rest of this work was not then ready, and it was of Christian doctrine, and then those of too much use for the purpose of the that relate to discipline and the governother not to go along with it. the general arguments against the preexistence of Christ, contained in Sect. VI. of that Sequel (pp. 421-439) to be particularly attended to.

In a subject so copious as this, I am far from supposing it probable that I have made no mistakes, notwithstanding I have used all the care and precaution that I could. If any such be pointed out to me, whether it be by dead, and a few other articles, without friend or an enemy, I shall be glad to there should be a demand for a second edition. As some of my materials bear an equal relation to several of the subjects into which the work is divided, the reader will find a repetition of some things, but they are so few, and so useful in their respective places, that it hardly requires an apology. As to the repetition in the Appendix, the importance of the subject must apologize for it.

Though I have made no formal division of this work, except into separate Parts and Sections, the reader will perceive that I have, in the first place, considered the most important articles ment of the church.

At the end of the Reply, which will follow this Hatory, is a page containing a few corrections, &c. of which I have availed myself for this edition. The author says, "Having given the best attention that I can to the several remarks which have been made on this work, I have not yet seen any reason to make more than the following corrections and additions. It will be easily perceived that they are rather favour-able than unfavourable to my principal object. Had I been convinced of any other oversight, I should with the same readiness have made the necessary alterations.' [Rutt.]

Dedication by Dr. Priestley.

TO THE REVEREND THEOPHILUS LINDSEY, A.M.

DEAR FRIEND,

Wishing, as I do, that my name may ever be connected as closely with yours after death, as we have been connected by friendship in life, it is with peculiar satisfaction that I dedicate this work (which I am willing to hope will be one of the most useful of my publications) to you.

To your example, of a pure love of truth, and of the most fearless integrity in asserting it, evidenced by the sacrifices you have made to it, I owe much of my own wishes to imbile the same spirit; though a more favourable education and situation in life, by not giving me an opportunity of distinguishing myself as you have done, has, likewise, not exposed me to the temptation of acting otherwise; and for this I wish to be truly thankful. since so very few of those who profess the same sentiments with you, have had the courage to act consistently with them, no person, whatever he may imagine he might have been

1 This excellent man died Nov. 3, 1808, in the 86th year of his age, having exemplified, both in active and declining life, the benign and cheering influence of Christian truth, while he laboured with the purest zeal to expose the corruptions by which it has been obscured. Dr. Priestley's first interview with Mr. Lindsey was in 1769, "at the house of Archdeacon Blackburne, at Richmond, where," says Mr. Belsham, "they passed some days together in that unreserved and delightful interchange of sentiments, and in those free and anicable discussions which would naturally take place among persons of high intellectual attainments, in whose estimation the discoveries of divine revelation held the most honourable place, and who were all equally animated with the same generous zeal for civil and religious liberty." Mem. of Lindsey, p. 34. See also Dr. Priestley's own Memoirs.

equal to, can have a right to presume that he would have been one of so small a number.

No person can see in a stronger light than you do the mischievous consequences of the corruptions of that religion, which you justly prize, as the most valuable of the gifts of God to man; and, therefore, I flatter myself, it will give you some pleasure to accompany me in my researches into the origin and progress of them, as this will tend to give all the friends of pure Christianity the fullest satisfaction that they reflect no discredit on the revelation itself; since it will be seen that they all came in from a foreign and hostile quarter. It will likewise afford a pleasing presage, that our religion will, in due time, purge itself of everything that debases it, and that for the present prevents its reception by those who are ignorant of its nature, whether living in Christian countries. or among Mahometans and Heathens.

The gross darkness of that night which has for many centuries obscured our holy religion, we may clearly see, is past; the morning is opening upon us; and we cannot doubt but that the light will increase, and extend itself more and more unto the perfect day. Happy are they who contribute to diffuse the pure light of this everlasting gospel. The time is coming when the detection of one error or prejudice, relating to this most important subject, and the success we have in opening and enlarging the minds of men with respect to it, will be far more honourable than any discovery we can make success in propagating them.

In looking back upon the dismal scene which the shocking corruptions of Christianity exhibit, we may well exclaim with the prophet, How is the gold become dim! how is the most fine gold changed! But the thorough examination of everything relating to Christianity, which has been produced by the corrupt state of it, and which nothing else would probably have led to has been as the refiner's fire with respect to it; and when it shall have stood this test, it may be presumed that the truth and excellency of it will never more be called in question.

This corrupt state of Christianity has, no doubt, been permitted by the Supreme Governor of the world for the best of purposes, and it is the same great Being who is also now, in the course of his providence, employing these means to purge his floor. civil powers of this world, which were formerly the chief supports of the anti-christian systems, who had given "their power and strength unto the beast." Rev. xvii. 13, now begin to hate her, and are ready to "make her desolate and naked," ver. 16. To answer their own political purposes, they are now promoting various reformations in the church; and it can hardly be doubted, but that the difficulties in which many of the European nations are now involving themselves, will make other measures of reformation highly expedient and necessary.

Also, while the attention of men in power is engrossed by the difficulties that more immediately press upon them, the endeavours of the friends of reformation in points of doctrine pass with less notice, and operate without obstruction. Let us rejoice in the good that results from this evil, and omit in other branches of knowledge, or our no opportunity that is furnished us. voluntarily to co-operate with the gracious intention of Divine Providence; and let us make that our primary object, which others are doing to promote their own sinister ends. All those who labour in the discovery and communication of truth, if they be actuated by a pure love of it, and a sense of its importance to the happiness of mankind, may consider themselves as workers together with God, and may proceed with confidence, assured that their labour in this cause shall not be in vain, whether they themselves see the fruit of it or not.

> The more opposition we meet with in these labours, the more honourable it will be to us, provided we meet that opposition with the true spirit of Christianity. And to assist us in this, we should frequently reflect that many of our opponents are probably men who wish as well to the gospel as we do ourselves, and really think they do God service by opposing us. Even prejudice and bigotry, arising from such a principle, are respectable things, and entitled to the greatest candour. If our religion teaches us to love our enemies, certainly we should love, and, from a principle of love, should endeavour to convince those who, if they were only better informed, would embrace us as

> The time will come when the cloud, which for the present prevents our distinguishing our friends and our foes, will be dispersed, even that day in which the secrets of all hearts will be dis-closed to the view of all. In the meantime, let us think as favourably as possible of all men, our particular opponents not excepted; and therefore be careful to conduct all hostility, with the pleasing prospect that one day it will give place to the most perfect amity.

> You, my friend, peculiarly happy in a most placid, as well as a most determined mind, have nothing to blame yourself for in this respect. If, on any occasion, I have indulged too much asperity, I hope I shall, by your example, learn to correct myself, and without Saviour himself not wholly excepted:

&lt;sup>1</sup> Joseph, Emperor of Gormany, had suppressed the religious orders, in his dominions, and otherwise controlled the power of the church. Pope Pius VI. paid a visit to Vienua, in March 1782, from "a desire to put some stop to the heretical innovations of the Emperor." See N. Ann. Reg. III. pp. 64-66.

spirit of love will find abundant exerthe most friendly and benevolent nabe its own reward.

Let these views brighten the evening of our lives, that evening, which will be enjoyed with more satisfaction, in proportion as the day shall have been laboriously and well spent. Let us, then, without reluctance, submit to that temporary rest in the grave, which our wise Creator has thought proper to appoint for all the human race, our abating my zeal in the common cause. anticipating with joy the glorious morn-As we are now both of us past the ing of the resurrection, when we shall meridian of life, I hope we shall be look- meet that Saviour, whose precepts we ing more and more beyond it, and be have obeyed, whose spirit we have preparing for that world, where we breathed, whose religion we have deshall have no errors to combat, and, fended, whose cup also we may, in some consequently, where a talent for dispu- measure, have drank of, and whose tation will be of no use; but where the honours we have asserted, without making them to interfere with those of cise; where all our labours will be of his Father and our Father, of his God and our God, that supreme, that great ture, and where our employment will and awful Being, to whose will he was always most perfectly submissive, and for whose unrivalled prerogative he always showed the most ardent zeal.

> With the truest affection, I am, dear friend. Your brother. In the faith and hope of the gospel, J. PRIESTLEY.

Birmingham, Nov. 1782.

HISTORY

OF THE

CORRUPTIONS CHRISTIANITY. OF

PART L

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO JESUS CHRIST.

THE INTRODUCTION.

THE unity of God is a doctrine on which the greatest stress is laid in the whole system of revelation. To guard this most important article was the principal object of the Jewish religion; and, notwithstanding the proneness of the Jews to idolatry, at length it fully answered its purpose in reclaiming them. and in impressing the minds of many persons of other nations in favour of the same fundamental truth.

The Jews were taught by their prophets to expect a Messiah, who was to be descended from the tribe of Judah, and the family of David,—a person in whom themselves and all the nations of the earth should be blessed; but none of their prophets gave them an idea of any other than a man like themselves in that illustrious character, and no other did they ever expect, or do they expect to this day.

Jesus Christ, whose history answers by the prophets, made no other preten-all those who conversed with our Lord before and after his resurrection, considered him in no other light than simply as "a man approved of God, by wonders and signs which God did by him." Acts ii. 22.

Not only do we find no trace of so prodigious a change in the ideas which the apostles entertained concerning Christ, as from that of a man like themselves. (which it must be acknowledged were the first that they entertained,) to that of the most high God, or one who was in any sense their maker or preserver, that when their minds were most fully enlightened, after the descent of the-Holy Spirit, and to the latest period of their ministry, they continued to speak of him in the same style; even when it is evident they must have intended to speak of him in a manner suited to his state of greatest exaltation and glory. Peter uses the simple language above quoted, of a man approved of God, imto the description given of the Messiah mediately after the descent of the Spirit: and the apostle Paul, giving what may sions; referring all his extraordinary be called the Christian creed, says, 1 power to God, his Father, who, he ex- Tim. ii. 5, "There is one God, and one pressly says, spake and acted by him, mediator between God and men, the and who raised him from the dead: and man Christ Jesus." He does not say it is most evident that the apostles, and the God, the God-man, or the superangelic being, but simply the man Christ Jesus; and nothing can be alleged from the New Testament in favour of any higher nature of Christ, except a few passages interpreted without any regard and opinions of the times in which the books were written, and in such a manner, in other respects, as would authorize our proving any doctrine whatever from them.

From this plain doctrine of the Scriptures, a doctrine so consonant to reason and the ancient prophecies, Christians have at length come to believe what they do not pretend to have any conception of, and than which it is not possible to frame a more express contradiction. For, while they consider Christ as the supreme, eternal God, the maker of heaven and earth, and of all things visible and invisible, they moreover acknowledge the Father and the Holy Spirit to be equally God in the same exalted sense, all three equal in power and glory, and yet all three constituting no more than one God.

To a person the least interested in the inquiry, it must appear an object of curiosity to trace by what means, and by what steps, so great a change has taken place, and what circumstances in the history of other opinions, and of the world, proved favourable to the successive changes. An opinion, and especially an opinion adopted by great numbers of mankind, is to be considered as any other fact in history, for it cannot be produced without an adequate cause, and is therefore a proper object of philosophical inquiry. In this case I think it not difficult to find causes abundantly adequate to the purpose, and it is happily in our power to trace almost every step by which the changes have been successively brought about.

If the interest that mankind have generally taken in anything, will at all contribute to interest us in the inquiry concerning it, this history cannot fail to be highly interesting, For, perhaps, in no business whatever have the minds of men been more agitated, and, speculative as the nature of the thing is, in few cases has the peace of society been so much disturbed. To this very day, of such importance is the subject considered by thousands and tens of to the context, or the modes of speech thousands, that they cannot write or speak of it without the greatest zeal, and without treating their opponents with the greatest rancour. If good sense and humanity did not interpose to mitigate the rigour of law, thousands would be sacrificed to the cause of orthodoxy in this single article; and the greatest number of sufferers would probably be in this very country, on account of the greater freedom of inquiry which prevails here, in consequence of which we entertain and profess the greatest diversity of opinions.

The various steps in this interesting history it is now my business to point out, and I wish that all my readers may attend me with as much coolness and impartiality as I trust I shall myself preserve through the whole of this investigation.1

I The following anecdote respecting the History, will show that the spirit of the Synod of Dort, had survived two centuries. "This book was burnt by the hands of the common hangman in the city of Dort, province of Holland, anno 1785:—a piece of intelligence communicated by me to Dr. Priestley in the hotel where I lodged in Bientinchen, in a conversation I had the presence me to Dr. Priestley in the hotel where I lodged in Birmingham, in a conversation I had the pleasure of having with that extraordinary man, a few weeks after that event. Having asked me with much earnestness, how he would be received in Holland, were he to appear there, I told him I did not exactly know how they might treat the original, but that he himself might be able to determine that point when I had told him that he had been burnt in effigy at Dort, a few weeks before I left Holland—a person's writings being often viewed as a picture of his mind, the burning of his Corruptions might be easily considered as of his Corruptions might be easily considered as burning hinself in efley. He deplored our ignorance and blindness. A greater philanthropist I never met with." Note by the Rev. Thomas Peirson, D.D. senior minister of the established Peirson, D.D. senior minister of the established English church in the city of Amsterdam. Bibliotheca Peirsoniana, p. 211.

This was not the first attempt to confuce author's opinions by the argument of forc. "In 1782, previous to the sale by auction of the Abbé Needham's library at Bruxelles, the licensors, as usual, went to burn the prohibited books. They destroyed 'Cudworth's Intellectual System,' Priestley's Hartley, a New Testament, and many others; but 'Christianity as old as the Creation,' escaped the flames." Mon. Mag. xxxiv. p. 621.

SECTION L

OF THE OPINION OF THE ANCIENT JEWISH AND GENTILE CHURCHES.

THAT the ancient Jewish church must have held the opinion that Christ was simply a man, and not either God Almighty, or a super-angelic being, may be concluded from its being the clear doctrine of the Scripture, and from the apostles having taught no other; but there is sufficient evidence of the same unfortunate, indeed, that there are now tinuation of the Acts of the Apostles, in any sense of the word. and who travelled to Rome about the year 160; but it is not difficult to collect evidence enough in support of my assertion.

east of the sea of Galilee. They were their bigoted adherence to the law of and which he himself had been taught? Moses, to the rite of circumcision, and That Eusebius doth not expressly other ceremonies of their ancient religion. And on all these accounts they probably got the name of Ebionites, formers from Popery got the name of similar nature. The fate of these ancient Jewish Christians was, indeed, peculiarly hard. For, besides the neglect of the centile Christians they better the centile Christians they lect of the gentile Christians, they were, as Epiphanius informs us, held in the greatest abhorrence by the Jews from whom they had separated, and who cursed them in a solemn manner three times, whenever they met for public worship.1

In general these ancient Jewish Christians retained the appellation of Nazarenes, and it may be inferred from Origen, Epiphanius and Eusebius, that the Nazarenes and Ebionites were the same people, and held the same tenets. though some of them supposed that thing from ecclesiastical history. It is Christ was the son of Joseph as well as of Mary, while others of them held extant so few remains of any of the that he had no natural father, but had writers who immediately succeeded the a miraculous birth.2 Epiphanius, in apostles, and especially that we have his account of the Nazarenes, (and the only a few inconsiderable fragments of Jewish Christians never went by any Hegesippus, a Jewish Christian, who other name,) makes no mention of any wrote the history of the church in con- of them believing the divinity of Christ,

It is particularly remarkable that Hegesippus, in giving an account of the heresies of his time, though he mentions the Carpocratians, Valentin-The members of the Jewish church ians, and others who were generally were, in general, in very low circum- termed Gnostics, (and who held that stances, which may account for their Christ had a pre-existence, and was having few persons of learning among man only in appearance,) not only them; on which account they were makes no mention of this supposed much despised by the richer and more heresy of the Nazarenes or Ebionites, learned gentile Christians, especially but says that, in his travels to Rome, after the destruction of Jerusalem, be- where he spent some time with Anicefore which event all the Christians in tus, and visited the bishops of other Judea, (warned by our Saviour's pro- sees, he found that they all held the phecies concerning the desolation of same doctrine that was taught in the that country,) had retired to the north- law, by the prophets, and by our Lord.3 What could this be but the proper likewise despised by the Gentiles for Unitarian doctrine held by the Jews, say what this faith was, is no wonder, considering his prejudice against the Unitarians of his own time. He speaks which signifies poor and mean, in the of the Ebionites, as persons whom a same manner as many of the early remailignant demon had brought into his power;4 and though he speaks of them Beghards, and other appellations of a as holding that Jesus was the son of

<sup>182. (</sup>P.) Ibid. L. iii. C. xxvii, p. 121. (P.)

Joseph as well as of Mary, he speaks with no less virulence of the opinion of those of his time, who believed the miraculous conception, calling their heresy madness. Valesius, the translator of Eusebius, was of opinion that the history of Hegesippus was neglected and lost by the ancients, on account of the errors it contained, and these errors could be no other than the Unitarian doctrine. It is possible also, that it might be less esteemed on account of the very plain, unadorned style in which all the ancients say it was written.

Almost all the ancient writers who speak of what they call the heresies of the two first centuries, say, that they were of two kinds; the first were those that thought that Christ "was man in appearance only," and the other that he was "no more than a man." Tertullian calls the former Docetæ, and the latter Ebionites. Austin, speaking of the same two sects, says, that the former believed Christ to be God. but denied that he was man, whereas the latter believed him to be man, but denied that he was God. Of this latter opinion Austin owns that he himself was, till he became acquainted with the writings of Plato, which in his time were translated into Latin, and in which he learned the doctrine of the Logos.

Now that this second heresy, as the later writers called it, was really no heresy at all, but the plain simple truth of the gospel, may be clearly inferred from the apostle John taking no notice at all of it, though he censures the former, who believed Christ to be man only in appearance, in the severest manner. And that this was the only heresy that gave him any alarm, is evident from his first epistle, chap. iv. ver. 2, 3, where he says that "every spirit that confesseth that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh (by which he must have meant is truly a man), is of God." On the other hand, he says, "every spirit that confesseth not that Jesus Christ is come in the flesh is not of God, and this is that spirit of Antichrist, whereof you have heard that it should come, and even now already is it in the world." For this was the first corruption of the Christian religion by the maxims of Heathen philosophy, and which proceeded afterwards, till Christianity was brought to a state little better than Paganism.

That Christian writers afterwards should imagine that this apostlealluded to the Unitarian heresy, or that of the Ebionites, in the introduction to his gospel, is not to be wondered at; as nothing is more common than for men to interpret the writings of others according to their own previous ideas and conceptions of things. On the contrary, it seems very evident that, in that introduction, the apostle alludes to the very same system of opinions, which he had censured in his epistle, the fundamental principle of which was that, not the Supreme Being himself, but an emanation from him, to which they gave the name of Logos, and which they supposed to be the Christ, inhabited the body of Jesus, and was the maker of all things; whereas he there affirms, that the Logos by which all things were made, was not a being distinct from God, but God himself, that is, an attribute of God, or the divine power and wisdom. We shall see that the Unitarians of the third century, charged the orthodox with introducing a new and strange interpretation of the word logos.2

That very system, indeed, which made Christ to have been the eternal reason. or Logos of the Father, did not, probably, exist in the time of the apostle John, but was introduced from the principles of Platonism afterwards. But the Valentinians, who were only a branch of the Gnostics, made great use of the same term, not only denominating by it one of the mons in the system described by Irenæus, but also Antichrist, who held that Christ was one of them that was endowed by all the other zons with some extraordinary gift, to which person they gave the name of Jesus, Saviour, Christ and Logos.1

1

&lt;sup>1</sup> Lardner's Hist. of Heretics, p. 17. (P.) Works, IX. pp. 234, 235.

&lt;sup>2</sup> See Beausobre "Histoire Critique de Mani-chée et du Manichéisme," I. p. 540. (P.) "Les Noctiens reprochoient aux Orthodoxes, d'intro-duire un langage étrange et nouveau, en appel-lant le Verbe, Fils de Dieu." L. iii. Ch. vi.

used by them as synonymous to con, God, his Maker as well as his Redeemcertain, that the apostle John had frequently heard this term made use of, in some erroneous representations of the system of Christianity that were current in his time, and therefore he might choose to introduce the same term in its proper sense, as an attribute of the Deity, or God himself, and not a distinct being that sprung from him. And this writer is not to be blamed if, afterwards, that very attribute was personified in a different manner, and not as a figure of speech, and consequently his language was made to convey a very different meaning from that which he affixed to it.

Athanasius himself was so far from denying that the primitive Jewish church was properly Unitarian, maintaining the simple humanity and not the divinity of Christ, that he endeavours to account for it by saying, that "all the Jews were so firmly persuaded that their Messiah was to be nothing more than a man like themselves, that the apostles were obliged to use great caution in divulging the doctrine of the proper divinity of Christ."3 But what the apostles did not teach, I think we should be cautious how we believe. The apostles were never backward to combat other Jewish prejudices, and certainly would have opposed this opinion of theirs, if it had been an error. For if it had been an error at all, it must be allowed to have been an error of the greatest consequence.

Could it rouse the indignation of the apostle John so much as to call those not come in the flesh, or was not truly man; and would he have passed uncensured those who denied the divinity of his Lord and Master, if he himself The word logos was also frequently had thought him to be true and very ingeneral, oranintelligence that sprung, er? We may therefore safely conclude mediately or immediately, from the that an opinion allowed to have predivine essence.2 It is, therefore, almost vailed in his time, and maintained by all the Jewish Christians afterwards, was what he himself and the other apostles had taught them, and therefore that it is the very truth; and consequently that the doctrine of the divinity of Christ, or of his being any more than a man, is an innovation, in whatever manner it may have been introduced.

<sup>3</sup> De Sententia Dionysii, Athanasii Opera. 1630. I. pp. 553-4. (P.)

> Had the apostles explained themselves distinctly and fully, as its importance, if it had been true, required, on the subject of the proper divinity of Christ, as a person equal to the Father. it can never be imagined that the whole Jewish church, or any considerable part of it, should so very soon have adopted the opinion of his being a mere man.4 To add to the dignity of their Master, was natural, but to take from it, and especially to degrade him from being God, to being man, must have been very unnatural. To make the Jews abandon the opinion of the divinity of Christ in the most qualified sense of the word, must at least have been as difficult as we find it to be to induce others to give up the same opinion at this day; and there can be no question of their having, for some time, believed what the apostles taught on that, as well as on other subjects.

> Of the same opinion with the Nazarenes, or Ebionites among the Jews, were those among the Gentiles whom Epiphanius called Alogi, from their not receiving, as he says, the account that John gives of the Logos, and the writings of that apostle in general. But Lardner, with great probability, heresy "1 as that of the Alogi, or rather that name, were unjustly charged by him with rejecting the writings of the apostle John, since no other person before him makes any mention of such a thing, and he produces nothing but mere hearsay in support of it. It is very possible, however, that he might give such an account of them, in consequence of their explaining the Logos in the introduction of John's gospel in a manner different from him and others, who in that age had appropriated to themselves the name of orthodox.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Irenæi Opera, 1702. L. i. Sect. iv. p. 14. (P.) <sup>2</sup> Beausobre, I. p. 571. (P.) L. iii. Ch. ix. Sect. iii.

<sup>[4</sup> By "mere man," Priestley always means a man approved of God, inspired and miraculously endowed by God, yet nothing more than man.]

Equally absurd is the conjecture of Epiphanius, that those persons and others like them, were those that the apostle John meant by Antichrist.2 It is a much more natural inference that, since this writer allows these Unitarians to have been contemporary with the apostles, and that they had no peculiar appellation till he himself gave them this of Alogi (and which he is very desirous that other writers would adopt after him 3), that they had not been deemed heretical in early times, but held the opinion of the ancient Gentile church, as the Nazarenes did that of the Jewish church; and that, notwithstanding the introduction, and gradual prevalence of the opposite doctrine, they were suffered to pass uncensured and consequently without a name, till the smallness of their numbers made them particularly noticed.

It is remarkable, however, that those who held the simple doctrine of the humanity of Christ, without asserting that Joseph was his natural father, were not reckoned heretics by Irenæus, who wrote a large work on the subject of heresies; and even those who held that opinion are mentioned with respect supposes, "there never was any such by Justin Martyr, who wrote some years before him, and who, indeed, is that those to whom Epiphanius gave the first writer extant, of the gentile Christians, after the age of the apostles. And it cannot be supposed that he would have treated them with so much respect, if their doctrine had not been very generally received, and on that account less obnoxious than it grew to be afterwards. He expresses their opinion concerning Christ, by saying that they made him to be a mere man, (ψιλος ανθρωπος,) and by this term Irenæus, and all the ancients, even later than Eusebius, meant a man descended from man, and this phraseology is frequently opposed to the doctrine of the miraculous conception of Jesus, and not to that of his divinity. It is not therefore to be inferred that because some of the ancient writers condemn the one, they meant to pass any censure upon the other.

Ilær. 51, Sect. iii. Opera, I. p. 424. (P.)
 Ibid. p. 423. (P.)

The manner in which Justin Martyr speaks of those Unitarians who believed Christ to be the son of Joseph, is very remarkable, and shows that though they even denied the miraculous conception, they were far from being reckoned heretics in his time, as they were by Irenæus afterwards. He says, "there are some of our profession who acknowledge him" (Jesus) "to be the Christ, yet maintain that he was a man born of man. I do not agree with them, nor should I be prevailed upon by ever so many who hold that opinion; because we are taught by Christ himself not to receive our doctrine from men, but from what was taught by the holy prophets and by himself."4

This language has all the appearance of an apology for an opinion contrary to the general and prevailing one, as that of the humanity of Christ (at least with the belief of the miraculous conception) probably was in his time. This writer even speaks of his own opinion of the pre-existence of Christ, (and he is the first that we certainly appears to be a man born of men, and being poetical compositions, divinity This is not the language of a man very figurative and qualified sense; though the sanction of the majority along might have found a refutation of his with him.

&quot;Hist, of Heretics, p. 446. (P.) Works, IX. p. 516. Lardner's words are ". . . My own opinion . . . . is that this is a fictitious keresy, and that there never vere any Christians who rejected St. John's Gospel and First Epistle, and yet received . . the other books of the New Testament."

Dial. Edit. Thirlby, pp. 284-5. (P.)

supposed to be held, is also remarkable, showing in what light the Jews will they existed before him. always consider any doctrine which makes Christ to be more than a man. been the earliest gentile Christians, and He says, "They who think that Jesus Dr. Berriman supposes them to have was a man, and, being chosen of God, been a branch of the Ebionites.6 In was anointed Christ, appear to me to fact, they must have been the same advance a more probable opinion than among the Gentiles, that the Ebionites yours. For all of us expect that Christ were among the Jews. And it is reeξ ανθρωπων,) and that Elias will come retained the worship of the one true God to anoint him. If he therefore be Christ, all the time of Joshua, and of those of he must by all means be a man born of his contemporaries who outlived him; man."2

Eusebius, that the Unitarians in the of God, and the proper humanity of be the oldest Christians, that the apostles themselves had taught their doccorrupted;3 and as these Unitarians generally reprobated and deemed hereare called Idiote (common and ignorant tical. The manner in which this corpeople) by Tertullian, it is more natural ruption of the ancient doctrine was inthem, than among the learned who are plain. more apt to innovate. With such manifest unfairness does Eusebius, or a know to have maintained it, on the prin- more ancient writer, whose sentiments ciples on which it was generally received he adopts, treat the Unitarians, as to afterwards,) as a doubtful one, and by say that Theodotus, who appeared no means a necessary article of Chris- about the year 190, and who was contian faith. "Jesus," says he, "may demned by Victor the predecessor of still be the Christ of God, though I Zephyrinus, was the first who held should not be able to prove his pre- that our Saviour was a mere man; 4 existence, as the Son of God who made when in refuting their pretensions to all things. For though I should not antiquity, he goes no farther than to prove that he had pre-existed, it will Irenæus, Justin Martyr and Clemens; be right to say that, in this respect in whose second and spurious epistle only, I have been deceived, and not to only it is to be found, and the ancient deny that he is the Christ, if he hymns, not now extant, but in which, to have become Christ by election." was probably ascribed to him, in some confident of his opinion, and who had Eusebius in his own writings alone assertion. Epiphanius, speaking of the The reply of Trypho the Jew, with same Theodotus, says, that his heresy whom the dialogue he is writing is was a branch (αποσπασμα) of that of the Alogi, which sufficiently implies that

The Alogi, therefore, appear to have will be born a man from men,  $(a\nu\theta\rho\omega\pi\sigma\sigma)$  markable that, as the children of Israel so the generality of Christians retained It is well known, and mentioned by the same faith, believing the strict unity primitive church, always pretended to Christ, all the time of the apostles and of those who conversed with them, but began to depart from that doctrine pretrine, and that it generally prevailed sently afterwards; and the defection till the time of Zephyrinus, bishop of advanced so fast, that in about one cen-Rome, but that from that time it was tury more, the original destrine was to look for ancient opinions among troduced, I must now proceed to ex-

<sup>1</sup> Dial. Edit. Thirlby, pp. 233-4. (P.)

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 235, (P.) * Hist. L. v. C. xxviii. p. 252. (P.)

&quot;Hær. 54, Opera, I. p. 462. (P.)
"An Historical Account of the Trinitarian Controversy," 1725, p. 82. (P.)

SECTION II.

OF THE FIRST STEP THAT WAS MADE TOWARDS THE DELFICATION OF CHRIST, BY THE PERSONIFICATION OF THE LOGOS.

As the greatest things often take their rise from the smallest beginnings. so the worst things sometimes proceed from good intentions. This was certainly the case with respect to the origin of Christian Idolatry. All the early heresies arose from men who wished well to the gospel, and who meant to recommend it to the Heathens, and especially to philosophers among them, whose prejudices they found great difficulty in conquering. Now we learn from the writings of the apostles themselves, as well as from the testimony of later writers, that the circumstance at which mankind in general, and especially the more philosophical part of them, stumbled the most, was the doctrine of a crucified Saviour. They could not submit to become the disciples of a man who had been exposed upon a cross, like the vilest malefactor. Of this objection to Christianity we find traces in all the early writers, who wrote in defence of the gospel against the unbelievers of their age, to the time of Lactantius; and probably it may be found much later. He says, "I know that many fly from the truth out of their abhorrence of the cross." We, who only learn from history that crucifixion was a kind of death to which slaves and the vilest of malefactors were exposed, can but very imperfectly enter into their prejudices, so as to feel what they must have done with respect to it. The idea of a man executed at Tyburn, without anything to distinguish him from other malefactors, is but an approach to the case of our Saviour.

The apostle Paul speaks of the crucifixion of Christ as the great obstacle to the reception of the gospel in his time; and yet, with true magnanimity. he does not go about to palliate the matter, but says to the Corinthians (some of the politest people among the Greeks, and fond of their philosophy), that he was determined to know nothing among them but "Jesus Christ and him crucified:" for though this circumstance was "unto the Jews a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness," it was to others "the power of God and the wisdom of God." 1 Cor. i. 23, 24. For this circumstance at which they cavilled, was that in which the wisdom of God was most conspicuous; the death and resurrection of a man, in all respects like themselves, being better calculated to give other men an assurance of their own resurrection, than that of any super-angelic being, the laws of whose nature they might think to be very different from those of their own. But, "since by man came death, so by man came also the resurrection of the dead." 1 Cor. xv. 21.

Lactantii Epitome (Divinarum Institutionum), 1718. C. Ii. p. 143. (P.) "Scio equidem multos, dum abhorrent nomen crucis, refugere a veritate." Opera, 1748, II. p. 38.

Later Christians, however, and especially those who were themselves attached to the principles of either the Oriental or the Greek philosophy, unhappily took another method of removing this obstacle; and instead of explaining the wisdom of the divine dispensations in the appointment of a man, a person in all respects like unto his brethren, for the redemption of men, and of his dying in the most public and indisputable manner, as a foundation for the clearest proof of a real resurrection, and also of a painful and ignominious death, as an example to his followers who might be exposed to the same, &c., &c., they began to raise the dignity of the person of Christ, that it might appear less disgraceful to be ranked amongst his disciples. To make this the easier to them, two things chiefly contributed; the first was the received method of interpreting the Scriptures among the learned Jews, and the second was the philosophical opinions of the heathen world, which had then begun to infect the Jews themselves.

It has been observed that after the translation of the Old Testament into Greek, which was done probably in the time of Ptolemy Philadelphus, King of Egypt, in consequence of which the Jewish religion became better known to the Greeks, and especially to the philosophers of Alexandria, the more learned of the Jews had recourse to an. allegorical method of interpreting what they found to be most objected to in their sacred writings; and by this means pretended to find in the books of Moses, and the prophets, all the great principles of the Greek philosophy, and especially that of Plato, which at that time was most in vogue. In this method of interpreting Scripture, Philo, a learned Jew of Alexandria, far excelled all who had gone before him; but the Christians of that city, who were themselves deeply tinctured with the principles of the same philosophy, especially Clemens Alexandrinus and Origen, who both believed the pre-existence of souls, and the other distinguishing tenets of Platonism, soon followed his steps in the interpretation of both the Old and the New Testament.1

One method of allegorizing, which took its rise in the East, was the personification of things without life, of which we have many beautiful examples in the books of Scripture, as of wisdom by Solomon, of the dead by Ezekiel, and of sin and death by the apostle Paul. Another mode of allegorizing was finding outresemblances in things that bore some relation to each other, and then representing them as types and antitypes to each other. apostle Paul, epecially if he be the author of the Epistle to the Hebrews, has strained very much, by the force of imagination, to reconcile the Jews to the Christian religion, by pointing out the analogies which he imagined the rites and ceremonies of the Jewish religion bore to something in Christianity. Clemens Romanus, but more especially Barnabas, pushed this

1 "Le Platonisme devoilé, ou Essai touchant le verbe Platonicien." 1700, p. 145. (P.) method of allegorizing still farther. But the fathers who followed them, by employing both the methods, and mixing their own philosophy with Christianity, at length converted an innocent allegory into what was little better than Pagen ideleter.

Pagan idolatry.
It had long been the received doctrine of the East, and had gradually spread into the western parts of the world, that besides the supreme divine mind, which had existed without cause from all eternity, there were other intelligences, of a less perfect nature, which had been produced by way of emanation from the great original mind, and that other intelligences, less and less perfect, had, in like manner, proceeded from them: in short, that all spirits, whether demons, or the souls of men, were of this divine origin. It was supposed by some of them that even matter itself, which they considered as the source of all evil, had, in this intermediate manner, derived its existence from the Deity, though others supposed matter to have been eternal and self-existent. For it was a maxim with them all, that "nothing could be created out of nothing." In this manner they thought they could best account for the origin of evil, without supposing it to be the immediate production of a good being, which the original divine mind was always supposed by them to be.

In order to exalt their idea of Jesus Christ, it being then a received opinion among the philosophers that all souls had pre-existed, they conceived his soul not to have been that of a common man (which was generally supposed to have been the production of inferior beings), but a principal emanation from the divine mind itself, and that an intelligence of so high a rank either animated the body of Jesus from the beginning, or entered into him at his baptism. There was, however, a great diversity of opinion on this subject; and, indeed, there was room enough for it, in a system which was not founded on any observation but was the mere creature of fancy. But all these philosophizing Christians had the same general object, which was to make the religion of Christ more reputable, by adding to the dignity of our Lord's person.

Thus, according to Lardner, Cerinthus, one of the first of these philosophizing Christians, "taught one Supreme God, but that the world was not made by him, but by angels;" that Jesus "was a man born of Joseph and Mary, and that at his baptism, the Holy Ghost, or the Christ, descended upon him;" that Jesus "died and rose again, but that the Christ was impassible." 1 On the other hand, Marcion held that Christ was not born at all, but that "the son of God took the exterior form of a man, and appeared as a man; and without being born, or gradually growing up to the full stature of a man, he showed himself at once in Galilee, as a man grown."2 All the heretics, however, of this class, whose philosophy was more properly that of the East, thought it was unworthy of so exalted a person as the proper Christ to be truly a man, and most of them thought he had no real flesh, but only the appearance of it, and what was incapable of feeling pain, &c.

These opinions the apostles, and especially John, had heard of, and he rejected them, as we have seen, with the greatest indignation. However, this did not put a stop to the evil, those philosophizing Christians either having ingenuity enough to evade those censures, by pretending these were not their opinions, but others somewhat different from theirs, that properly fell under from them, (but derived in fact from the same source, and having the same evil remarkable change in these opinions of the Jewish religion.

As Plato had travelled into the East. it is probable that he there learned the doctrine of divine emanations, and got his ideas of the origin of this visible system. But he sometimes expresses himself so temperately on the subject, that he seems to have only allegorized what is true with respect to it; speaking of the divine mind as having existed from eternity, but having within itself ideas or archetypes of whatever was to exist without it, and saying that the immediate seat of these ideas, or the intelligence which he styled Logos, was that from which the visible creation immediately sprung. However, it was to this principle in the divine mind, or this being, derived from it, that Plato. according to Lactantius, gave the name of a second God, saying, "the Lord and maker of the universe, whom we justly call God, made second God, visible and sensible."3

By this means, however, it was, that them, or new opinions really different this Logos, originally an attribute of the divine mind itself, came to be represented, first by the philosophers, and tendency,) rising up in the place of then by philosophizing Christians, as them; for they were all calculated to an intelligent principle or being, disgive more dignity, as they imagined, to tinct from God, though an emanation the person of their master. The most from him. This doctrine was but too convenient for those who wished to recommend the religion of Christ. Ac. between the two extremes.1 We also sufficiently accustomed, they easily be no more than an idiom of speech. found authorities there for their opin-

was that, whereas the earliest of these philosophizing Christians supposed, in general, that the world was made by some superior intelligence of no benevolent nature, and that the Jewish religion was prescribed by the same being, or one very much resembling him, and that Christ was sent to rectify the imperfections of both systems; those who succeeded them, and whose success at length gave them the title of orthodox. corrupted the genuine Christian principle no less, by supposing that Christ was the being who, under God, was himself the maker of the world, and the medium of all the divine communications to man, and therefore the author

&lt;sup>3</sup> Epitome, C. xlii. p. 106. (P.) "Dominus et factor universorum, quem Deum vocari existimavimus, secundum fecit Deum, visibilem et sensibilem." Opera, II. p. 30.

<sup>1</sup> Hist. of Heretics, p. 150. (P.) Works, IX. <sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 227. (P.) Works, IX. pp. 378-9.

Thus, since we read in the book of Psalms, that by the word of the Lord (which, in the translation of the Seventy, is the Logos) the heavens were made, &c. they concluded that this Logos was Christ, and therefore, that, under God. he was the maker of the world. They also applied to him what Solomon says of wisdom, as having been in the beginning with God, and employed by him in making the world, in the book of him. Accordingly we find some of the Proverbs. But there is one particular passage in the book of Psalms in which they imagined that the origin of the tion in their interpretation of the term Logos, by way of emanation from the divine mind, is most clearly expressed, which is what we render, My heart is is the Son." Hippolytus contra Noetum, inditing a good matter, Psalm xlv. 1, quoted by Beausobre.<sup>2</sup> this matter being Logos in the Seventy, We find nothing li and the verb ερευγομενος throwing out. Nothing can appear to us more ungrounded than this supposition, and yet we find it in all the writers who treat of the divinity of Christ for several centuries, in ecclesiastical history. After this we cannot wonder at their being at no loss for proofs of their doctrine in any part of Scripture.

But Philo, the Jew, went before the Christians in the personification of the Logos, and in this mode of interpreting what is said of it in the Old Testament. For he calls this divine word a second God, and sometimes attributes the creation of the world to this second God, thinking it below the majesty of the great God himself. He also calls this personified attribute of God his πρωτογονος, or his first-born, and the image of God. He also says, that he is neither unbegotten, like God, nor begotten, as we are, but the middle cordingly, they immediately fixed upon find that the Chaldee paraphrasts of the this Logos as the intelligence which Old Testament, often render the word either animated the body of Christ, or of God, as if it was a being, distinct which was in some inexplicable manner from God, or some angel who bore the united to his soul; and by the help of name of God, and acted by deputation the allegorical method of interpreting from him. So, however, it has been the Scriptures, to which they had been interpreted, though with them it might

The Christian philosophers having once got the idea that the Logos might be interpreted of Christ, proceeded to explain what John says of the Logos, in the introduction of his gospel, to mean the same person, in direct opposition to what he really meant, which was that the Logos, by which all things were made, was not a being, distinct from God, but God himself, being his attribute, his wisdom and power, dwelling in Christ, speaking and acting by earlier Unitarians charging those who were called orthodox with an innova-Logos. "But thou wilt tell me something strange, in saying that the Logos

We find nothing like divinity ascribed to Christ before Justin Martyr, who, from being a philosopher, became a Christian, but always retained the peculiar habit of his former profession. As to Clemens Romanus, who was contemporary with the apostles, when he is speaking in the highest terms concerning Christ, he only calls him the sceptre of the majesty of God.3 Whether Justin Martyr was the very first who started the notion of the pre-existence of Christ, and of his super-angelic or divine nature, is not certain, but we are not able to trace it any higher. We find it, indeed, briefly mentioned in the Shepherd of Hermas, but though this is supposed by some to be the Hermas mentioned by Paul, and to have written towards the end of the first century, others suppose this to be the work of one Hermes, brother of Pius, Bishop of Rome, and to have been written about the year 141, or perhaps later; and as this work contains such a pretension to visions and revelations, as I cannot but think unworthy of the Hermas mentioned by Paul, I cannot help being of this opinion. He says, "having seen an old rock and a new gate, they represent the son of God, who was more ancient than any creature, so as to be present with the Father at the creation, ad condendam creaturam." The book was written in Greek, but we have only a Latin version of it.

3 Epistle, Sect. xvi. (P.)

<sup>1</sup> See "Le Platonisme devoilé," Ch. x. pp. 98-107; and Le Clerc's Comment on the Introduction to the First Chapter of John. (P.)

<sup>2</sup> Histoire, I. p. 540. (P.) L. iii. Ch. vi. Sect. xt. [Note 2.]

Justin Martyr being a philosopher, and writing an apology for Christianity to a philosophical Roman emperor. would naturally wish to represent it in what would appear to him and other philosophers, the most favourable light; and this disposition appears by several circumstances. Thus he represents virtuous men, in all preceding ages, as being in a certain sense, Christians; and apologizing for calling Christ the son of God, he says, that "this cannot be new to them who speak of Jupiter as having sons, and especially of Mercury, as his interpreter, and the instructor of all men, (λογον τον έρμηνευτικον και παντων διδασκαλον)." 2 On the same subject he says, "If Christ be a mere man, yet he deserves to be called the Son of God, on account of his wisdom, and the Heathens called God (i.e. Jupiter), the father of gods and men; and if, in an extraordinary manner, he be the Logos of God, this is common with those who call Mercury the Logos that declares the will of God, (Noyou τον παρα Θεου αγγελτικον)."3

With this disposition to make his religion appear in the most respectable light to the Heathens, and having himself professed the doctrine of Plato, can it be thought extraordinary, that he eagerly caught at the doctrine of the

1 Hermæ Pastor, L. iii. Sim. ix. Sect. xii. p.
 115. (P.) Wake's Gen. Epist. Ed. 4, p. 320.
 ■ Apol. I. Ed. Thirlby, p. 31. (P.)
 ■ Ibid. p. 33. (P.)

Logos, which he found ready formed to his hands in the works of Philo, and that he introduced it into the Christian system; that Irenæus, who was also educated among the philosophers, about the same time, did the same thing; or that others, who were themselves sufficiently pre-disposed to act the same part, should follow their example?

That the doctrine of the separate divinity of Christ was at first nothing more than a personification of a divine attribute, or of that wisdom and power by which God made the world, is evident from the manner in which the earliest writers who treat of the subject mention it. Justin Martyr, who was the first who undertook to prove that Christ was the medium of the divine dispensations in the Old Testament, as that "he was the person sometimes called an Angel, and sometimes God and Lord, and that he was the man who sometimes appeared to Abraham and Jacob, and he that spake to Moses from the fiery bush," 4 does it, as we have seen above, with a considerable degree of diffidence; saying, that "if he should not be able to prove his pre-existence, it would not therefore follow that he was not the Christ." And as new opinions do not readily lay firm hold on the mind, forms of expression adapted to preceding opinions, will now and then occur; and as good sense will, in all cases, often get the better of imagination, we sometimes find these early writers drop the personification of the Logos, and speak of it as the mere attribute of God.

Thus Theophilus, who was contemporary with Justin, though a later writer, says, that when God said let us make man, he spake to nothing but his own logos, or wisdom; 5 and, according to Origen, Christ was the eternal reason, or wisdom of God. He says, that, "by the second God, we mean only a virtue" (or perhaps power) "which comprehends all other virtues, or a reason which comprehends all other reasons, and that this reason (hoyos) is particularly attached to the soul of Christ." Also, explaining John i. 3, he says, "God can do nothing without reason (παρα λογον), i.e. without himself" (παρ' έαυτον).2

Dial. Edit. Thirlby, p. 264. (P.)
 Ad Autolycum, 1684, L. ii. p. 114. (P.)

Athenagoras, who wrote in the second century, calls Christ the first production (γεννημα) of the Father; but says he was not always actually produced (yevoµevov), for that from the beginning, God, being an eternal mind, had reason (loyos) in himself, being from eternity rational (λογικος).3

Tatian, who was also his contemporary, gives us a fuller account of this matter. He says, "when he (that is, God) pleased, the word (logos) flowed from his simple essence; and this word not being produced in vain, became the first-begotten work of his spirit. This we know to be the origin of the word: but it was produced by division, not by separation, for that which is divided (μερισθεν) does not diminish that from For, as which it derives its power. many torches may be lighted from one, and yet the light of the first torch is not diminished, so the word (logos) proceeding from the power of the Father, does not leave the Father void of logos. Also, if I speak and you hear me, I am not void of speech (logos) on account of my speech (logos) going to you."4

If Irenæus had this idea of the generation of the Logos, as no doubt he had, it is no wonder that he speaks of it as a thing of so wonderful a nature. "If any one," says he, "asks us, how is the Son produced from the Father, we tell him that whether it be called generation, nuncupation, or adapertion, or by whatever other name this ineffable generation be called, no one knows it; neither Valentinus, nor Marcion, nor Saturninus, nor Basilides, nor Angels, nor Archangels, nor Principalities, nor Powers; but only the Father who begat, and the Son who is begotten."8

Tertullian, whose orthodoxy in this respect was never questioned, does not seem, however, to have any difficulty in conceiving how this business was, but writes in such a manner, as if he had been let into the whole secret; and we see in him the wretched expedients to which the orthodox of that age had recourse, in order to convert a mere attribute into a real person. For it must be understood that when the doctrine of the divinity of Christ was first started, it was not pretended, except by Irenæus in the passage above quoted (who was writing against persons who pretended to more knowledge of this mysterious business than himself), that there was anything unintelligible in it, or that could not be explained. Everything, indeed, in that age, was called a mystery that was reputed sacred, and the knowledge of which was confined to a few; but the idea of unintelligible, or inexplicable, was not then affixed to the word mystery. The heathen mysteries, from which the Christians borrowed the term, were things perfectly well known and understood by those who were initiated, though concealed from the

"Before all things," says this writer, "God was alone; but not absolutely alone, for he had with him his own reason, since God is a rational being. This reason the Greeks called Logos, which word we now render Sermo. And that you may more easily understand this from yourself, consider that you, who are made in the image of God, and are a reasonable being, have reason within yourself. When you silently consider with yourself, it is by means of reason that you do it."6

<sup>1</sup> Origen contra Celsum. 1677, L. v. p. 259. (P.)

<sup>Bid. p. 247. (P.)
Athenagoræ Opera, 1685, Apol. p. 83. (P.)
Oratio contra Græcos, at the end of Justin's</sup>

Works, 1686, p. 145. (P.)

<sup>**</sup> L. ii. C. xxviii. p. 176. (P.)

6 "Ante ormin, Deus erat solus . . . Ceterum ne tunc quidem solus; habebat, enim, secum, rationem suam . . Rationalis etiam Deus .

Hanc Græci Aoyor dicunt, quo vocabulo etiam Sermonem appellamus. Idque, quo facilius intelligas ex toipso ante recognosce ut ex imagine ligas ex toipso ante recognosce ut ex imagine et similitudine Dei, quam habeas et tu in temetipso rationem, qui es animal rationale . . . Vide to be sure) got over the great difficulty difference between the Son of God and of the conversion of a mere attribute the other angels. For they are mere into a substance, and a thinking substance too, this writer proceeds to ascertain the time when this conversion the knowledge of God, but for service took place; and he, together with all (ad ministrandum). But he being the early Fathers, says that it was also a breathing (spiritus), yet proceedat the very instant of the creation, ing from the mouth of God with a "Then," says he, "did this speech assume its form and dress, its sound reason, because he was to be a teacher and voice, when God said, Let there be of the knowledge of God," &c.3 He light. This is the perfect nativity of therefore calls him spiritus vocalis. the word, when it proceeded from God. From this time making him equal to ings not producing similar spirits, he himself" (by which phrase, however, we are only to understand like himself) "from which procession he became his breathings of God are permanent; they son, his first-born, and only begotten, before all things."2

This method of explaining the origin of the personality of the Logos con-

quum tacitus tecum ipse congrederis, ratione hoc ipsum agi intra te, &c. Adv. Praxeam, C. v. pp. 502-3. Tertulliani Opera, 1675. (P.)

1 Quid est enim, dices, sermo nisi vax, et sonus oris... vacuum nescio quid, et inane, et incorporale? At ego nibil dico de Dec inane et vacuum prodire potuisse, ut non de inani et vacuo prolatum, nec carere substantia, quod de tanta substantia processit, &c. Ibid. C. vii. pp. 503-4.

(P.)

2 Tunc . . . ipse sermo speciem et ornatum suum sumit, sonum et vocem, quit de sermonis flat lux. Hæc est nativitas perfecta sermonis, dum ex Deo procedit . Exinde cum parem sibi faciens, de quo procedendo filius factus est primogenitus, ut ante omnia genitus, et unigenitus, ut solus Deo genitus. Ibid. p. 503. (P.)

Upon this stating of the case, it was tinued to the council of Nice, and natural to object, that the reason of a even afterwards. For Lactantius, who man can never be converted into a sub- was tutor to the son of Constantine. stance, so as to constitute a thinking gives us the same account of this being, distinct from the man himself. business, with some little variation, But, he says, that though this is the teaching us to distinguish the Son of case with respect to man, yet nothing God from the angels, whom he like-can proceed from God but what is sub-wise conceived to be emanations from stantial. "You will say," says he, the divine mind. "How," says he, "but what is speech besides a word or "did he beget him? (that is Christ). sound, something unsubstantial and The Sacred Scriptures inform us that incorporeal? But I say that nothing the Son of God is the sermo or ratio unsubstantial and incorporeal can pro- (the speech or reason) of God, also ceed from God, because it does not that the other angels are the breath of proceed from what is itself unsubstan- God, spiritus Dei. But sermo (speech) tial; nor can that want substance, is breath emitted, together with a which proceeds from so great a sub-voice, expressive of something; and because speech and breathing proceed Having in this manner (lame enough from different parts, there is a great silent breathings (spiritus taciti), because they were created not to teach voice and sound, is the word; for this Then, in order to account for our breathsays that "our breathings are dissoluble, because we are mortal, but the live and feel, because he is immortal, of the council of Nice, for Lactantius

> <sup>3</sup> Lactantii Opera, 1560. Inst. L. iv. Sect. viii. pp. 370-1. (P.) "Primum nec sciri a quoquam possunt, nec cuarrari, opera divina: sed tamen sanctes literae docent, in quibus cautum est, illum Dei fillum, Dei esse sermonem, sive est, main bet intuin, bet esse schneidin, steetiam rationem; itemque cæteros angelos Dei spiritus cum voce aliquid significante prolatus. Sed tamen que niam spiritus et sermo diversis partibus pro-ferunter, siquidem spiritus naribus, ore sermo procedit, magna inter hune Dei filium et cæteros angelos differentia est. Illi enim ex Deo taciti spiritus exierunt; quia non ad doctrinam Dei tradendam, sed ad ministerium creabantur. Ille tradendam, seu ad ininsterium creananur. His vero cum sit et ipse spiritus, tamen cum voce ac sono ex Dei ore processit, sicut verbum, ea scilicet ratione, quia voce ejus ad populum fuerat usurus; id est, quod ille magister futurus esset doctrinae Dei et cœlestis arcani ad homines perferendi: quod ipsum primo locutus est, ut per eum ad nos loqueretur, et ille vocem Dei ac voluntatem nobis revelaret." Opera, I. p. 289.

the giver of sense and life."

All the early Fathers speak of Christ as not having existed always, except as reason exists in man, viz. an attribute of the Deity; and for this reason they speak of the Father as not having been a Father always, but only from the time that he made the world. "Before anything was made," says Theophilus, "God had the logos for his council; being his vovs or povnous (reason or understanding); but when he proceeded to produce what he had determined upon, he then emitted the logos, the first-born of every creature, not emptying himself of logos (reason), but λογον γεννησας (begetting reason), and always conversing with his own logos" 2 (reason).

Justin Martyr also gives the same explanation of the emission of the logos from God, without depriving himself of reason, and he illustrates it by what we observe in ourselves. For, "in uttering any word," he says, "we beget a word (logos), not taking anything from ourselves, so as to be lessened by it, but as we see one fire produced from another."3

Clemens Alexandrinus calls the Father alone without beginning (avanyos) and immediately after he characterizes the Son, as the beginning, and the first. fruits of things (αρχην και απαρχην των οντων) from whom we must learn the Father of all, the most ancient and beneficent of beings.4 Tertullian expressly says that God was not always a father or a judge, since he could not be a father before he had a son, nor a judge before sin; and there was a time when both sin and the son (which made God to be a judge and a father) were not."5

This language was held at the time

says, "God, before he undertook the making of the world, produced a holy and incorruptible spirit, which he might call his Son; and afterwards he by him created innumerable other spirits, whom he calls angels."6 The church, says Hilary, "knows one unbegotten God. and one only begotten Son of God. It acknowledges the Father to be [eternal and without origin, and it acknowledges the origin of the Son from eternity, not himself without beginning, but from him who is without beginning (ab initiabili)." It is not impossible that Hilary might have an idea of the eternal generation of the Son, though the fathers before the council of Nice had no such idea. For the Platonists in general thought that the creation was from eternity, there never having been any time in which the Divine Being did not act. But, in general, by the phrase from eternity, and before all time, &c., the ancient Christian writers seem to have meant any period before the creation of the world, Consistently with this representation, but very inconsistently with the modern doctrine of the Trinity, the fathers supposed the Son of God to have been begotten voluntarily, so that it depended upon the Father himself whether he would have a son or not. "I will produce you another testimony from the Scriptures," says Justin Martyr, "that in the beginning, before all the creatures, God begat from himself a certain reasonable power (δυναμιν λογικην) who by the spirit is sometimes called the glory of God, sometimes God, sometimes the Lord and Logos, because he is subservient to his Father's will, and was begotten at his Father's pleasure."8

Novatian says, "God the Father is <sup>6</sup> Inst. L. iv. C. vi. p. 364. (P.) "Deus igitur machinator constitutorque rerum,...antequam præclarum hoc opus mundi adorirctur, sanctum et incorruptibilem spiritum genuit, quem Filium nuncuparet. Et quamvis alios postea innumera-biles per ipsum creavisset, quos angelos dicimus,"

&lt;sup>1</sup> Lactantii Opera, 1660. Inst. L. iv. Sect. viii. pp. 370-1. (P.) *Nostri spiritus dissolubiles sunt, quia mortales sumus. Dei autem spiritus et quia mortales sumus. Del autem spiritus et vivunt et manent et sentiunt; quia ipse immortalis est et sensus et vitæ dator. Opera, I. p. 290.

2 Ad Autolycum, L. ii, p. 129. (P.)

3 Diad. Edit. Thirlby, pp. 266-7. (P.)

4 Strom. L. vii. Opera, p. 700. (P.)

5 Ad Hermogenem, C. iii. p. 234. Paris, 1675.

(P.)

&amp;c. Opera, I. p. 284.

7 De Trinitate, L. iv. (P.)

8 Dial. Ed. Thirlby, p. 266. (P.)

therefore the maker and creator of all all the persons in the Trinity. But it whom, when he himself pleased, the was completely formed. word (sermo) was born." Eusebius, It is not a little amus luminous body, but by a necessary property of its nature. But the Son, by the intention and will of the Father, received his subsistence so as to be the image of the Father. For by his will did God become (βουληθεις) the Father of his Son."2

The Fathers of the council of Sirmium say, "If any one says that the Son was begotten not by the will of the Father, let him be anathema. For the Father did not beget the Son by a physical necessity of nature, without the operation of his will, but he at once willed, and begat the Son, and produced him from himself, without time, and without suffering any diminution himself."3 Hilary mentions his approbation of the time of the council of Nice; for till this sentiment, but we shall see that Austin corrects him for it. A strong passage in favour of the voluntary production of the Son of God may also be seen quoted from Gregory Nyssen, by Dr. Clarke, in the place above referred to.

SECTION III.

THE SUPREMACY WAS ALWAYS ASCRIBED TO THE FATHER BEFORE THE COUNCIL OF NICE.

WE find upon all occasions, the early Christian writers speak of the Father as superior to the Son, and in general they give him the title of God, as distinguished from the Son; and sometimes they expressly call him, exclusively of the Son, the only true God; a phraseology which does not at all accord with the idea of the perfect equality of

Sect. xlvi. (P.)
Ed. Thirlby, p. 264. (P.)
Ibid. p. 281. (P.)
L. iii. C. i. p. 199. (P.)

"have delivered to us the doctrine of things, who alone hath no origin, in- might well be expected, that the advisible, immense, immortal and eternal, vances to the present doctrine of the the one God, to whose greatness and Trinity should be gradual and slow. majesty nothing can be compared, from It was, indeed, some centuries before it

It is not a little amusing to observe quoted by Dr. Clarke, says, "The light how the Fathers of the second, third does not shine forth by the will of the and fourth centuries were embarrassed with the Heathens on the one hand, to whom they wished to recommend their religion, by exalting the person of its founder, and with the ancient Jewish and Gentile converts (whose prejudices against Polytheism, they also wished to guard against) on the other. Willing to conciliate the one, and vet not to offend the other, they are particularly careful, at the same time that they give the appellation of God to Jesus Christ. to distinguish between him and the Father, giving decided superiority to the latter. Of this I think it may be worth while to produce a number of examples. from the time that the doctrine of the divinity of Christ was first started, to that time, and even something later. did this language continue to be used. Clemens Romanus never calls Christ, God. He says, "Have we not all one God, and one Christ, and one spirit of grace poured upon us all?"4 which is exactly the language of the apostle Paul, with whom he was in part contemporary.

Justin Martyr, who is the first that we can find to have advanced the doctrine of the divinity of Christ, says He who appeared to Abraham, and to Isaac, and to Jacob, was subordinate to the Father, and minister to his will.5 He even says, that the Father is the author to him both of his existence. and of his being powerful, and of his being Lord and God.6

"All the evangelists," says Irenæus, one God,...and one Christ, the Son of God;"7 and invoking the Father he calls him the only God (solus et verus the form of a man, speaking by the Deus); 1 and according to several of the most considerable of the early Christian writers, a common epithet by which the Father is distinguished from the Son. is, that he alone is (aurobeos) or God of

<sup>1</sup> De Trinitate, C. x. p. 31. (P.)
2 Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity, Ed. 3, p. 281.

Origen, quoted by Dr. Clarke, says, "Hence we may solve the scruple of many pious persons, who, through fear lest they should make two Gods, fall into false and wicked notions....We must tell them that he who is of himself God, (aυτοθεος) is that God (δ Θεος) (as our Saviour, in his prayer to his Father says, that they may know thee, the only true God;) but that whatever is God besides that self-existent person, being so only by communication of his divinity, cannot so properly be styled (6 Ocos) that God, but rather (Ocos) a divine person."2 The same observation had before been made by Clemens Alexandrinus, who also calls the Son a creature, and the work of God.3 Origen also says, "According to all is not alone great; for he has communicated of his greatness to the firstbegotten of all the creation" (πρωτοτοκφ πασης κτισεως).4

Novatian says that "the Sabellians make too much of the divinity of the Son, when they say it is that of the Fabounds. They dare to make him, not the Son, but God the Father himself. And again, that they acknowledge the divinity of Christ in too boundless and unrestrained a manner," (effrenatius et effusius in Christo divinitatem confiteri).5 The same writer also says, "The Son to whom divinity is communicated is, indeed, God; but God the Father of all is deservedly God of all, and the origin (principium) of his Son, whom he begat Lord."6

Arnobius says, "Christ, a God, under

Ibid. C. xxxi. (P.)

order of the principal God." Again. "then, at length, did God Almighty, the only God, send Christ."7

Such language as this was held till the time of the council of Nice. Alexander, who is very severe on Eusebius. bishop of Nicomedia, who was an Arian. says, in his circular letter to the bishops. "the Son is of a middle nature between the first cause of all things, and the creatures, which were created out of nothing."8 Athanasius himself, as quoted by Dr. Clarke, says, "the nature of God is the cause both of the Son and of the Holy Spirit, and of all creatures." He also says, "There is but one God, because the Father is but one, yet is the Son also God, having such a sameness as that of a son to a father."10

Lactantius says, "Christ taught that there is one God, and that he alone ought to be worshipped; neither did he ever call himself God, because he would not have been true to his trust, if, being sent to take away gods (that our doctrine, the God and Father of is, a multiplicity of gods) and to assert one, he had introduced another besides that One...Because he assumed nothing at all to himself, he received the dignity of perpetual priest, the honour of sovereign king, the power of a judge, and the name of God."11

Hilary, who wrote twelve books on ther, extending his honour beyond the doctrine of the Trinity, after the council of Nice, to prove that the Father himself is the only self-existing God, and in a proper sense the only true God (quod solus innascibilis et auod solus verus sit) after alleging a passage from the prophet Isaiah, quotes

hil prorsus assumpsit, ut mandata mittentis impleret, et sacerdotis perpetui dignitatem, et regis summi honorem, et judicis potestatem, et Doi nomen accepit." Opera, I. p. 309.

&lt;sup>1</sup> L. iii. C. vi. p. 209. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Serip. Doc. p. 338.
<sup>3</sup> Sandii Nucleus Hist. Eccl. p. 94. (P.)
<sup>4</sup> Contra Celsum, L. vi. p. 323. (P.)
<sup>5</sup> Novatiani Opera, 1724. C. xxiii. (P.)

<sup>7</sup> Arnobius adversus Gentes, 1610. L. ii. pp. 50, 57. (P.)

<sup>8</sup> Theodorit. Eccles. Hist. L. i. C. iv. pp.

<sup>16, 17. (</sup>P.)

9 P. 276. (P.)

10 P. 292. (P.)

11 Institut, L. iv. C. xiv. (P.) "Docuit enim quod unus Deus sit, etumque solum coli oportere; nec unquam se ipse Deum dixit, quia non servasset fidem, si missus ut deos tolleret, et unum assereret, induceret alium, præter Unum. ...Propterea quia tam fidelis extitit, quia sibi niin support of it the saving of our Saviour, "This is life eternal, that they might know thee the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent."1 Much more might be alleged from this writer, to the same purpose.

Lastly, Epiphanius says, "Who is there that does not assert that there is only one God, the Father Almighty, from whom his only begotten Son truly proceeded?"2

Indeed, that the Fathers of the council of Nice could not mean the Son was strictly speaking equal to the Father, is evident from their calling him God of God, which in that age was always opposed to God of himself (αντοθεος) that is, self-existent or independent: which was always understood to be the prerogative of the Father. It is remarkable that when the writers of that age speak of Christ as existing from eternity, they did not therefore suppose that he was properly selfexistent. Thus Alexander, bishop of Alexandria, says, "We believe that the Son was always from the Father; but let no one by the word always be led to imagine him self-existent (αγεννητος) for neither the term was, nor always, nor before all ages, mean the same thing as self-existent (αγεννητος)." 3

On these principles the primitive fathers had no difficulty in the interpretation of that saying of our Lord, "my Father is greater than I." They never thought of saying, that he was equal to the Father with respect to his divinity, though inferior with respect to his humanity; which is the only sense of the passage that the doctrine of the Trinity in its present state admits of. For they thought that the Son was in all respects, and in his whole person, inferior to his Father, as having derived his being from him.

Tertullian had this idea of the passage when he says, "the Father is all substance, but the Son is a derivation from him, and a part, as he himself declares, 'the Father is greater than I.'"4 It is also remarkable, as Mr. Whiston observes, that the ancient fathers, both Greek and Latin, never interpret Phil. ii. 7, to mean an equality of the Son to the Father.5 Novatian says, "He, therefore, though he was in the form of God, did not make himself equal to God (non est rapinam arbitratus equalem se Deo esse), for though he remembered he was God of God the Father, he never compared himself to God the Father, being mindful that he was of his Father. and that he had this, because his Father gave it him."6

1 De Trinitate, L. iv. p. 56. (P.)

It also deserves to be noticed, that notwithstanding the supposed derivation of the Son from the Father, and therefore their being of the same substance, most of the early Christian writers thought the text "I and my Father are one," was to be understood of an unity or harmony of disposition only. Thus Tertullian observes, that the expression is unum, one thing, not one person; and he explains it to mean unity, likeness, conjunction, and of the love that the Father bore to the Son." Origen says, "let him consider that text, 'all that believed were of one heart and of one soul,' and then he will understand this, 'I and my Father are one." Novatian says, one thing (unum) being in the neuter gender, signifies an agreement of society, not an unity of person, and he explains it by this passage in Paul, "he that planteth and he that watereth are both one." 9 But the fathers of the council of Sardica, held A.D. 347, reprobated the opinion that the union of the Father and Son consists in consent and concord only, apprehending it to be a strict unity of substance; 10 so much farther was the doctrine of the Trinity advanced at that time.

<sup>2</sup> Herr. 57, Opera, I. p. 483. (P.)
3 Theodorit. L. i. C. iv. pp. 17, 18. (P.)
4 Adv. Praxeam, Sect. ix. p. 504. (P.)

Collections, p. 109. (P.)
 Opera, C. xvii. p. 84. (P.)
 Adv. Prazeam, C. xxii. p. 513. (P.)
 Contra Celsum, L. viii. p. 386. (P.)
 C. xxvii. p. 99. (P.)
 Theodorit, L. ii. C. viii. p. 82. (P.)

SECTION IV.

OF THE DIFFICULTY WITH WHICH THE DOCTRINE OF THE DIVINITY OF CHRIST WAS ESTABLISHED.

It is sufficiently evident from many circumstances, that the doctrine of the divinity of Christ did not establish itself without much opposition, especially from the unlearned among the Christians, who thought that it savoured of Polytheism, that it was introduced by those who had had a philosophical education, and was by degrees adopted by others, on account of its covering the great offence of the cross, by exalting the personal dignity of our Saviour.

vented a new term, viz. economy or reason, no doubt, Origen says, "that distribution, as it may be rendered; to the carnal they taught the gospel saying they were far from denying the in a literal way, preaching Jesus Christ, unity of God, but that there was a and him crucified, but to persons farfor that, according to this economy the of their audience) "they communicated Son might be God, without detracting the Logos." 4 from the supreme divinity of the Fain Tertullian:

"The simple, the ignorant, and the unlearned, who are always the greater part 1 of the body of Christians, since the rule of faith itself," (meaning perhaps the apostles' creed, or as much of it as was in use in his time,) "transfers their worship of many gods to the one true God, not understanding that the unity of God is to be maintained, but with the economy,

nity. (P.)

1 This shows that the greater part of Christians, in the time of Tertullian, were Unitarians, and exceedingly averse to the doctrine of the Tri-

dread this economy, imagining that this number and disposition of a trinity is a division of the unity. They therefore will have it, that we are worshippers of the two, and even of three Gods; but that they are the worshippers of one God only. We, they say, hold the monarchy. Even the Latins have learned to bawl out for monarchy. and the Greeks themselves will not understand the economy;"2 monarchy being a Greek term and vet adopted by the Latins, and economy, though a Greek term, not being relished even by the Greek Christians.

Upon another occasion see by this writer how offensive the word Trinity was to the generality of Chris-To make the new doctrine less ex- tians. "If the number of the Trinity ceptionable, the advocates for it in- still shocks you," &c., says he.3 For this certain economy, or distribution re-ther advanced, and burning with love specting the divine nature and attri- for divine celestial wisdom," (by which butes, which did not interfere with it; he must mean the philosophical part Origen candidly calls these adhether. But this new term, it appears, rents to the doctrine of the strict unity was not well understood or easily re- of God, pious persons  $(\phi i\lambda o\theta \epsilon ovs)$ . lished, by those who called themselves "Hence," says he, "we may solve the the advocates for the monarchy of the scruple of many pious persons, who, Father, a term much used in those through fear lest they should make days, to denote the supremacy and two gods, fall into false and wicked sole divinity of the Father, in opposi- notions." He endeavours to relieve tion to that of the Son. All this is them in this manner. "This scruple very clear from the following passage of many pious persons may thus be a "Si te adhuc numerus scandalizat trinitatis," c. Adv. Praxeam, Sect. xii. p. 506.

p. 502. (P.)

Preface to his Comment on John, Opera, II.

p. 255. (P.)

<sup>2 &</sup>quot;Simplices enim quippe ne dixerim imprudentes et idiotes, que major semper credentium pars est, quoniam et ipsa regula fidei a pluribus diis seculi ad unicum et Deum verum transfert, diis seculi ad unicum et Deum vorum transfert, non intelligentes unicum quidem, sed cum sua economia esse, credendum, expavescunt ad economiam. Numerum et dispositionem trinitatis divisionem præsumunt unitatis. . . Itaque duos et tres jam jactitant, a nobis prædicari, se vero unius Dei cultores præsumunt. . . Monarchiam sonare student Latini, economiam intelligere nolunt etiam Græci." Adv. Praxeam, Sect. iii. p. 502 (P.)

solved. We must tell them, that he who is of himself God, (αυτοθεος) is that God, (God with the article) (δ Θεος),—but that whatsoever besides another atize the hated name of Arius; that self-existent person," is "rather a divine person, is God without the article, (O cos)" as was observed before.1 How far this solution of the difficulty was satisfactory to these pious, unlearned Christians does not appear. It does not seem calculated to remove a difficulty of any great magnitude.

That these ancient Unitarians, under all the names by which their ad- entirely different from that of the Jews, versaries thought proper to distinguish ed, is acknowledged by all who are time laid much stress on any argument candid among the moderns. learned Beausobre, himself a Trinita- from the books of Moses, or at least rian, is satisfied that it was a zeal for had not been able to satisfy the Jews, the unity of God that actuated the or the Jewish Christians, with any re-Sabellians 2 (who were no more than presentations of that kind. Tertullian, Unitarians under a particular denomitherefore, makes another, and, indeed. nation). Epiphanius says, that when a very bold attempt for the same pura Sabellian met the orthodox, they would say, "My friends, do we believe the Jewish faith so to maintain the one God or three ?"3

Eusebius speaking with great wrath against Marcellus of Ancyra, allows that he did not deny the personality characteristic of the gospel, to intro-of the Son, but for fear of estab- duce the Son and Spirit, as making lishing two Gods.<sup>4</sup> This also appears one God with the Father. He says, from the manner in which Eusebius expresses himself when he answers to the charge of introducing two Gods. "But you are afraid,  $(\phi \circ \beta \eta)$  perhaps, lest acknowledging two distinct subsistences, you should introduce two monarchy of God." 5

Basil complains of the popularity of the followers of Marcellus, whose disciple Photinus is said to have been, at the same time that the name of Arius

was execrated. "Unto this very time," says he, in his letter to Athanasius, "in all their letters they fail not to but with Marcellus, who has profanely taken away the very existence of the divinity of the only begotten Son, and abused the signification of the word Logos, with this man they seem to find no fault at all."6

It was impossible not to perceive that this economy, and the style and rank of God, given to Christ, made a system, as laid down in the Old Testament. them, have been greatly misrepresent- For Christians either had not at that The for the doctrine of the Trinity drawn pose, saying, that it was peculiar to unity of God, as not to admit the Son or Spirit to any participation of the divinity with him; but that it was the that God was determined to renew his covenant in this new form. I shall give his own words, which are much more copious on the subject, in a note.

When the philosophizing Christians went beyond the mere personification original principles, and so destroy the of a divine attribute, and proceeded to speak of the real substance, as I may say, of the divine Logos, they were evidently in danger of making a diversity. or a separation in the divine nature.

<sup>1</sup> Clarke's Scrip. Doc. p. 338. See supra, p. 17. 2 "Lorsque j'en recherche la source al Hercsie Sabellienne), je n'en trouve point d'autre que la crainte de multiplier la Divinité, en multipliant les Personnes Divines, et de ramener dans l'Eglise le Polythéisme, qui renverse le premier principe de la Religion. C'est ce que témoignent assez unanimément les anciens Pères." L. iii. Ch. vi. Sect. viii. l. p. 535.

3 Hær. 62, Opera, I. p. 514. (P.)

4 Ibid. p. 536. (P.)

Clarke's Scrip. Doc. p. 345. (P.)

<sup>6</sup> Opera, III. p. 80. (P.)7 "Judaicæ fidei ista res sie unum Deum eredere, ut Filium adnumerare ei nolis, et post Filium, Spiritum. Quid enim erit inter nos et illos, nisi differentia ista. Quod opus evangelii . . . . si non exinde Pater et Filius et Spiritus . . . . unum deum sistunt. Sic Deus voluit no-vare sacramentum, ut nove unus crederetur per reliaim et Spiritum, et coram jam Deus in suis propriis nominibus et personis cognoscerctur, qui et retro per Filium et Spiritum predicatus non intelligebatur." Adv. Praxeam, Sect. xxx. p. 518. (P.)

the Son another, and the Spirit a third, an unlearned or perverse person understands me as if I meant a diversity, and in this diversity he pretends that there must be a separation of the Father, Son and Spirit."1 The objection is certainly not ill stated. Let us now consider how this writer answers it: for at this time it was not pretended that the subject was count of the unity of God did not give above human comprehension, or that entire satisfaction, were willing to reit could not be explained by proper comparisons. In order, therefore, to show that the Son and Spirit might be produced from the Father, and yet not be separated from him, he says that God produced the Logos (Sermonem) as the root of a tree produces the last of these comparisons is also adopted by Athenagoras, in his Apology, in which he describes a beam of light as a thing not detached from the sun, but as flowing out of it, and back to it again.3 For one Hierarchas had been censured for comparing the production of the Son from the Father to the lighting of one candle at another, because the second candle was a thing subsisting of itself, and entirely separated from the former, so as to be in-

Justin Martyr, however, as we have seen, made use of the same comparison, and as far as appears, without censure. But after his time, the ideas of philosophizing Christians had undergone a He and his contemporaries change. were only solicitous to make out something like divinity in the Son, without compatible with unity.4

That the common people did make considering him as united in one subthis very objection to the new doctrine stance with the Father, the unity of is clearly intimated by Tertullian. God being then defended on no other "When I say that the Father is one, principle than that of the supremacy of the Father; so that, though Christ might be called God in a lower sense of the word, the Father was God in a sense so much higher than that, that strictly speaking, it was still true that there was but one God, and the Father only was that God. But, by the time of Hilary, the philosophizing Christians, finding perhaps that this acpresent the Son, not only as deriving his being and his divinity from the Father, but as still inseparably united to him, and never properly detached from him; and, therefore, the former comparison of one torch lighted by another would no longer answer the branch, as a fountain produces the purpose. But this could not be ob-river, or the sun a beam of light.<sup>2</sup> The jected to the comparison of the root and the branch, the fountain and the stream, or the sun and the beam of light, according to the philosophy of those times. For, in all these cases, things were produced from the substance of their respective origins, and yet were not separated from them.

These explanations suited very well with the doctrine of the Trinity as held by the council of Nice; when it was not pretended, as it is now, that each person in the Trinity is equally eternal and uncaused. But they certainly did not sufficiently provide for the distinct personality of the Father, Son and Spirit; which, however, especially with respect to the two former, they asserted. With respect to the latter, it is not easy to collect their opinions; for, in general, they expressed themselves as if the Spirit was only a divine power.

In order to satisfy the advocates of the proper unity of God, those who then maintained the divinity of Christ make, upon all occasions, the most solemn protestations against the introduction of two Gods, for the deification of the Spirit was then not much objected to by them. But they thought

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;Ecce enim dico alium esse Patrem, et alium Filium, et alium Spiritum. Male accipit idiotes quisque aut perversus hoc dictum, quasi diversitatem sonet, et ex diversitate separationem protendat Patris, Filii et Spiritus. Adv. Prazeam, Sect. ix. p. 504. (P.)

2 Adv. Prazeam, C. viii. p. 504. (P.)

3 P. 86. (P.)

See Hilary de Trinitate, L. iv. [Sect. xii.] Opera, p. 59. (P.)

the worship of two Gods, by strongly always the Father only. The distincasserting the inferiority and subordination of the Son to the Father; some of them alleging one circumstance of known. Some persons in opposing Sathis inferiority, and others another.

Tertullian cautions us not to destroy the monarchy when we admit a Trinity, since it is to be restored from the Son to the Father.1 Novatian lays the stress on Christ's being begotten and the Father not begotten. "If," says he, "the Son had not been begotten, he and the Father being upon a level, they would both be unbegotten, and, therefore, there would be two Gods," &c.2 Again, he says, "when it is said that Moses was appointed a God to Pharaoh, shall it be denied to Christ, who is a God, not to Pharaoh, but to the whole universe?" But this kind of divinity would not satisfy the moderns.

Eusebius's apology for this qualified divinity of Christ (for the manner in which he writes is that of an apology, and shows that this new doctrine was very offensive to many in his time) turns upon the same hinge with the former of these illustrations of Novathe Son to be God, yet there is [absowho has his divinity properly of him- him. self, and is the cause even to the Son being such as he is; by whom the Son ing expressly, I live by the Father) ..... and declares to be greater than himself," and "to be even his God."4 This, indeed, is written by an Arian, but it is the language of all the Trinitarians of his time: for then it had not occurred to any person to say that the one God was the Trinity, or the Father,

1 Adv. Praxeam, C. iv. p. 502. (P.)
C. xxxi. p. 122. (P.)
C. xxx. p. 77. (P.)
Clarke's Scrip. Doc. p. 343. (P.)

that they guarded sufficiently against Son and Spirit in conjunction, but tion between person and being, which is the salvo at present, was not then bellius, having made three hypostases, which we now render persons, separate from each other, Dionysius, Bishop of Rome, quoted with approbation by Athanasius himself, said that it was making three Gods.5

I have observed before, and may have occasion to repeat the observation hereafter, that, in many cases, the phraseology remains when the ideas which originally suggested it have disappeared; but that the phraseology is an argument for the pre-existence of the corresponding ideas. Thus it has been the constant language of the church, from the time of the apostles, and is found upon all occasions in their writings, that Christ suffered; meaning, no doubt, in his whole person, in everything which really entered into his constitution. This, however, was not easily reconcilable with the opinion of any portion of the divinity being a proper part of Christ; and therefore the Docetæ, who first asserted the ditian. "If," says he, "this makes them vine origin of the Son of God, made apprehensive lest we should seem to no scruple to deny, in express words, introduce two Gods, let them know that Christ suffered. For they said, that, though we do indeed acknowledge that Jesus was one thing, and the Christ, or the heavenly inhabitant of lutely] but one God, even he who alone Jesus, another; and that when Jesus is without original and unbegotten, was going to be crucified, Christ left Irenæus, writing against this heresy. himself, both of his being, and of his quotes the uniform language of the Scriptures as a sufficient refutation of himself confesses that he lives (declar- it; maintaining that Christ himself, in his whole nature, suffered. "It was no impassible Christ," he says, "but Jesus Christ himself, who suffered for us."6 It is evident, however, that this writer, who was one of the first that adopted the idea of the divinity of Christ (but on a principle different from that of the Docetæ, viz. the personification of the Logos of the Father).

De Synodo Nicæna, Opera, p. 275. (P.)
 L. iii. C. xx. p. 246. (P.)

passibility of his whole nature; for union or mixture. then he must have held that something, which was a proper part of the after Irenæus, viz. Tertullian, asserts. Deity himself, was capable of suffering. He, therefore, but in a very awkward and ineffectual manner, endeavours to make a case different from that of the Docetæ, by supposing a mixture of the two natures in Christ.

"For this reason," he says, "The word of God became man, and the Son of God became the Son of man, being mixed with the word of God, that receiving the adoption, he might become the Son of God. For we could not receive immortality, unless we were united to immortality," &c.1 Origen also, in his third book against Celsus, speaks of the mixture of the humanity with the divinity of Christ. He even speaks of the mortal quality of the very body of Christ, as changed into a divine

quality.2

This confusion of ideas and inconsistency appears to have been soon perceived. For we presently find that all those who are called orthodox, ran into the very error of the Docetæ, maintaining that it only was the human nature of Christ that suffered, while another part of his nature, which was no less essential to his being Christ, was incapable of suffering; and to this day all who maintain the proper that flesh feel a wound which removed divinity of Christ, are in the same di- the pain of a wound from another?"5 lemma. They must either flatly contradict the Scriptures, and say, with Hilary in this extravagance, but Epithe Docetæ, that Christ did not suffer, phanius says, that Christ in his death or that the divine nature itself may feel pain. This being deemed manifest impiety, they generally adopted the of those who are called orthodox at former opinion, viz. that the human nature of Christ only suffered, and contented themselves with asserting some inexplicable mixture of the two natures; notwithstanding the idea of one part of the same person (and of the intellectual part too) not feeling pain, while the other did, is evidently could not himself strictly maintain the inconsistent with any idea of proper

The very next writer we meet with, contrary to him, that it was not Christ. but only the human nature of Christ, that suffered. "This voice," says he, "'My God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me?' was from the flesh and soul, that is, the man, and not the word or spirit, that is, it was not of the God, who is impassible, and who left the Son while he gave up his man to death."3 What could any of the Docetæ have said more?

Arnobius expresses himself to the same purpose. Speaking of the death of Christ, with which the Christians were continually reproached, "That death," says he, "which you speak of, was the death of the man that he had put on, not of himself, of the burden, not of the bearer."4

Hilary, who wrote after the council of Nice, went even farther than this, and maintained at large that the body of Christ was at all times incapable of feeling pain, that it had no need of refreshment by meat and drink, and that he ate and drank only to show that he had a body. "Could that hand," says he, "which gave an ear to the man that Peter smote, feel the nail that was driven through it? And could

Later writers, indeed, did not follow upon the cross, suffered nothing in his divinity.6 This, too, is the language this day, but how this is consistent with their doctrine of atonement, which trandit in mortelli. Adv. Plaseam, 6. adxi.

<sup>3 &</sup>quot;Hæc vox carnis et animæ, id est hominis, non sermonis, non spiritus, id est non dei, propterea emissa est, ut impassibilem deum ostenderet qui sie filium dereliquit dum hominem ejus tradidit in mortem." Adv. Praxeam, C. XXX.

9. 518. (P.)

4 "Mors illa quam dicitis assumpti hominis fuit, non ipsius, gestaminis, non gestantis."

Adversus Gentes, L. i. p. 22. (P.)

5 L. x. p. 244. (P.)

6 Heer. 20, Opera, I. p. 49. (P.)

L. iii. C. xxi. Opera, p. 249. (P.)
 Ibid. p. 136. (P.)

supposes an infinite satisfaction to this language might be used by them have been made to the justice of God in a figurative sense, in which sense by the death of Christ, does not easily appear.

SECTION V.

AN ACCOUNT OF THE UNITARIANS BEFORE THE COUNCIL OF NICE.

Before I proceed to the Arian controversy, I must take notice of those who distinguished themselves by maintaining the proper humanity of Christ in this early period. That the Christian church in general held this doctrine till the time of Victor, was the constant assertion of those who professed it about this time, and I think I have shown that this was true.

One of the first who distinguished himself by asserting the simple humanity of Christ, was Theodotus of Byzantium, who, though a tanner, is acknowledged to have been a man of ability, and even of learning. He is said to have been well received at Rome, and at first even by Victor, the bishop of that city, who afterwards excommunicated him.

About the same time appeared Artemon, from whom those who maintained this opinion were by some called Artemonites; but it appears from the writings of Tertullian, that they were more generally called Monarchists, from their asserting the proper unity of the divine nature, and the supremacy of God the Father with respect to Christ. By their enemies they were called Patripassians, because they were charged with asserting that the Father was so united to the person of Christ, as even to have suffered with him. But Lardner treats this as a calumny. 1 It should seem, however, that some of them went so far (since Tertullian so particularly quotes it as their own language) as to say that the Father felt compassion for his suffering Son.<sup>2</sup> But various passions are in the Scriptures ascribed to God.

1 Hist. of Heretics, p. 413. (P.) Works, IX. p. 497. ■ Adv. Praxeam, Sect. xxix. p. 518. (P.)

Beausobre<sup>3</sup> thinks them to have been entirely free from this imputation, and imagines it to have arisen from their adversaries, designedly or undesignedly, mixing their own ideas with theirs, and especially confounding the two terms Logos and Son of God. In consequence of this, when the Unitarians asserted that the Father and the Logos were one person, they would of course charge them with maintaining that the Father suffered in the Son. Indeed Tertullian, as Beausobre observes, contradicts himself when he charges the Unitarians with this opinion, because in other parts of his writings, he expressly says that they believed the Father to be impassible.4

Praxeas the Montanist, and a man of genius and learning, against whom Tertullian writes, was an Unitarian. and so probably were many others of that sect.5 For their peculiar opinions and practices, as Montanists, had no relation to any particular opinion concerning the nature of Christ.

It is very evident, that about this time the Unitarians were very numerous in all parts of the Christian world: and as they were not distinguished by having assemblies separate from those of other Christians, which Mosheim allows,6 their opinion certainly could not be deemed heretical. It is even acknowledged that many of these Unitarians (though none of their writings are now come down to us) were men of science. They are particularly said to have been addicted to geometry, and are also said to have treated questions in theology in a geometrical method; but no particulars of this kind are known to us. It is very possible that this circumstance (which is mentioned

 <sup>8</sup> Vol. I. p. 538. (P.) L. iii. C. vi. Sect. x.
 Vol. I. p. 534. (P.) L. iii. C. vi. Sect. vii.
 Lardner's Hist. of Heretics, pp. 398, 411. (P.) Works, IX. pp. 488, 496.

6 Ecclesiastical History, 2nd edit. 1758, I. p. 191. (P.) Cent. ii. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. xx.

endeavouring to show, that if the Famust be more gods than one. Such great offence.

In the following century, viz. the third, we find Noetus, Sabellius, and Paul, bishop of Samosata, the most Noetus was of Smyrna, and is said to Saviour expresses himself. have been a disciple of Artemon. Sa- same time Sabellius might mean nobellius was bishop or priest of Cyrene, thing more than the most avowed Sotarian opinion, as taught by Noetus, is day. said to have been generally adopted. It is, indeed, said by ecclesiastical historians, that many bishops in this country presentation of their opinion.

a fair representation, Sabellius and his followers must have meant to disguise by their adversaries by way of re- their Unitarian sentiments in terms proach) might have arisen from their appropriated to the orthodoxy of their age. But though many persons are ther, the Son, and the Holy Spirit, (if said to do this at present, Sabellius this last was then considered as a dis- himself is not charged with it by any tinct person,) were each of them God, of his opponents. On the contrary, he in any proper sense of the word, there is generally said to have been a disciple of Noetus. It is therefore probable. geometry as this, I doubt not, gave as Beausobre conjectures, that this representation arose from his adversaries misapprehending what he said concerning the Father and the Son being one, and concerning the Father being distinguished among the Unitarians. in him, and doing the works, as our in Africa, in which country the Uni- cinians mean by such language at this

Paul, bishop of Samosata, a man of genius and learning, but said to have been of a profligate life, and charged were brought over to this opinion by with the arrogance and ambition of Sabellius. But it is much more pro- other bishops of great sees in those bable that they held the same opinion times, made himself obnoxious by mainbefore. In that age the prevailing bias taining the Unitarian principles, and was to magnify the personal dignity was condemned for them in several of Christ, and not to lessen it; so that councils held at Antioch, as well as on we find few or no clear instances of other accounts. His opinions are acany who, having once maintained that knowledged to have spread much, and Christ was either God or a super- to have alarmed the orthodox greatly.1 angelic being, and the maker of this But when we read of such persons as world under God, came afterwards to this bishop making many converts to believe that he was merely a man. the doctrine of the humanity of Christ, Both Noetus and Sabellius were I cannot help suspecting, for the reason charged by their adversaries with be-mentioned above, that it is to be uning Patripassians: but the Unitarians derstood of the numbers who were of that age asserting, as the Socinians before of that opinion, being encournow do, that all the divinity of the aged by men of their learning, ability Son, was that of the Father residing in and influence, to declare themselves him, and acting by him, was sufficient more openly than they had done beto give a handle for that injurious re- fore; having been overborne by the philosophizing Christians of that age, There was nothing peculiar in the the current of men's opinions having doctrine of Sabellius, though he is for some time set that way. This generally charged with maintaining Paul of Samosata is represented by that there were three persons in the Epiphanius as alleging, in defence of Trinity, but that these three persons his doctrine, the words of Moses, the or rather characters, (προσωπα) were Lord thy God is one Lord; and he is only different names or attributes of not charged by him, as others were, the same person or being. If this was with maintaining that the Father suffered;1 and indeed from this time we hear no more of that accusation, though the tenets of the Unitarians most probably continued the same.

<sup>1</sup> Sueur, A.D. [264,] 265. (P.)

To these we might add, as falling within the same century, Beryllus, bishop of Bostra, in Arabia, said to have been a man of learning and modesty, and to have maintained that Christ had no being before he was born of the Virgin Mary, and had no divinity besides that of the Father residing in him.2 But he is said to have been converted to the orthodox faith by Origen. It is to be regretted that we have no further information concerning this bishop and other Christians in Arabia. Many of them, we are told, maintained, contrary to the philosophy of their times, that the soul died with the body, and that all men would be in a state of insensibility from the time of their death to that of the general resurrection.3

I shall close this account of the ancient Unitarians with just mentioning Photinus, bishop of Sirmium, though he flourished after the council of Nice; because he is the last of the Unitarians we read of till the revival of the doctrine in the last age. For though it can hardly be supposed that the opinion of the simple humanity of Christ was wholly extinct, those who maintained it were overborne and silenced by the Trinitarians on the one hand, and the Arians on the other. And of the two, the latter were full as hostile to them as the former. This Photinus is said to have been a man of great eloquence. He continued in his bishopric, notwithstanding his being condemned in three several synods or councils, especially in one held at Milan, A.D. 345, being extremely popular in his see; but at length he was expelled by a council held at Sirmium itself, in 351. This last council was called by order of the emperor Constantius, and consisted chiefly of Arian bishops.

3 Ibid. C. xxxvii. p. 299. (P.)

Here I reluctantly bid adieu to what I apprehend to be the genuine doctrine of the Scriptures concerning the nature of Christ, but we shall see it reappear with growing lustre in a later period.

SECTION VI.

OF THE ARIAN CONTROVERSY.

THERE were several things relating to the divinity of Christ, which had not been determined by the Christian fathers, before the time of Constantine. Thus, though the term begotten had been generally used in speaking of the origin of the Son, by way of emanation from the Father, the term created, and others of a similar meaning, had been used occasionally, and as far as appears without giving offence; nor indeed could it well have done so in an age in which all creation was considered as of the same kind, every substance (at least all intelligent substances or spirits) being supposed to have been derived ultimately from the same divine This language we find used by Lactantius and Hilary, after it had begun to be disliked and reprobated. and therefore it was probably used by them through inadvertence.

Lactantius, however, speaking of the origin of the Son, says, "As when he was created in his first spiritual birth, he was, from God alone, made a holy spirit; so in his second carnal birth. from his mother alone, he became holy flesh."4 Hilary says, "God the Father is the cause of all, without beginning, and solitary; but the Son was produced by the Father without time, and was created and founded before the ages. He was not before he was born, but he was born without time. Before all time he alone subsists from the Father alone." As it is not easy to give an exact translation of this passage, on account of its extreme obscurity, I shall give it at length in the note.1 This writer seems to have thought, as the generality of the Ante-Nicene Faafter the Arian controversy this opinion was condemned.

Hær. 65, Opera, I. p. 608. (P.)
 Eusebii Hist. L. vi. C. xxxiii. p. 297. (P.)

<sup>**</sup> Epitome, C. xliii. p. 114. (P.) "Quemadmodum in prima nativitate spirituali creatus, et ex solo Deo sanctus spiritus factus est, sie in secunda carnali ex sola matre genitus, caro sancta fieret." Opera, II. p. 32.

It was in consequence of the controversy occasioned by Sabellius, in Africa, that the peculiar opinions of Arius were started. Sabellius having asserted that there was no difference between the divinity of the Father and that of the Son, Dionysius, bishop of Alexandria, was thought to have advanced, in opposition to him, something derogatory to our Saviour, as that his divinity was so far different from that of the Father, that he was not even of the same substance with the Father; which, as we have seen, was contrary to the opinion of those who were deemed orthodox in that age. However, he justified himself in such a manner as gave satisfaction.

But not long after this, Alexander, another bishop of Alexandria, being led by the same controversy to discourse concerning Christ, in the presence of Arius, a presbyter of the same church (with whom he seems to have had some previous difference), among other things, in favour of the dignity of Christ, advanced that the Father did not precede the Son a single moment, and that he had issued from all eternity out of the substance of the Father himself. This, being in some respects an advance upon the generally received doctrine, provoked Arius to reply. He allowed that Christ existed before all time, and before the ages, as the only begotten Son of God, but he said that he had no being before he was begotten. He also asserted, in the course of the debate, that Christ was neither of the substance of the Father, nor formed out of pre-existing matter. but, like other things, was created out of nothing, It seems also to have been the opinion of Arius and his folthers did, that there was a time when lowers, but was not perhaps advanced Christ was not: but we shall find that at that time, that this pre-existent spirit was the only intelligent principle belonging to Christ, being in him what the soul was supposed to be in other men.

The prejudices of the Christians of that age against the doctrine of the proper divinity of Christ must have been very general, and very strong, to have made this doctrine of Arius so popular as we find it presently was. It was a doctrine that does not appear to have been publicly maintained before. But, possibly, the difficulty of conceiving how a mere attribute of the divine nature could become a real person, which had been the orthodox opinion, might have gradually led men to think that Christ had been produced by way of simple emanation from God, like other intelligences or spirits. And when the Scripture doctrine of the creation of all things out of nothing began to take place of the doctrine of the philosophers, who asserted the impossibility of any such creation, the opinion of Arius that Christ was made out of nothing would naturally succeed to that of his emanation from the Father; so that it is possible that the minds of the more learned Christians might have been fully prepared to receive that doctrine before it was openly published by him.

Indeed, the appeal of Arius to Eusebius of Nicomedia, and other learned and eminent bishops of that age, proves that he did not imagine that he had advanced an opinion that was altogether peculiar to himself; and their ready reception of his doctrine, and the countenance which they gave him, who was only a presbyter, and had nothing extraordinary to recommend him, is a stronger proof of the same thing. The Arian doctrine, however, was a kind of medium between that of the simple humanity of Christ, which was far from being entirely extinguished, dered Alexander, his bishop, to admit though it was less and less relished, him to communion. But Arius died and that of his proper divinity, which before the order could be executed. made him to be of the same substance Constantius, the successor of Con-recommend it to many. cated. Upon this he retired into Pales-ing and moderation.

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;Deus Pater est causa omnium, omnino sine initio, solitarius; Filius autem sine tempore editus est a Patre, et ante secula creatus et fundatus. Non erat antequam nasceretur, sed sine tempore ante omnia natus, solus a solo Patre subsistit." L. iv. p. 59. (P.)

The emperor Constantine, having lately professed, and especially to reappellation, and in this council, after church, and of course would have been much indecent wrangling and violent deemed orthodox. debate, Arius was condemned, and peror, who was afterwards induced to persons, and those so deeply, as this think better of Arius. He, therefore, recalled him from banishment, and or-with the Father, and a kind of rival stantine, and also some others of the of his dignity, at which it is no wonder emperors, favoured the Arians, and in that the minds of many revolted. This those reigns their doctrine was by far circumstance, therefore, of the Arian the most generally received throughout doctrine being the medium between two the Roman empire. The bishops of that great extremes, was alone sufficient to profession held many councils, and they are acknowledged to have been very It is acknowledged that Arius, in the full. But at length Arianism was in course of the controversy, had many a great measure banished from the Roabettors in Egypt, where the difference man empire by the persecutions of the first arose; and among them were emperor Theodosius, who interested many persons distinguished by their himself greatly in favour of the Trinigenius and learning, as well as by their tarian doctrine. The Arians took rerank and station in the world. Not- fuge in great numbers among the Burwithstanding those advantages on the gundians, Goths, Vandals, and other side of Arius, Alexander prevailed so unconquered barbarous nations, whom far, that, in two councils, which he they were a great means of bringing summoned on the occasion, Arius was over to the Christian faith; and all of deprived of his office, and excommuni- them, without exception, professed the Arian doctrine, till it was overpowered tine, where he was countenanced by a by the influence and authority of the great number of bishops, but more es- bishops of Rome. The Vandals were pecially by Eusebius, bishop of Nico- long the support of Arianism in Africa, media, one of the most distinguished but it never recovered its credit after of any in that age, both for his learn- their extirpation from that province by the arms of the emperor Justinian.

So far was the council of Nice from endeavoured in vain to compose these giving general satisfaction, that Hilary, differences in the religion which he had presently afterwards, complains of the Arians as being in all the provinces of concile Arius and Alexander, at length the Roman empire; and, in the next called a general council of bishops at reign, Arianism was very near becoming Nice, the first which had obtained that the universal doctrine of the Christian

The debates occasioned by this fambanished to Illyricum, a part of the ous council made a great revolution Roman empire very remote from Alex- both in the language and in the opiandria, where the controversy ori- nions of those who were deemed ortho-ginated. But, notwithstanding this dox. It is the natural effect of controcondemnation, so far were the Chris- very to push men as far as possible tians of that age from having any from that extreme which they wish to opinion of the infallibility of councils, avoid, so as often to drive them into that the doctrine of Arius triumphed the opposite extreme. This was reboth over the decrees of this celebrated markably the case on this occasion; and assembly, and the authority of the em- no controversy ever interested so many

<sup>1</sup> De Trinitate, L. vi. p. 99. (P.)

did, and indeed continues to do to this Though this creed contains a number

In order to keep quite clear of Arianism, which made Christ to be a mere creature, those who approved of the decrees of the council began to express themselves, as Mosheim acknowledges, in such a manner as that they appeared to imagine that they sufficiently main- Holy Spirit came to be reckoned a distained the unity of the Godhead by as- tinct person in this Trinity. serting that the Father, Son and Holv Spirit were each of them of the same divine nature, as three or more men have each of them the same human nature.

This was certainly giving up the unity of the divine nature; and yet, being obliged by the whole tenor of revelation to maintain the doctrine of only one God, in conjunction with this new doctrine of three separate Gods, such a manifest inconsistency was introduced, as nothing could cover but the pretence that this doctrine of the Trinity was inexplicable by human reason. And then the word mystery, which had before been applied to the doctrine of the Trinity, in common with other things which were simply deemed sacred, began to be used in a new sense, and to signify, not as before, a thing that was secret, and required to be explained, but something absolutely incapable of being explained, something that must be believed, though it could not be understood. But the whole doctrine, as it was afterwards generally professed, and as it now stands in every established Christian church, was not finally settled before the composition of what is called the Athanasian Creed, and its reception into the offices of public worship.

When this creed was made, and by whom, is uncertain. It appeared about the end of the fifth century, and is by some ascribed to Vigilius Tapsensis.2

of as direct contradictions as any person, the most skilled in logic, can draw up, it still keeps its ground, guarded from all human inspection, like the doctrine of transubstantiation, by this new but thin veil of mystery.3 But before I proceed to give a more particular acto "substitute three gods in the place count of this farther change in the docof one."1 And many of them seemed trine, I must note by what steps the

SECTION VII.

OF THE DOCTRINE CONCERNING THE HOLY SPIRIT.

THERE is very little in the Scriptures that could give any idea of the distinct personality of the Holy Spirit, besides the figurative language in which our Lord speaks of the advocate, or comforter, as we render it (παρακλητος), that was to succeed him with the apostles after his ascension. But our Lord's language is, upon many occasions, highly figurative; and it is the less extraordinary that the figure called personification should be made use of by him here, as the peculiar presence of the Spirit of God, which was to be evidenced by the power of working miracles, was to succeed in the place of a real person, viz. himself, and to be to them what he himself had been, viz. their advocate, comforter and guide.

That the apostles did not understand our Lord as speaking of a real person, at least afterwards, when they reflected upon his meaning, and saw the fulfilment of his promise, is evident from about this time. Others are of a different opinion. But it matters little by whom, or where, or when it was composed." Jortin, Eccles. Hist. 1805, III. p. 131.

3 This Creed, of which scarcely anything is intelligible but the damnatory clauses, has very latally been contribute, though unsurcessfully lately been northily, though unsuccessfully, employed to serve the purposes of political retaliation, under the thin veit of zeal for the established religion and the public morals. See the Trial of W. Hone, for a Parody of the Creed of St Athoresius 1819 of St. Athanasius. 1818.

<sup>1</sup> Vol. I. p. 296. (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. ii. Ch. iii.

Jortin's Remarks, IV. p. 313. (P.) "A. 481. Vigilius Tapsensis hath been supposed, by many, to have been the maker of the Athanasian Creed, divine power only. The apostle Paul them, was a real person also. expressly speaks of the spirit of God as the spirit of a man bears to man, 1 Cor. ii. 11: "What man knoweth the things of a man, save the spirit of man, which is in him? Even so the things of God knoweth no man, but the spirit

Besides, the writers of the New Testament always speak of the Holy Spirit as the same spirit by which the ancient prophets were inspired, which was certainly never understood by them to be any other than the Divine Being himself, enabling them, by his supernatural communications, to foretell future events.

Also, the figurative language in which the Holy Spirit and his operations are sometimes described by them, is inconsistent with the idea of his being a separate person; as being baptized with the spirit, being filled with the spirit, quenching the spirit, &c., in all which the idea is evidently that of a power, and not that of a person.

For these reasons I think it possible, that we should never have heard of the opinion of the real distinct personality of the Holy Spirit, if it had not been for the form of baptism supposed, but without reason, to be given in the gospel of Matthew, where the apostles are directed to baptize in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit. For though the meaning of these words, as explained by pretty early writers in the primitive church, is nothing more than "baptizing into that religion which was given by the Father, by means of the Son, and confirmed by miraculous power," and this particular form of words does not appear to have been used in the age of the apostles, who seem to have baptized in the name of Jesus only; yet since this form did come into universal use, after forms began to be thought of importance, and in it the Father and Son were known to be real persons, it their never adopting the same lan- was not unnatural to suppose that the guage, but speaking of the spirit as of a Spirit, being mentioned along with

It was a long time, however, before bearing the same relation to God that this came to be a fixed opinion, and especially an article of faith, the Christian writers before and after the council of Nice generally speaking of the Holy Spirit in a manner that may be interpreted either of a person or of a power. But it is evident, that when they seem to speak of the Holy Spirit as of a person, they suppose that person to be much inferior to God, and even to Christ. Some of them might possibly suppose that the Holy Spirit was an emanation from the Divine Essence, and similar to the Logos itself; but others of them speak of the Holy Spirit as a creature made by Christ, by whom they supposed all other creatures to have been made.

> With respect to the apostolical fathers, their language on this subject is so much that of the Scriptures, that we are not able to collect from it any peculiar or precise ideas. It is probable, therefore, that they considered the Holy Spirit as a power, and not a person.

Justin Martyr, who was one of the first that supposed the Logos to be Christ, never says, in express words. that the Spirit is God, in any sense; and when he mentions worship as due to the Spirit, it is in the same sentence in which he speaks of it as due to "Him," says he, meaning angels. God, "and the Son that came from him, and the host of other good Angels, who accompany and resemble him, together with the prophetic Spirit, we adore and venerate; in word and truth honouring them." In another place he says, "we place the Son in the second place, and the prophetic Spirit in the third." Again, he places "the Logos in the second place, and the Spirit which moved on the water, in the third."3 It is not improbable but that this writer might consider the Son inferior to the Father.

<sup>1</sup> Apol. I. 27. (P.)
2 Ibid. p. 19. (P.)
8 Ibid. pp. 87, 88. (P.)

Tertullian in one place evidently Logos, and therefore it is plain that he had no idea of a proper third person in the Trinity. Speaking of the Spirit of God which overshadowed the Virgin Mary, he said, "It is that Spirit which the operation of the spirit, and those to conclude that he must be a divine two are one." But in another place person. But it was a long time before God and the Son; as the fruit, proceeding from the branch, is the third from the root."2

Origen speaks of it as a doubt whether the Holy Spirit be not a creature of the Son, since all things are said to have been made by him.3

Novatian says, "that Christ is greater than the Paraclete; for the Paraclete would not receive from Christ, unless he was less than Christ."4

The author of the Recognitions, a spurious but an ancient work, and never charged with heresy, says, "that the Holy Spirit, the Paraclete, is neither God, nor the Son, but was made by him that was made, or begotten, (factus per factum) viz. by the Son, the Father only being not begotten nor made."5

One reason why those fathers who had modified their theological tenets by the principles of the heathen philosophy did not readily fall into the notion of the personality, or at least the divinity, of the Holy Spirit, might be that there was nothing like it in the philosophy of Plato, which had assisted them so much in the deification of Christ. A third principle was indeed sometimes mentioned by the Platonists, but this was either the soul of the world, or the material creation the Holy Spirit as a person, but as itself; for there are different represenmuch inferior to the Son, as he made tations of the Platonic doctrine on this subject.

At length, however, the constant confounds the Holy Spirit with the usage of the form of baptism mentioned by Matthew, together with the literal interpretation of our Saviour's description of the Holy Spirit, pro-bably, gave most of the primitive Christians an idea of its being a person; we call the word. For the Spirit is the and the rest of the language of Scripsubstance of the word, and the word ture would naturally enough lead them he says, "the Spirit is a third after these things coalesced into a regular system.

The fathers of the council of Nice said nothing about the divinity, or the personality of the Holy Spirit; nor was it customary in the time of Basil to call the Holy Spirit God. Hilary interprets baptizing in the name of the Father, the Son and the Holy Spirit, by the equivalent expressions of the author, the only begotten, and the gift.6

That little is said concerning the separate divinity of the Spirit of God in the Scripture is evident to every body; but the reason that Epiphanius gives for it will not be easily imagined. In order to account for the apostles saying so little concerning the divinity of the Holy Spirit, and omitting the mention of him after that of the Father and the Son; (as when Paul says, "there is one God and Father of all, of whom are all things, and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things,") he says, that "the apostles writing by the inspiration of the Spirit, he did not choose to introduce much commendation of himself, lest it should give us an example of commending ourselves."7

What is most particularly remarkable is, that the fathers of the council of Sardica, held in 347, a council called by the authority of the emperors Constance and Constantius, a hundred and sixty bishops being present, of whom Athanasius himself was one, and two

<sup>1</sup> Adv. Praxeam, C. xxvi. p. 515. (P.)
2 Ibid. C. viii. Opera, p. 504. (P.)
8 In Joannem, Opera, II. p. 276. (P.)
4 C. xxiv. (P.)
L. iii. C. viii (P.

<sup>6</sup> De Trinitate, L. ii. Opera, p. 22. (P.) # Hær. 57, Opera, I. p. 485. (P.)

the Father, Son and Spirit, was one was without the Son, nor the Son without the Father,) did not distinguish between the Holy Spirit and the Logos, any more than Tertullian did the interference of an orthodox emin the passage quoted above. They peror in the business. say, "We believe in the Paraclete, the At length, in what is called the Holy Spirit, whom the Lord himself second general council, which was held promised and sent. He did not suffer, but the man which he put on, and which Christ took from the Virgin Mary, which could suffer: for man is liable to death, but God is immortal."1 Basil says that "the Spirit is superior to a created being, but the title unbegotten (αγεννητος) is what no man can be so absurd as to presume to give to any other than to the supreme God." Then speaking of his not being begotten, like the Son, but proceeding from the Father, he says, "neither let any man think that our refusing to had been determined at the time of call the Spirit a creature is denying his personality" (ὑποστασις).2

The subject might have longer remained in this unsettled state, if Macedonius, an eminent Semi-Arian, who had been expelled from the church of Constantinople, had not expressly denied the divinity of the Holy Spirit; maintaining, as some say, that it was only the Spirit or power of God; or, according to others, that he was a the decrees of this council. creature like the angels, but superior This opinion being much to them. talked of, had many abettors, especially in Egypt. But Athanasius, who was then concealed in the deserts of that country, hearing of it, wrote against it, and he is said to have been the first who applied the word consubstantial to the Spirit, it having before been applied to the Son only.

It was some time, however, before any public notice was taken of this opinion of Macedonius; and in a hundred more approving of the decrees council held at Lampsacum, in 365. after they had been sent to them, (a a council demanded by the Catholic council in which it was decreed that bishops, though the greater number of those who actually met were Arians. hypostasis, which they say the heretics the opinion of Macedonius, as Socrates call ovoca, and that the Father never the historian observes, appeared to have gained more ground than ever, and would probably have been the received opinion, had it not been for > at Constantinople in 381, under Theodosius the Great, the opinion of Macedonius was condemned, though thirtysix of the bishops present were in favour of it. In the creed drawn up by this council, it is said, "We believe in the Holy Spirit, the Lord and Giver of life, who proceeded from the Father, and who ought to be adored and glorified with the Father and the Son. and who spake by the prophets." This > clause is now generally annexed to the Nicene Creed, though no such thing that council.

Thus, at length, the great outline of the present doctrine of the Trinity was completed, though many points of less consequence still remain to be adjusted, as we shall see in the prosecution of this subject; and the doctrine of the consubstantiality of the Spirit with the Father and the Son, though implied, is not directly expressed in

As the doctrine of the divinity of Christ was very unpopular at first, so that of the divinity of the Holy Spirit appears to have been so too, as we may clearly infer from the writings of Basil. He speaks of all people being interested in the debate on the subject, and even of his own disciples, as presuming to act the part of judges in the case; asking questions not to learn, but to puzzle and confound their teachers. The argument by which he represents himself and his orthodox brethren as

<sup>1</sup> Theodorit. L. ii. C. viii. p. 82. (P.) <sup>2</sup> Adv. Eunomium, L. iii. Opera, I. p. 758. (P.)

<sup>3</sup> Hom. xxvii. Contra Sabellianos, I. p 523. (P.)

ing:—Everything must necessarily be power and glory. either unbegotten, begotten or created. Both the term the good father's answer to this objection, I must refer my reader to his twenty-seventh homily which is against the Sabellians.

the advantage which this doctrine gave The first appearance the Heathens. of the word Trinity is in the writings duction of new objects of worship by of Theophilus, bishop of Antioch, but it is not clear that by it he meant a by the Heathens; and as it was chiefly Trinity consisting of the same persons that it was afterwards made to consist of, and certainly not a Trinity of persons in the Godhead. He says, that the three days which preceded the creation of the heavenly bodies on the fourth day, in the first chapter of stance. Genesis, represent the sacred mystery of the Trinity, viz. "God, the word and wisdom." He adds, "the fourth day is the type of man, who needs light, that there may be God, the word, wisdom, man." This passage is certainly obscure enough, and it could hardly have been imagined from it that by wisdom he meant the Holy Spirit, the third person in the modern Trinity, had not the same term been used by other writers, and especially by Tatian, who was contemporary with Theophilus. For he also makes a Trinity, of God, his word, and his wisdom. About the same time Irenæus mentions the same three members, though he has not the word Trinity. is always," says he, "with God, his word and wisdom, his Son and Spirit, by whom and in whom he made everything freely."2 After this we find the word Trinity in common use, but long before it was imagined that the three is but one God. persons which constituted it, were con-

<sup>1</sup> Ad Autolycum, L. ii. p.
<sup>2</sup> Ibid. L. iv. C. xxxvii. p. 330, (P.)

most frequently urged was the follow- substantial, coeternal, and equal in Both the term and the doctrine of If the Holy Spirit be unbegotten, he the Trinity occur in a piece entitled must be the same with the Father, and Expositio Fidei, ascribed to Justin if he be begotten, he must be the Son: Martyr; but this is evidently spurious. if therefore, he be a person distinct and of a date much later than the time from both, he must be a creature. For of Justin. It is remarkable too, that Clemens Alexandrinus, who was in the very centre of the Platonism of those days, and who did not write till after Theophilus, never uses the term but I shall close this article with a short once, and then it is to denote the bond account of the word Trinity, and of of Christian graces, faith, hope and charitu.3

> We cannot wonder that this intro-Christians, should not pass unnoticed a wish to recommend their religion to others, that gave them their original bias towards exalting the person of Christ, they were very properly punished by the advantage which the Heathens took of this very circum-

> The incarnation of the eternal word, appears to have been a subject of ridicule to Celsus, who compares it to the fable of the transformations of Jupiter, in the history of Danaë, &c. He also justifies the Polytheism of the Heathens by the example of the Christians in this respect. "If Christians," says he, "worshipped only one God, they might have some pretence for despising all others; whereas they render these immense honours to a mere upstart."4 To this, Origen answers, by alleging the text, "I and my Father are one," explaining it by all the disciples being of one heart and one mind. But so might the heathen gods have been one.

> The emperor Julian did not overlook this obvious topic of reproach to Christians. He particularly upbraided them with calling Mary the mother of God, and charges them with contradicting Moses, who taught that there

<sup>3</sup> Strom. L. iv. p. 495. (P.) 4 Contra Celsum, L. viii. p. 385.

SECTION VIII.

THE HISTORY OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY FROM THE COUNCILS OF NICE AND CONSTANTINOPLE, TILL AFTER THE EUTYCHIAN CONTROVERSY.

Before I relate what was peculiar to those who obtained the name of orthodox in this controversy, I shall just mention the divisions of the Arians, which contributed much to the prejudice of their cause, as they often proceeded to great violence against each other.

The original and proper Arians held simply, that the Son was created out of nothing, some time before the creation of the world, which they said was made by him. But presently after, there arose among them a sect that were called Semi-Arians, the chief of whom were George, of Laodicea, and Basilius, of Ancyra, who held that, though Christ was a creature, yet he was, by special privilege, made of the same nature with the Father, whereas the proper Arians maintained that he was wholly of a different nature.

In 391 we find mention of another division among the Arians, viz. whether the Father could be properly so called from all eternity, before he had a Son. On this frivolous question, of mere words, the Arians are said to have divided with great bitterness, so as to have formed separate assemblies. But it must be considered that the history of these divisions is only given by their enemies. Before I give any account of more modern Arianism, I shall proceed with the state of Trinitarianism after the council of Nice.

No sooner was the general outline of the doctrine of three persons in one God settled, but the orthodox began to divide upon questions of great nicety; and human passions and interests always mixing with these debates, the different parties anathematized each other with great violence.

The first dispute was about the use of the word hypostasis, which we now render person, but which had generally been considered as very nearly synonymous with essence, (ovora). In general, the Greeks understood it in a different sense; and having in view the Sabellians, who were said to assert the identity of the Father, Son and Spirit, said that there were three hypostases in the divine nature. On the other hand, the Latins, willing to oppose the Arians, who made the Son to be of a different nature from the Father, usually said that there was but one hypostasis in the Trinity; and we have seen that the fathers of the council of Sardica had decided in the same manner.

This dispute terminated more happily than almost any other in the whole compass of church history. For a council being held on the subject, at Alexandria, in 372, the fathers found that they had been disputing about words, and therefore they exhorted Christians not to quarrel upon the subject. Ever after, however, the phraseology of the Greeks prevailed, and the orthodox always say that there are three hypostases, or persons, in the unity of the divine essence.1

By this happy device, and that of declaring the doctrine to be incomprehensible, the Trinitarians imagine that they sufficiently screen themselves from the charge of Polytheism and Idolatry. Whereas, if they did but pretend to affix any ideas to their words, they must see that the device can avail them nothing. If by person, or any other term which they apply to each of the three members of the Trinity, they mean an intelligent principle, having a real consciousness, they must, to all intents and purposes, admit three Gods. This was thought to be unavoidable by the council of Sardica, which therefore asserted one hypostasis, in agreement with the original idea of the Son being an emanation from the Father, but not separated from his essence. Whereas, now, the original idea, on which the doctrine of the divinity of Christ was formed, is entirely abandoned, and in reality

<sup>1</sup> See Suicer's Thesaurus, under the word Papostasis. (P.)

another doctrine is received; a doctrine perial authority, at length it became which all the Ante-Nicene fathers, who extinct, had no idea of any distinction between reprobated, as downright Polytheism. The Arians, in a council held at Constantinople in 360, rejected the use of the word hypostasis, as applied to the Divine Being.

There seems to have been no reason why Christ should have been supposed to have had any more than one intelligent principle, and yet we have seen that some of the Ante-Nicene fathers thought there was in Christ a proper human soul, besides the logos, which constituted his divinity. But perhaps they might have been reconciled to this opinion by the popular notion of demons possessing men, who yet had souls of their own. Or by anima, which is the word that Tertullian uses, they might mean the sensitive principle in man, as distinct from the animus, or rational principle, a distinction which we find made by Cicero and others.

However, after the council of Nice. and about the year 370, Apollinaris the younger, bishop of Laodicea, who had distinguished himself by taking an active part against the Arians, being attached to the principles of the Platonic philosophy, (according to which there are three principles in man, viz. his body, together with the rational and sensitive soul, but not more than these three,) thought that the body, the sensitive principle, and the logos, were sufficient to constitute Christ, and therefore he asserted that Christ had no proper human soul. In consequence of this, he was charged with maintaining that the Deity suffered on the cross, but whether he himself avowed this opinion, does not appear. doctrine, which was so far analogous to that of the Arians, that it supposed only one intelligent principle in Christ, was well received by great numbers of Christians in all the eastern provinces of the Roman empire; but it was condemned in a synod at Rome, and being likewise borne down by im-

Whiston, who was certainly well hypostasis and essence, would have read in Christian antiquity, asserts, that Athanasius seems never to have heard of the opinion of Christ having any other soul than his divinity, and that the idea of a human and rational soul in Christ was one of the last branches of this heresy.1 This writer also asserts, that there does not appear in Athanasius's Treatise on the Incarnation the least sign of the hypostatical union, or communication of properties, which he says the orthodox have been since forced to devise in support of their notions.2

This business, however, was finally settled on the occasion of what is called the heresy of Nestorius, bishop of Constantinople, which, though small in its origin, has had great consequences, the effects of it remaining to this day.

This being an age in which great compliments were paid to the Virgin Mary, among other appellations, it became customary to call her the mother of God, and this was a favourite term with the followers of Apollinaris. This phraseology Nestorius, who had distinguished himself by his opposition to the Apollinarians, declared to be improper, and said it was sufficient to call her the mother of Christ. To justify this, he was led to assert that there are two distinct natures in Christ, the divine and the human, and that Mary was the mother of the latter only.

This doctrine had many followers, and even the monks of Egypt were induced, in consequence of it, to discontinue their custom of calling Mary the mother of God. Cyril, then bishop of Alexandria, a man of a haughty and imperious temper, was highly offended at this; and having engaged in his interest Celestine, bishop of Rome, he assembled a council at Alexandria, in 430, and in this council the opinion of Nestorius was condemned, and a severe anathema was pronounced against him.

<sup>1</sup> Collection of Records, p. 74. (P.) 2 Ibid. p. 75. (P.)

Nestorius, not being moved by this, at length Theodosius the younger called a general council at Ephesus, in 431, in which Cyril, though a party concerned, presided; and without hearing Nestocouncil, he was condemned, and sent into banishment, where he ended his

In this factious manner was the great doctrine of the hypostatical union of the two natures in Christ (which has ever since been the doctrine of what is called the catholic church) established. The opinion of Nestorius, however, was zealously maintained by Barsumas. bishop of Nisibis; and from this place it was spread over the East, where it continues to be the prevailing doctrine to this day. The opinion of Nestorius was also received in the famous school of Edessa, which contributed greatly to the same event.

This controversy was, in fact, of considerable consequence, there being some analogy between the doctrine of Nestorius and that of the ancient Unitarians, or modern Socinians; as they both maintained that Christ was a mere man. But, whereas the Socinians say that the divinity of the Father resided in Christ, the Nestorians say that it was the Logos, or the second person of the Trinity, that resided in him.

But "the union between the Son of God and the son of man," they said, ".... was not an union of nature, or of person, but only of will and affection; that Christ was therefore to be carefully distinguished from God, who dwelt in him, as in his temple." In this manner did the Nestorians, who had had several disputes among themselves. settle the matter, "in several councils, held at Seleucia."

The opposition that was made to the formed by Eutyches, abbot of a convent of monks at Constantinople, who had had a great hand in the condemnaexcommunicated Cyril in his turn. But tion of Nestorius. Eutyches was so far from being of the opinion of Nestorius, that he asserted that there was but one nature in Christ, and that was the divine, or the incarnate word. rius, and during the absence of many Hence he was thought to deny the bishops who had a right to sit in that human nature of Christ; but he was generally supposed to mean that the human nature was absorbed in the divine, as a drop of honey would be absorbed, and no more distinguished, if it should fall into the sea. There were other explanations and distinctions occasioned by this doctrine, which I think it not worth while to recite.

It may be proper, however, to observe, that the minds of many persons, especially in Egypt, were prepared for this opinion by another which had obtained there, and which I have observed to have been maintained by Hilary, viz. that the body of Christ was incorruptible, and not subject to any natural infirmity. Theodosius the Great2 fell into this opinion in his old age. cording to this doctrine, the human nature of Christ, being of so exalted a kind, might easily be supposed to have become so in consequence of its being absorbed, as it were, in the divine, so as to partake of its properties. was, therefore, no wonder that they should express themselves as if they considered Christ to have, in fact, but one nature.3

Eutyches was condemned by a council held at Constantinople, probably in 448, and in consequence of it was excommunicated and deposed. But he was acquitted by another council held at Ephesus, in 449. However, in a general council, called the fourth, held at Chalcedon, in 451, he was condemned finally, and from that time it has been the doctrine of what is called the catholic church, that, "in Christ there are two distinct natures, united in one heresy of Nestorius produced another, person, but without any change, mixture, or confusion."

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mosheim, I. pp. 411, 412. (P.) Cent. v. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. xii.

<sup>12</sup> This is evidently an error. The author means the emperor Justinian. Sueur, A.D. 563. (P.)

The doctrine of Eutyches continued to be professed by many, notwithstanding the decrees of the council. It was almost universally received in the patriarchates of Antioch and Alexandria, and it is found in the East to this day. In 535 the Eutychians divided, some of them maintaining that there were some things which Christ did not know, while others asserted that he knew everything, even the time of the day of judgment.1

By the decision of the council of Chalcedon, the modern doctrine of the Trinity was nearly completed, the union of the two natures in Christ corresponding to that of the three persons in the Deity; and it was thought to answer many objections to the divinity of Christ from the language of the Scriptures, in a better manner than the Ante-Nicene fathers had been able to do. These frankly acknowledged a real superiority in the Father with respect to the whole nature of Christ; but the later Trinitarians, by means of this convenient distinction of two natures in one person, could suppose Christ to be fully equal to the Father as God, at the same time that he was inferior to him as man: to know the day of judgment as God, no less than the Father himself, though, at the same time, he was entirely ignorant of it considered as man.

It might seem, however, to be some objection to this scheme, that, according to it, the evangelists must have intended to speak of one part of Christ only, and to affirm concerning that, what was by no means true of his whole person, at the same time that their language cannot be interpreted but so as to include his whole pesson. For, certainly, it is not natural to suppose that by the word Christ they meant anything less than his whole person: much less can we suppose that our Saviour, speaking concerning himself, could mean only a part of himself. By means of this distinction, modern Trinitarians are able to say that the human nature of Christ only suffered; and yet its union with the divine nature (though it was so imperfect an union as to communicate no sensation to it) was sufficient to give it the same merit and efficacy as if it had been divine. To such wretched expedients, which do not deserve a serious consideration, are the advocates for this Christian polytheism reduced.

1 See Rutt's Priestley, Vol. II. p. 397. Note.

Thus, to bring the whole into a short compass, the first general council gave the Son the same nature with the Father, the second admitted the Holv Spirit into the Trinity, the third assigned to Christ a human soul in conjunction with the eternal Logos, the fourth settled the hypostatical union of the divine and human nature of Christ, and the fifth affirmed, that, in consequence of this union, the two natures constituted only one person. It requires a pretty good memory to retain these distinctions, it being a business of words only, and ideas not concerned in it.

Before I proceed any farther, it may not be amiss to give a brief account of some other particulars relating to the Eutychian doctrine, though they were hardly heard of in this part of the world; and the opinions that were then entertained in the East are not worth reciting, except to show into what absurdities men may fall, when they get out of the road of plain truth and common sense.

The decisions of the council of Chalcedon were condemned by those who called themselves Monophysites, a sect which sprung from the Eutychians. They maintained that the divinity and humanity of Christ were so united, as to constitute only one nature, yet, without any change, confusion, or mixture of the two natures; saying, that in Christ there is one nature, but that nature is twofold and compounded.

In the sixth century, the Monophysites acquired new vigour by the labours of a monk, whose name was Jacob, surnamed Baradeus, or Zanzales, and who died bishop of Edessa. From him the sect of Monophysites now go by the nexed to them, would have been made, nians, who are of that denomination, the consciences of Christians. are governed by a bishop of their own, and are distinguished by various rites and opinions from the other Monophysites.

It was long debated among the Monophysites whether the body of Christ was created or uncreated, and whether it was corruptible or not; and some of them maintained that though it was corruptible, it was never actually corrupted, but was preserved from corruption by the energy of the divine nature. The Monophysites had also many controversies concerning the sufferings of Christ; and among them Xenias of Hierapolis maintained that Christ suffered pain not in his nature, but by a submissive act of his will. Some of them also affirmed, that all things were known to the divine nature of Christ. but not to his human nature.

"From the controversies with the Monophysites, arose the sect of the Tritheists, whose chief was John Ascusnage, a Syrian philosopher," who, "imagined in the Deity three natures or substances, joined together by no common essence." The great defender of this opinion was "John Philoponus. an Alexandrian philosopher." A third sect was "that of the Damianists, who were so called from Damian, bishop of Alexandria.... They distinguished the divine essence from the three persons," and "denied that each person was God, when considered in itself, and abstractedly from the other two. But they affirmed, .... that there was a common divinity, by the joint participation of which each person was God."1

Had these subtle distinctions occurred while the Roman empire was united under one head, councils would probably have been called to decide concerning them, solemn decrees, with the usual tremendous anathemas an-

<sup>1</sup> Mosheim, I. pp. 473, 474. (P.) Cent. vi. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. x.

name of Jacobites in the East. Mono- and the Athanasian Creed would not physites were afterwards divided into a then, perhaps, have been the most pervariety of other sects; and the Arme- plexed and absurd thing imposed upon

SECTION IX.

THE STATE OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY IN THE LATIN CHURCH.

From the time of the complete separation of the eastern and western empires, the Greek and Latin churches had but little connexion, and their writings being in different languages, were very little known to each other; few of the Latins being able to read Greek, or the Greeks Latin. Though, therefore, the members of both churches were much addicted to theological discussions, they took a quite different turn, and except upon very particular occasions, did not interfere with each other.

With respect to the doctrine of the Trinity, there was this difference between the eastern and western churches. that as the eastern empire was under one head, and the emperor resided at Constantinople, which was the centre of all the Grecian literature, he frequently interfered with the disputes of the ecclesiastics; in consequence of which councils were called, decrees were made, and the orthodox articles of faith immediately enforced by imperial authority. Whereas the western empire being broken into many parts, and the studious theologians dispersed in different convents all over Europe, their speculations were more free; and though the authority of the Pope preserved a kind of union among them, yet the popes of the middle ages being sovereign princes, seldom interfered with religious tenets, unless they had some apparent influence with respect to their spiritual or temporal power. This was perhaps the reason why no new councils were called, and no new decrees were made respecting the doctrine of the Trinity.

Since, however, what had been de- But the first who seems to have led themselves to devising new modifica- faith, was Austin, who flourished after tions, and new modes of explaining the the great outline of the doctrine of the old ones. In this field the human fa-runity was drawn in the general coun-culties have, perhaps, appeared to as cils of Nice and Constantinople. better objects. their use.

objects of their inquiries were, I do not of greater men, with respect to acuteness of speculation, than Peter Lombard and Thomas Aquinas, especially the latter. When I only look over the contents of his Summa, and see the manner in which a few articles are executed, (for no Protestant, I imagine, will ever think it worth his while to read many sections in that work,) and consider the time in which he lived. how much he wrote besides, and the age at which he died, viz. forty-seven, I am filled with astonishment.<sup>2</sup> He seems to have exhausted every subject that his own wonderful ingenuity could start, and among the rest the doctrine of the Trinity has by no means been overlooked by him.

1 Master of the Sentences, named from his native country of Lomberdy, He was bishop of Paris in 1159, and died in 1164.—Nouv. Diet. Hist. IV. p. 1052.

2 He died in 1274. His Summa is thus described by a writer of his own church: "Solide dans l'établissement des principes, exact dans les raisonnemens, clair dans l'expression, il pourroit être le meilleur modèle des Théologiens, all avait traifs moins de ouestjons inutiles, s'il s'il avoit traité moins de questions inutiles, s'il avoit eu plus de soin d'écarter quelques preuves peu solides." Ibid. V. p. 552.

termined by the first general councils the way, though in a remote preceding was received in the West, as well as in period, to the refinements of the schoolthe East, the liberty of speculating on men in later ages, and whose authority this subject was very much confined; established the principal articles of so that instead of inventing doctrines orthodoxy, so that his opinions were materially new, divines rather confined generally received as the standard of great advantage as in any other, within In this writer we find the doctrine the whole compass of speculation. We of the Trinity treated in a manner conare only apt to regret that such won- siderably different from that of prederful abilities, and so much time, ceding writers. For, in his time the should have been employed on no doctrine established by the general But when, in some councils had affected the language future period, all the labours of the commonly used in treating the subject; mind of man shall be compared, it so that words had begun to be used in will, I doubt not, appear, that the senses unknown to the ancients. Thus, studies of the schoolmen, to whom I before the council of Nice, whenever am now alluding, were not without the word God occurred in the Scriptures, and the Supreme God was meant Frivolous, however, as I think the by it, it had always been understood as referring to the Father only; and in think that the world could ever boast this manner all the ancient fathers explained every passage in which the word God, as distinguished from Christ, occurred; and they had recourse to such expedients as have been mentioned in the early period of this history, to account for the divinity of Christ, without supposing that he had any title to be comprehended under that general expression.

> But in the writings of Austin we often find the words God and Trinitu to be synonymous. For he maintained that all the three persons are to be understood, though they are not expressly mentioned, and he allowed no real prerogative whatever to the Father: an idea which would have staggered all the Nicene fathers. So far was he from supposing that the Father was truly greater than the Son, that he says, "two or three of the persons are not greater than any one of them." This, says he, "the carnal mind does not comprehend, because it can perceive nothing to be true, but with respect to things that are created, and cannot perceive the truth itself, by which they are created."1 He con- himself and the Holy Spirit not exdemns those who had said that the Father alone is immortal and invisible.2 and he blames Hilary for ascribing eternity to the Father only.3 He so far, however, adheres to the language of his predecessors, as to say that the Father alone is God of God (ex Deo).4 But by this he could not mean what the Nicene fathers meant by it.

Austin is also bolder, and more copious in his illustrations of the doctrine of the Trinity, by comparisons with other things; though the doctrine being farther removed from human comprehension, it was then become much less capable of being explained in that way. Among other things, he of great darkness in the western church, finds a resemblance of the Trinity in the memory, understanding and will of man.5 But then none of these powers, separately taken, constitute a man; and his other comparisons are, by his own confession, still more lame and inadequate than this.

As my readers will probably wish to see in what manner some of those texts of Scripture, which are usually alleged in support of the doctrine of the Trinity. were understood by this writer, I shall recite his interpretation of a few on which they have seen the comments of the earlier fathers, that they may see how the doctrine itself had changed in his time. He explains John xiv. 28, Mu Father is greater than I, by saying, that "Christ having emptied himself form of a servant, was then less, not only than his Father, but even than himself, even at the very time in which he was speaking; for he did not so take the form of a servant, as to lose the form of God."6 He explains Christ giving up the kingdom to God, even the Father, by saying that the whole Trinity is intended in that expression, cluded.7 His manner of explaining Mark xiii. 32, in which it is said that the Son knows not the time of the day of judgment, is still more extraordinary. For he says, that by not knowing is to be understood his not making others to know.8 He seems to understand Philip ii. 6, of a perfect equality with God. And, lastly, he says, that by the Father and Son being one, we are to understand the consubstantial unity of the Son with the Father.9 Most of these interpretations were then quite new; but now these, or such as these. are in the mouths of all Trinitarians.

After Austin, we find a long period and in this period his credit was firmly established; so that we find him quoted as an authority, almost equal to that of the councils, and even the Scriptures themselves. But the age of great refinement in speculation began about the time of Berenger and Anselm, two of the greatest scholars of their time; and had not the former of them been unfortunately heterodox in the doctrine of the eucharist, 10 he would have been the most celebrated for his learning and abilities of all his contemporaries.

Anselm, though he writes with wonderful acuteness, is not systematical. He does not professedly treat of the Trinity, and indeed we find little in him that is particularly remarkable on this subject, besides an obscure intimaof his former glory, and being in the tion that the doctrine might have been known by natural reason. In proving

? Ibid. L. i. C. x. p. 250. (P.)
8 Ibid. C. xii. p. 253. (P.)
9 Ibid. L. iv. C. ix. p. 303. (P.)
10 Berengurius, archdeacon of Angers, was condemned in a council at Rome, in 1059, for maintaining the errors of John Scotus Erigena. which were afterwards revived by the Sucra-menturians. See Nouv. Dict. Hist. I. p. 382. "Berengarius was for almost thirty years "Beforgarius was for almost inntry years together batted in one council after another, and died about the year 1988." See "Bertram, concerning the Body and Blood of the Lord," 1683, p. 37. From Bertram, Ridley and his brethren learned their qualified notion of Christ's presence in the Sacrament, of which rite scarcely any churchman before Hoadley ventured to give a plain account.

<sup>11</sup> Ad Romanos, C. i. Anselmi Opera, 1612, II. p. 11. (P.) Anselm, archbishop of Canterbury,

De Trinitate, L. viii, C. i. Augustini Opera,
 1569, III. p. 346. (P.)
 Ibid. L. ii. C. viii. p. 267. (P.)
 Ibid. L. vi. C. x. p. 332. (P.)
 Ibid. L. xv. C. xvii. p. 463. (P.)
 Ibid. L. x. C. xvi. p. 376. (P.)
 Ibid. L. x. C. xvi. p. 276. (P.)
 Ibid. L. i. C. vii. pp. 246, 260. (P.)

the eternity of Christ, he says, "Christ is the wisdom of God, and the power of God; if, therefore, God had ever been without Christ, he must have been without wisdom and without power."1 And he says, that "Christ by his own power rose from the dead."2 Lastly, in answer to the question why we may not as well say that there are two persons in Christ, as two natures, he says. "as in God, the Father, Son, and Spirit, are three persons, and but one God; so in Christ, the Godhead is one person, and the manhood another person; and yet these are not two persons. but one person."3 My reader, I hope, will not be disappointed in finding no great light on this subject from this learned archbishop; nor must he form much higher expectations either from Peter Lombard or Thomas Aguinas.

Peter Lombard has many new distinctions on the subject of the Trinity; and, as an article of some curiosity, I shall recite a few things from him, as well as from Thomas Aquinas, who wrote in the century following, and who is abundantly more copious, as well as more systematical.

Peter Lombard illustrates Austin's comparison of the three persons in the Trinity, by the memory, understanding and will of man, observing, that they all comprehend one another. "Thus we can say, I remember that I remem- thought it worth his while to take it ber, that I understand, and that I will; I can also say I understand that I understand, that I remember, and that I will; and, lastly, I can say I will that I will, understand, and remember."4 He decides the question whether the Father begat the Son willingly or unwillingly, by saying that he begat him by nature, and not by will (natura non voluntate<sup>5</sup>), so that he retained the idea without adopting the offensive expression nolens. It is something extraordinary that he owns that he cannot distinguish between the generation of the Son and the procession of the Spirit.6

After asserting, after Austin, that no one person in the Trinity is less than the other two, or than all the three, he says, "he that can receive this, let him receive it; he that cannot, let him, however, believe it; and let him pray that what he believes he may understand."7 In this, which is certainly not a little curious, this subtle writer seems to have been followed by some moderns; and the last article I shall quote from him is not less curious. though I believe none of the moderns will choose to adopt his language; which, however, is very honest. After asking why, as we say that the Father is God. the Son God, and the Holy Spirit God, we may not say there are three Gods; "Is it," says he, "because the Scripture does not say so? But neither does the Scripture say that there are three persons in the Trinity. But this does not contradict the Scripture, which says nothing about it: whereas it would be a contradiction to the Scripture to say there are three Gods, because Moses says, Hear, O Israel, the Lord thy God is one Lord."8 As to a contradiction with respect to reason and common sense, this writer seems to have made no difficulty of it, not having into consideration.

I must mention another peculiarity of Peter Lombard, because it was the occasion of some controversy. He, like the Damianists in the East, made some distinction "between the divine essence and the three persons in the Godhead." But on this he was attacked in a large work by Joachim, abbot of Flora, who "denied that there was anything, or any essence, that belonged in common to the three persons...by which doctrine the substantial union between the three persons was taken away," and nothing but a numerical or moral union was left.

died in 1109, aged 75. See Biog. Brit. I. pp. 205-215. There is a list of his works, p. 213, note.

1 Ad Cov. C. i. II. p. 102. (P.)
2 Ad Rom. C. x. II. p. 67. (P.
3 De Incarnatione, C. v. III. p. 39. (P.)
4 Petri Lombardi Sententiæ, L. i. Dist. iii.
p. 21. (P.)
5 Ibid. L. i. Dist. vi. p. 42. (P.)

<sup>Ibid, Dist, xii<sup>p</sup> p. 73, (P.)
Ibid, L. i. Dis', xix, p. 115, (B. Ibid, Dist, xxiii, p. 136, (P.)</sup>

This explication was, therefore, condemned by Innocent the Third, in 1215.1

Though Thomas Aquinas writes very largely on the subject of the Trinity, he has not much that is peculiar to himself. He defines a person to "be an individual substance of a rational nature,"2 and pretends to demonstrate, à priori, that there must be more persons than one in the divine essence.3 but not more than three.4 And, lastly, after asserting that the Holy Spirit proceeds from the Son as well as from the Father, he says, that the Father and Son are but one origin (unum principium) of the Holy Spirit.5

SECTION X.

THE HISTORY OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE TRINITY AFTER THE EUTYCHIAN CON-TROVERSY.

THE doctrine of the Trinity, as it was ever held in the western part of the world, had now received its last improvements; and indeed continued with little alteration from the time of Austin. A few more subtleties, however, were started upon the subject, especially in the East, which require to be noticed.

In 519, some monks of Scythia, at the head of whom was P. Fullo, having a dispute with one Victor, a deacon in Constantinople, whom they accused of being a Nestorian, insisted upon his. saving that one of the persons in the Trinity was crucified for us, an expreswhich no Nestorian would use. both appealed to the Pope's legates, who were then at Constantinople. But though these thought the words capable of a good sense, yet, since they might be suspected of the Eutychian

2 Thome Aquinatis Summa, 1631, Pt. i. Qu. xxix. Art. i. p. 70. (P.)

1 Ibid. Qu. xxx. p. 72. (P.)

4 Ibid. Qu. xxxii. p. 80. (P.)

5 Ibid. Qu. xxxii. p. 85. (P.)

heresy, they thought it was better not to use them. The monks, not satisfied with this decision, appealed to Pope Hormisdas, who condemned the expression, but his successor, John, approved of it. Then, finding that the expression was not generally relished, they proposed to change it, and to say that the Logos, or the Word, had suffered for us: but this was also thought to savour too much of Eutychianism.6 Happily this controversy ended without any serious consequences.

It has been observed, that all the ancient, orthodox fathers supposed that there was a time when the Son of God was not, and that the Logos became a person immediately before the creation, having been originally nothing but an attribute of the divine nature. This opinion, it seems, was not quite extinct in the year 529. For we then find a decree of a synod of Vaison, in France, condemning it, and the preamble shows that the opinion was pretty general: "Because," say they, "not only in the apostolic see, but also in all the East, and in all Africa and Italy, heretics blasphemed, saying that the Son of God was not always with the Father, but had a beginning in time, they ordered it to be chanted in the common service, Glory to the Father, and to the Son, and to the Holy Spirit, as it was in the beginning." A form which has continued to be in use ever since.7

The next controversy of which I shall give an account, shows, at the same time, the subtlety of the mind of man in devising distinctions, and the impotence of power to restrain or guide it. In the seventh century, the emperor Heraclius, considering the detriment which his empire received from the migration of the persecuted Nestorians, and their settlement in Persia, was very desirous of uniting the Monophysites, and thought to prevent the diversity of opinions among them by inducing them to accede to the following proposition (suggested to him, it is said, by Anastasius, <sup>1</sup> Mosheim, III. p. 134. (P.) The "sentence, however," adds Mosheim, "did not extend to the person or fame of the abbot himself. . . . . Joachim has at this day a considerable number of adherents and defenders, more especially among those of the Franciscans, who are called Observants." Eccl. Hist. Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. xv.

Sueur, A.D. 519. (P.)
 Ibid, A.D. 529. (P.)

the chief of the Jacobites, and who pretended to renounce Eutychianism, in order to be made bishop of Antioch), "There was in Jesus Christ, after the union of the two natures, but one will and one operation." Accordingly he published an edict in favour of this doctrine, which was called that of the Monothelites, in 630.

It was afterwards confirmed in a council, and for some time seemed to have the intended effect. But soon after it was the occasion of new and violent animosities, in consequence of the opposition made to it by Sophronius, a monk of Palestine. He, being raised to the see of Jerusalem, was the occasion of a council being held at Constantinople in 680, which was called the sixth general council, in which the doctrine of the Monothelites was condemned. Notwithstanding this condemnation, this doctrine was embraced by the Mardiates, a people who inhabited Mount Libanus, and were afterwards called Maronites, from Maro, their first bishop; but in the twelfth century they joined the church of Rome.

In the condemnation of this doctrine, it is remarkable that it was not stated, nor anything opposite to it asserted; the writings only which contained it being condemned, as containing propositions "impious and hurtful to the soul;" and they were therefore ordered to be exterminated and burned. It is, indeed, no wonder that those who are called orthodox with respect to the doctrine of the Trinity, should be embarrassed with two intelligent principles in one person, in what manner soever they may imagine them to be united. If there be but one intelligent principle, or nature, there can be but one will, but if there be two intelligent principles, it is natural to expect two wills. But then what certainty can there be that these two wills will always coincide, and what inconvenience would there not arise from their difference?

The Christian fathers who first ima-<sup>1</sup> Sueur, A.D. 629 and 680. Mosheim, [Vol. II.] p. 37. (P.) Eccl. Hist. Cent. vii. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. xi.

gined that Christ was the Logos of the Father, had no dispute about the sense in which he was the Son of God. That he was so by adoption, and not in his own nature, as immediately derived from God, had been peculiar to those who held his proper humanity. But in the eighth century, Felix, bishop of Urgella, in Spain, would have introduced a distinction in this case, in fact uniting the two opinions. For he held "that Christ, considered in his divine nature, was truly and essentially the Son of God, but that considered as a man, he was only so, nominally and by adoption." But this opinion was condemned by several councils, and especially in one held by Charlemagne, at Ratisbon, in 792.2

But the most ridiculous of all opinions that was, perhaps, ever seriously maintained, and which yet proceeded from an unfeigned respect to Christ, (and which I mention only to relieve my readers from their attention to things that were either of a more serious nature, or that had more serious consequences,) was one that was started in the ninth century, about the manner in which Christ was born of the Virgin. For, Paschasius Radbert, the same who was so much concerned in establishing the doctrine of transubstantiation, composed in this century "an elaborate treatise, to prove that Christ was born without his mother's womb being opened, in the same manner as he came into the chamber where his disciples were assembled, after his resurrection, though the door was shut."3

A controversy much more serious in its consequences, as it ended in the final separation of the Greek and Latin churches, was started in the same century, about the procession of the Holy Spirit. In the Nicene Creed, with the addition which was afterwards made to it, it is said, I believe in the Holy Spirit, which proceeds from the Father; and by this it was probably meant that the

&lt;sup>2</sup> Mosheim, II. p. 100. (P.) Eccl. Hist. Cent. viii. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. iii. <sup>3</sup> Ibid. p. 162. (P.) Cent. ix. Pt. ii. Ch. iii.

Sect. xxvi.

Holy Spirit, as a distinct person, bore a similar relation to the Father, as the source of divinity, to that which the the Spirit was sent by the Son, or proceeded from the Son, it probably came by degrees to be imagined, that his nature was derived from that of the Son, as well as from that of the Father; but we hear no consequence of this, till the year 447, when the words Filioque, were added to the creed, by the order of a synod in Spain, whence it passed into Gaul. In this state things continued till the eighth century, when the question was a good deal agitated, as appears by a council of Gentilli held in 766; and in 809 Charlemagne ordered a council to be held at Aix-la-Chapelle, in which the question concerning the Holy Spirit was discussed.

In consequence of this, the Latins, in general at least, held that the Spirit proceeded from the Father and the Son, and in the churches of France and Spain, the creed was usually read in this manner: "I believe in the Holv Spirit, which from all eternity proceeded from the Father and the Son." This, however, was not the practice at Rome, and Leo the Third, at least for some time, ordered the creed to be read as formerly. At length the Greeks took offence at this addition, and Photius, bishop of Constantinople, wrote against it, as an innovation; and after much debating on the subject, in the year 1054, the two churches finally separated, and excommunicated one another on account of this difference.

When an attempt was made to reunite the two churches, at the council of Ferrara, in 1439, this procession of the Holy Spirit was thus explained, viz. "The Holy Spirit is eternally from the Father and the Son, and he proceeds from them both eternally, as from a single principle, and by one single procession." If my readers have any ideas from these words, it is more than I can pretend to.

1 "Histoire des Papes," IV. p. 124 (P.)

No people in the world were so much addicted to religious controversy as the Greeks. In the later period of that Son, or the Logos bore to him. But empire, notwithstanding the declining the Scriptures expressly asserting that state of their affairs, and the perpetual inroads first of the Saracens and then of the Turks, it continued to be one of their most serious occupations; and some of the emperors themselves entered into these debates with as much eagerness as any mere divines. One of the most extraordinary instances of this occurs in the twelfth century, when a warm contest arose at Constantinople about the sense of these words of Christ, "My Father is greater than I." The emperor Emanuel Comnenus held a council upon it, in which he obtruded his own sense of them, which was, that they "related to the flesh that was hid in Christ, and that was passible, i.e. subject to suffering; and not only ordered this decision to be engraved on tables of stone, in the principal church of Constantinople, but also published an edict in which capital punishments were denounced against all such as should presume to oppose this explication, or teach any doctrine repugnant to it."2 However, the following emperor, Andronicus, cancelled the edict, and did everything in his power to put an end to the contest. But whether the severe penalties which he enacted against those who engaged in them had the effect he intended, we are not told. His measures do not seem to have been better adapted to gain his end than those of his predecessor.

I shall close the account of these idle disputes, with mentioning one that was started in Barcelona, in 1351, "concerning the kind of worship that was to be paid to the blood of Christ," and which was revived "at Brixen in 1462," when "Jacobus a Marchia, a celebrated Franciscan, maintained publicly in one of his sermons, that the blood which Christ shed upon the cross did not belong to the divine nature, and, of con-

<sup>2</sup> Mosheim, II. 435, 436. (P.) This Emperor "from an indifferent Prince was become a wretched Divine." Eccles. Hist. Cent. xii. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. xvi.

to this day. 1

SECTION XI.

A GENERAL VIEW OF THE RECOVERY OF THE GENUINE DOCTRINE OF CHRISTIANITY CONCERNING THE NATURE OF CHRIST.

WE are not able to trace the doctrine of the proper humanity of Christ much later than the council of Nice; the Arian doctrine having been much more prevalent for a considerable time afterwards, especially by the influence of the emperors Constantius and Valens; and the Arians were no less hostile to this primitive doctrine than the Trinitarians themselves. At length, though all the northern nations that embraced Christianity were at first of the Arian persuasion, yet, chiefly by the influence of the Popes, they became gradually Trinitarians, and continued so till near the reformation.

The first traces that we perceive of the revival of the ancient doctrine, are among the Albigenses. For I cannot say that I perceive any among the proper Waldenses, and the Albigenses were 1 Ibid. II, pp. 269, 270. (P.) The Pope decreed "that both sides of the question might be lawfully held, until Christ's Vicar upon earth should find leisure and opportunity for examining the matter, and determining on what side the truth lay." Cent. xv. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. xiv.

sequence, was not to be considered as probably rather Arians than what we the object of divine and immediate now call Socinians. It would seem, worship." But the Dominicans op-however, that if the Waldenses (the posed this doctrine, and appealed to first reformers from Popery, and who Pius II., who contrived to put off the may be traced as far as the time of decision, so that the question remained Claudius, bishop of Turin) were Triniundetermined in the church of Rome tarians, they did not originally lay much stress on that doctrine. For, in Lastly, to conclude this Section, I their confession of faith, composed in must observe, that about the tenth 1120, which was sixty or seventy years century, a festival began to be held in before Valdo of Lyons, there is nothing honour of the Holy Trinity, in some under the article of Jesus concerning cathedrals, and in monasteries, and that his divinity, nor yet in that of 1544, John XXII., who distinguished himself which was presented to the king of so much by his opinion concerning the France.2 In the first of these it was beatific vision, fixed the office for it in only said, that "Christ was promised 1334, and appointed the celebration of to the fathers, and was to make satisit to be on the first Sunday after Pen- faction for sin." But after the time tecost; and accordingly on this day it of the reformation by Luther, the Walhas been kept by the church of Rome, denses, in a confession of faith, preand the church of England, ever since. sented to the king of Bohemia, in 1535, acknowledge expressly, "one essence of divinity in three persons, according to the Nicene Creed and that of Athanasius," both of which they mention.3

But no sooner were the minds of men at full liberty to speculate concerning the doctrines of Christianity, and circumstances excited them to it, but, while Luther and Calvin retained the commonly received opinion with respect to Christ, there were many others of that age who revived the primitve doctrine, though there were Arians among them. The greater number, however, were of those who were afterwards called Socinians, from Faustus Socinus, <sup>2</sup> Francis I. The first article, on the object of from the first article of the Church of England as possible. The second article describes Jesus Christ entirely in scripture language. Jortin quotes the Confession at length, in the Latin version of Sandius, (Hist. Eccl. p. 425), and thinks that Erasmus "would probably have approved it." Life of Brasmus, A.D. 1536. 4to. p. 611.

<sup>3</sup> Jean Leger's "Histoire des Eglises Evangéliques des Vallées du Piemont, ou Vaudoises." 2 Francis I. The first article, on the object of

<sup>2</sup> Jean Leger's "Histoire des Eglises Evange-liques des Vallées du Piemont, ou Vaudoises," 1689, pp. 94, 97 and 109. (P.) In the Confession, 1290, Art. II. is in those words, "We believe that there is one God, Father, Son and Holy Spirit." Through the whole fourteen articles there is no other reference to a Trinity. Of Christ, it is said, Art. VI., that "he was born at the time appointed by God his Father." See "A True Copy of an Ancient Confession," &c., from Moreland's History, p. 57, in "the History of Popery," 1736, I. pp. 423, 424.

who distinguished himself by his writ- tinguished of whom were the truly ings among those of them who settled in Poland, where they had many churches, and continued in a flourishing state till the year 1658, when they were, with great cruelty and injustice, banished from that country.1 This event, however, like others of a similar nature, contributed to the spreading of their doctrine in other countries.

In England this doctrine appears to have had many advocates about the time of the civil war,2 the most dis-learned and pious Mr. Biddle,3 and his patron the most excellent Mr. Firmin: and it does not appear that there were many, if any, Arians among them, the term Unitarian being then synonymous to what is now called Socinian. Afterwards, however, chiefly by the influence of Mr. Whiston and Dr. Clarke in the Established Church, and of Mr. Emlyn and Mr. Peirce among the Dissenters, the Arians became so much the more numerous body, that the old Unitarians

<sup>1</sup> See Toulmin's Socinus, p. 274. The king, who banished them, was John Cazimir, a cardinal, who had been a Jesuit. In 1668 he abdicated, and became abbot of St. Germain des Prez. cated, and became abbot of St. Germain des Pres, at Paris, where he died in 1672. In a chapel dedicated to this St. Cazimir, is a tomb with a long inscription, Eternæ Memoriæ Regis Orthodoxi. Among his exploits are "Sociniani regno pulsi, ne Casimirum, haberent regem, qui Christum, Deum non haberent." See "A New Description of Paris," 1687, Pt. ii. p. 97.

<sup>2</sup> One of these was Paul Best, of whose life and writings I know nothing, but whose sufferings, from the Long Parliament, will sufficiently appear by the following passages in Whitelocke's

appear by the following passages in Whitelocke's Memorials:—

"1646, January 28. The day of the monthly fast. In the evening the House met, and heard a report from the Committee of Plundered Ministers, of the blasphemies of one Paul Best, who denied the Trinity of the Golhead, and the Peity of Christ, and the Heity Ghost. The House ordered him to be kept close prisoner, and an ordinance to be brought in to punish him with death." This committee was named from the design of its first appointment in 1642, to reimburse ministers who had suffered from the Royalists. "February 16. The Committee of Plundered Ministers ordered to draw up an Ordinance for punishing Paul Best for his blasphemies. "March 28. Debate of the blasphemies of Paul Best. Divines ordered to confer with him to convince him of his sin, and that a charge be "1646, January 28. The day of the monthly to convince him of his sin, and that a charge be prepared against him.

"April 3. Paul Best brought to the bar, heard his charge, and by his answer confessed the Trinity, and that he hoped to be saved thereby; but denied the three persons, as | jesuitical

It is well known what Unitarians of that age It is well known what Unitarians of that age understood, when they confessed the Trinity, though it was too much like an unworthy substruge, to employ the term. What became of Paul Best I cannot find. Whitelocke records, "April 29, An ordinance to be brought in, for punishment of heresies and such as divulge them," and "1647, July 24, Order to burn a pamphlet of Paul Best's, and the printers to be punished."

That implest for a Talenting Thorough Ed.

That virulent foe of Toleration, Thomas Edwards, the shallow Edwards in Milton's Sonnet, speaks of "Paul Best's damnable doctinus against the Trindty," and denounces two Independent Ministers in the city. One of them had declared that Paul Best's "imprisonment would do no good;" that he should be made "to sweat with arguments," but that the magistrate had "no authoritative power under the gospel to remedy it." The other said, "that the magistrate might not punish such," and "had nothing to do in matters of religion, but in civil things only." Edwards adds, on the authority of "a common councilman of good worth,—that an Independent Minister, within a few miles of London, one Mr. L., had said to him, 'that men ought not to be troubled for their consciences, but Papists should be suffered; and for his part, if he knew any Papists, who were at their devotions of beads, images, &c., he would not have them hindered or disturbed." It is to be regretted that we have not the names of these have them hindered or disturbed." It is to be regretted that we have not the names of these three ministers who were lights shining in a dark place. See Gangrena, Ed. 3rd, 1646, p. 46.

Another Anti-Trnintarian of this period, whose name has been preserved, was John Frye, a member of the Long Parliament, to which he was chosen for Shaftesbury, first in 1640, when his election on some account was made void, and again in 1646. He was "suspended for writing a book against the Trinity; but upon declaring that he abominated the opinions charged upon him, re-admitted February 3, 1648-9, but disabled February 24, 1630-1, for the same kind of offence." Mr. F. was one "of the commissioners appointed for the trial of the king, who occasionally attended, but did not sign the warrant for beheading him." Parl, Hist. Ed. 2nd, IX. p. 27. Of these transactions, Whitelocke has the following account: ing account :- ing account:—

"1650-1, February 24. Mr. Fry, a Member of Parliament, being accused by C. Downes, another Member in Parliament, for a book written by Mr. Fry, and Mr. Fry having printed another book with all this matter in it; the House voted this to be a breach of the privilege of Parliament. They voted other matters in the book to be erroneous, profane and highly scandalous. That the book be burnt, and Mr. Frydisabled to sit in Parliament as a member thereof."

The accuser was "Golonel John Downes, one of the Regicides, and a Member of the Council of State." One of Mr. Fry's pieces was entitled "A Brief Ventitation of that Chaffie and Absurd Opinion of Three Persons, or Substances in the

"A Brief Ventitation of that Chaffie and Absurd Opinion of Three Persons, or Substances in the Godhead." On this the Parliament sat "from morning to night in debate." See Wood, Art. Cheynell, in Athen. Ozon. 1692, II, pp. 246, 247.

See Toulmin's Socieus, p. 278, and his Review of Biddle's Life, 1791, passim. Also Dr. Towers, in Brit. Biog. 1770, VI. p. 79. Mr. John Farington, of the Inner Temple, appears to have been years, Dr. Lardner and others having written in favour of the simple humanity of Christ, this doctrine has spread Biddle's earliest biographer. Wood has given a full and remarkably fair account of him, per-haps recollecting that Biddle's bitterest perse-cutors were also the foes of the crown and the mitre. He thus writes at the conclusion of his cutors were also the focs of the crown and the mitre. He thus writes at the conclusion of his article:—

"By the filth of a prison, in hot weather, contracting a disease, he died thereof, in the month of September (one tells me the 2nd, and another the 22nd day), about five of the clock in the morning, to the great grief of his disciples, in 1662. Whereupon his body being conveyed to the ourial-place joining to 0id Bedlam, in Moorfields, near London, was there deposited by the brethren, who soon after took care that an altar monument of stone should be erected over his grave, with an inscription thereon, showing that he was Muster of Arts of the University of Oxon, and that he had given to the world great specimens of his tearning and piety. He had in him a sharp and quick judgment, and a prodigious memory; and being very industrious withal, was in a capacity of devouring all he read. He was wonderfully well versed in the Scriptures, and could not only repeat all St. Paul's Epistles in English, but also in the Greek tongue, which made him a ready disputant. Ho was accounted, by those of his persuasion, a sober man in his discourse, and to have nothing of impiety, folly, or scurrility to proceed from him. Also, so devout, that he seldom or never prayed without being prostate or flat on the ground."

Wood thus mentions that extraordinary youth who translated Biddle's Catechism into Latin:

Wood thus mentions that extraordinary youth who translated Biddle's Catechism into Latin: who translated Biddle's Catechism into Latin:
"Nathannel Stuckey, who had been partly bred up in grammar and logic by Biddle, or, at least, by his care, died 27th Sept. 1665, aged 16 years, and was buried close to the grave of Biddle, as it appears by an inscription engraven for him on ne side at the bottom of Biddle's monument."
Athen, oxon. II. p. 202.

The "burial place" of Biddle was "the New Churchyard in Pettit France, given by the City, and consecrated June 4, 1617," for the burial of strangers, especially of the French, who were numerous thore. That ground is now part of the site of New Broad Street, and it is, probably,
vain to inquire after Biddle's tomb.
Yet, though his tomb cannot be discovered,

vain to inquire after Biddle's tomb.

Yet, though his tomb cannot be discovered, his scriptural doctrine of the divine unity, for which he endured a greet Right of afflictions, has not been lost; but taught, in the very neighbourhood which contains his ashes, with a zeal, ability, and the recommendation of an exemplary life like his own, and in connexion with those ideas of the divine influence, and the divine character, to which Biddle had but partially attained. I refer to the exertions of my valued friend, the late Mr. Vidler, lost to his family and his Christian associates, too near the age at which Biddle rested from his labours; but whose enlightened views of truth, with his energy and success in recommending them, happily survive, in the same connexion. Primo acusto on deficit after.

non descit alter.
"In 1759, Dr. Lardner published, but without his name, 'A Letter written in the year were in a manner extinct. But of late very much, and seems now to be the prevailing opinion among those who have distinguished themselves by their freedom of thinking in matters of religion. This has been more especially the case since the application made to parliament by some members of the church of England for relief in the business of subscription,2 and more particularly so since the erection of the Unitarian Chapel by Mr. Lindsey, (who, from a principle of conscience, on this ground only, voluntarily resigned his preferment in the church of England,) and the publication of his Apology, with its Sequel, and other excellent works, in vindication of his conduct and opinion.3

It is something extraordinary, that the Socinians in Poland thought it their duty, as Christians, and indeed essential to Christianity, to pray to Jesus Christ, notwithstanding they believed him to be a mere man, whose presence with them, and whose knowledge of their situation, they could not therefore be assured of; and though they had no authority whatever in the Scriptures for so doing, nor indeed in the practice of the primitive church till near the time of the council of Nice. Socinus himself was of this opinion, and is thought to have given too much 1730, concerning the Question whether the Logos supplied the Place of a human Soul in the Person of Jesus Christ.' To this letter, Logos supplied the Place of a human Soul in the Person of Jesus Christ.' To this letter, which is supposed to have been originally adversed to Lord Barrington, were now added 'Two Postscripts.' It is observable, that Dr. Lardner did not derive his opinions from the study of the Socinian authors." Dr. L. also, about the same time, revised for publication Mr. Cardale's "True Doctrine of the New Testament concerning Jesus Christ." Dr. Kippis, Life of Dr. Lardner, 1783, pp. 1viii. lix. Lavii.

2 See "List of the Petitioning Clergy, 1772," Mon. Repos. XIII. pp. 15-17. There are interesting particulars on this subject in Mr. Belsham's Mem. of Lindsey, pp. 46-62.

3 Mr. Lindsey's temporary chapel was opened by him on Sunday, April 17, 1774, and the present chapel, March 29, 1778. See Mem. of L. pp. 110 and 193. The Apology was published in Jan. 1774, a 4th Ed. 1782, and this year (1818) it has been reprinted by the Unitarian Society. The Seguel was published in 1776. Dr. Priestley published a pamphlet, entitled, "A Letter to a Layman, on the Subject of Mr. Lindsey's Proposal for a Reformed English Church, on the Plan of Dr. Clarke. 1774."

of his countenance to the imprisonment character to the patriarchs and prophets and other hardships which Francis Davides suffered for opposing it.1 However, the famous Simon Budnæus was also of those who denied that any kind of worship ought to be paid to Jesus Christ, contrary to the opinion of Socinus."2

Many of those who went by the name of Anabaptists at the beginning of the Reformation, held the doctrine of the simple humanity of Christ; insomuch that, before the time of Sociuus, they generally went by that name. Among these one of the first was Lewis Hetzer, who appeared in 1524, and who "about three years afterwards was put to death at Constance."3

Several of the Socinians of that age held the doctrine of the personality of the Holy Spirit, considering him as a being of a super-angelic order. Of this opinion was Mr. Biddle.4

The first Arians in England were of the opinion of the original Arians, viz. that Christ was the first of all creatures, and even existed from eternity, by an eternal derivation from his eternal Father, that he was the immediate maker of the world, and of all things, visible and invisible, and appeared in a divine

See this question examined by Dr. Toulmin.

Sections, pp. 82–95.

2 Mosheim, IV. p. 199. (P.) Cent. xvi. Pt. ii.

Sect. iii. Ch. iv. xxii. xxiii. According to SanDudrasus recanted. "Delapsus est in dius, Budnæus recanted. "Delapsus est in opinionem de Christo Domino, divino cultu non honorando,....postea tamen opiniones suas rehonorando,..., postea tamen opiniones suas retractasse, atque cum fratribus in gratiam rediisse perhibetur." Bibl. Anti-Trin. 1684, p. 54.

I Ibid. IV. p. 169. (P.) Ibid. III. Mosheim describes Hetzer as "one of the wandering and fanatical Anabaptists," but this name seems generally to provoke that historian's ill-will; and Hetzer, according to Sandius, to whom Mosheim refers, must have deserved more respectable epithets. Sandius attributes to him, among other pieces, one against the deity of Christ, which Zuinglius suppressed. Hetzer was beheaded, Feb. 4, 1629. Bibl. Anti-Trin. p. 17.

p. 17.

4 He believed that "there is one principal minister of God and Christ, peculiarly sent from heaven to sanctify the church, who, by reason of his eminency and intimacy with God, is singled out of the number of the other heavenly ministers or angels....and that this minister of God and Christ is the Holy Spirit." See Biddle's Confession, Art. vi. p. 18, and his Twelve Arguments. Unit. Tracts, 4to, 1691, Vol. I. See also Toulmin's Review. p. 20. Toulmin's Review, p. 20.

before he was born of the Virgin Mary. But, besides that this doctrine savours of that of the pre-existence of all human souls, a doctrine which has no countenance in reason or revelation (though it was generally held by philosophers at the time that the Trinitarian and Arian doctrines were broached, and indeed served as a necessary foundation for them), it has staggered many, when they reflect coolly upon the subject, to think that so exalted a being as this, an unique in the creation, a being next in dignity and intelligence to God himself, possessed of powers absolutely incomprehensible by us, should inhabit this particular spot in the universe, in preference to any other in the whole extent of perhaps a boundless creation.

It cannot, also, but be thought a little extraordinary, that there should be no trace of the apostles having ever regarded their Master in this high light. For, being Jews, they would certainly consider him at first as a man like themselves, since no Jew ever expected any other for their Messiah. Indeed, it can never be thought that Peter and others would have made so free with our Lord, as they sometimes did, if they had considered him as their maker, and the being who supported the whole universe; and therefore must have been present in every part of the creation, giving his attention to everything, and exerting his power upon everything, at the same time as he was familiarly conversing with them. Moreover, the history of the temptation, whether it be supposed to be a reality, or a vision, must be altogether improbable on such a supposition. For what could be the offer of the kingdoms of this world, supposing all of them, without exception, to have been intended, to him who made the world, and was already in possession of it? And there is no trace of the apostles, after their supernatural illumination, discovering the great mistake they had been under with respect to this subject. On the contrary, they continued to speak as if their former ideas of him had been just, never giving man approved of God, &c.

If it be supposed that while Christ was on earth he ceased to discharge the high office he held before, viz. supporting all things by the word of his power, there will be some difficulty in supposing how, and by whom, it was performed in that interval. For certainly it would not have been delegated to Christ, or any other created being, if there had not been some impropriety in its being done immediately by God himself. That our Lord had a knowledge of the rank he held before he came into the world, must. I think, be allowed by all Arians. if they give any attention to many circumstances in the gospel history, especially to our Lord's praying for the glory which he had with the Father before the foundation of the world, which all Arians suppose to refer to his preexistent state.

For these, I suppose, and other reasons which might be alleged, a middle opinion has been adopted by some Arians. For they consider Christ merely as a preexistent Spirit, but one who never had any business out of this world, and had no concern in making it; nor do all of them suppose that Christ was even the medium of divine communications to the patriarchs, &c. But then they do not seem to consider that many of the texts which, when interpreted literally, refer to the pre-existence of Christ, refer also, by the same mode of interpretation, to his being the maker of the world, &c., &c., so that if these texts do not prove both these particulars, they prove neither of them. If those texts which seem to speak of both these circumstances, viz. the pre-existence of Christ, and his making of the world, will admit of some other construction, much more may those which seem to refer to his preexistence only.

Besides, if we once give up the idea of Christ having been the maker of the world, and content ourselves with supposing him to have been a being of much more limited capacity, why may the more strict Trinitarians, make three we not be satisfied with supposing him him any higher title than that of a to have been a mere man? The purposes of his mission certainly could not require more. For it cannot be said that anything is ascribed to him that a mere man (aided, as he himself says he was, by the power of God, his Father) was not equal to. And in other respects there seems to be a peculiar propriety in a man like ourselves being employed on such a commission as that of Christ, with respect to man; as his being an example to us, and especially in his resurrection being the resurrection of a man like ourselves, and therefore a more proper pattern of our own. and consequently a greater encouragement to us to look for the same. that all the advantages of the Socinian hypothesis (and it cannot be denied to have some) are abandoned, and yet the peculiar ones of the original Arian hypothesis are not preserved, in the more qualified one, while no new advantage can be claimed by it. For all that can be said in its favour is, that the mind does not revolt at it quite so much as at the original hypothesis.

> With respect to the Trinitarians of the present age, and especially with us in England, those who have written on the subject are far from being agreed in their opinions, and therefore ought to be classed very differently from one another. But as they can agree in using the same phraseology, and mankind in general look no farther, they pass uncensured, and the emoluments of the establishment are equally accessible to them all. They are all, however, reducible to two classes, viz. that of those who, if they were ingenuous, would rank with Socinians, believing that there is no proper divinity in Christ, besides that of the Father; or else with Tritheists, holding three equal and distinct Gods. For, it cannot be pretended that the words being and persons, have any definable difference in their corresponding ideas, when applied to this > subject. Dr. Waterland, and the generality of proper distinct persons in the Trinity, Dr. Watts.3 But, in fact, this scheme communicated to three men, this cir- of its own. cumstance could never be imagined to make them one man.

opinion," that though God the Father vary as we please, the properties and is the fountain of the Deity, the whole prerogatives of divinity cannot be comdivine nature is communicated from municated. The Divine Being cannot the Father to the Son, and from both give his own supremacy; and whatto the Spirit; yet, so as that the ever he can give, he must have a power Father and Son are not separate, nor of withdrawing, so that if he should separable from the divinity, but do communicate any extraordinary powers still exist in it." But this union is a to Christ or to the Holy Spirit, (supmere hypothetical thing, of which we posing this to have been a distinct can neither have evidence nor ideas. being,) he can, whenever he pleases, If the Father be the sole fountain of withdraw those powers; and for the Deity, he only is God, in the proper same reason, as he voluntarily gave sense of the word, and the two others them their being, he must have a can be nothing but creatures, whether power of taking away that also. How they exist in the Deity (of which also then can they make two parts of a

"thought the distinction between the glory with the Father? three persons was only modal; which also, ought to be ranked Dr. Thomas Burnet, who "maintains one selfbut asserts, that the two latter are so united to, and inhabited by the former, that, by virtue of that union, divine perfections may be ascribed, and divine worship paid to them."2 This too was evidently the opinion of Dr. Doddridge himself, and probably that of a great number of those who were educated under him, and perhaps also that of independent of each other, which is only enables persons to use the lannothing less than making three distinct guage, and to enjoy the reputation of Gods. Mr. Howe would have helped orthodoxy, when they have no just out this hypothesis by supposing a title to either. For the divinity of the mutual self-consciousness among them. Father dwelling in, or ever so inti-But this is equally arbitrary and inef-mately united to, what is confessed to fectual; since three perfectly distinct be a creature, is still no other than the intelligent beings still remain. For, supdivinity of the Father in that creature, posing a proper self-consciousness to be and by no means any proper divinity

2 Ibid. p. 402. (P.

Besides, whatever we may fancy we can do by words, which are arbitrary Bishops Pearson and Bull were of things, and which we can twist and we have no idea) or out of him. proper Trinity in the divine nature, "Dr. Wallis," says Dr. Doddridge, and be said to be equal in power and Christians should be ashamed of seems also to have been Archbishop such unworthy subterfuges as these. Tillotson's opinion." If so, they were The most fearless integrity, and the both of them nothing more than Sa- truest simplicity of language, become bellians, whom all the ancients classed Christians, who wish to know, and to with Unitarians. In the same class propagate truth. Certainly, if men be deceived, they are not instructed. All that we can gain by ambiguous existent and two dependent beings; language is, to make our readers or up in the Christian world, after so long purity in this respect.

<sup>1</sup> Doddridge's Lectures, p. 403. (P.) Prop. CXXXII.

&lt;sup>3</sup> He was certainly suspected by the strict Trinitarians, as appears by a pamphlet entitled "The Scripture Doctrine of the Trinity vindicated, in opposition to Mr. Watts's Scheme of one divine Person and two divine Powers, by Abraham Taylor. Ed. 2nd, 1723." The author was Tutor of an Independent Academy at Deptford. It would, I believe, be found, on examination of Watts's later publications, that his faith in a Trinity never recovered the shock it must have received from Mr. Tomkins's "Appeal—concerning the plain Sense of Scripture," 1722, in answer to his "Christian Doctrine of the Trinity, or Father, Son and Spirit, Three Persons and One God."

hearers imagine that we think as they a season of darkness, it will, I doubt do. But this is so far from disposing not, increase to the perfect day. The them to change their opinions, or to great article of the unity of God will, lay aside their prejudices, that it can in time, be uniformly professed by all only tend to confirm them. As to any that bear the Christian name; and then, inconveniences we may bring upon but not before, may we hope and expect, ourselves by an undisguised avowal of that, being also freed from other corwhatever we apprehend to be the truth, ruptions and embarrassments, Christiwe may assure ourselves, that the God anity will recommend itself to the acof truth, whom we honour by our ceptance of Jews and Mahometans, and conduct, will reward us, at least, with become the religion of the whole world. that inward peace of mind, which can But so long as Christians in general never be enjoyed. by those who so are chargeable with this fundamental miserably prevaricate in a business of error of worshipping more Gods than such moment as this. And what are one, Jews and Mahometans will always all the honours and emoluments of hold their religion in abhorrence. As, this world, without that satisfaction of therefore, we wish to see the general spread of the gospel, we should exert Light having thus, at length, sprung ourselves to restore it to its pristine

PART II.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO THE DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT.

THE INTRODUCTION.

Son in the place of sinful men.

trine of revelation is connected with gross misrepresentation of the chathe doctrine of the divinity of Christ; racter and moral government of God, because it is said that sin, as an offence against an infinite Being, requires an As the doctrine of the divine unity infinite satisfaction, which can only be was infringed by the introduction of made by an infinite person, that is, that of the divinity of Christ, and of one who is no less than God himself. the Holy Spirit (as a person distinct Christ, therefore, in order to make this from the Father), so the doctrine of infinite satisfaction for the sins of men, the natural placability of the Divine must himself be God, equal to the Being, and our ideas of the equity of Father. The justice of God being now his government, have been greatly fully satisfied by the death of Christ, debased by the gradual introduction the sinner is acquitted. Moreover, as of the modern doctrine of atonement, the sins of men have been thus imwhich represents the Divine Being as puted to Christ, his righteousness is, withholding his mercy from the truly on the other hand, imputed to them; penitent, till a full satisfaction be and thus they are accepted of God, made to his justice; and for that purnot on account of what they have done pose, as substituting his own innocent themselves, but for what Christ had done for them.

This corruption of the genuine doc- As I conceive this doctrine to be a and to affect many other articles in the scheme of Christianity, greatly disfiguring and depraying it; I shall show, in a fuller manner than I mean to do with respect to any other corruption of Christianity, that it has no countenance whatever in reason, or the Scriptures; and, therefore, that the whole doctrine of atonement, with every modification of it, has been a departure from the primitive and genuine doctrine of Christianity.

SECTION I.

THAT CHRIST DID NOT DIE TO MAKE SATISFACTION FOR THE SINS OF MEN.

It is hardly possible not to suspect the truth of this doctrine of atonement, when we consider that the general maxims to which it may be reduced, are nowhere laid down, or asserted, in the Scriptures, but others quite contrary to them.

It is usual with the sacred writers, both of the Old and New Testament, to assign the reasons of such of the our assent to a doctrine of this imdivine proceedings respecting the human race, as are more difficult to be comprehended, and the necessity and propriety of which are not very obvious, and might be liable to be called in question. Such is the divine natural to explain a few obscure expres-condescension to the weakness, short-sions and passages, by other numerous, sightedness, and even the perverseness that they are all just, reasonable and expedient, even in cases where our concern in them is not very apparent. Much more, then, might we expect an lives. explanation of the divine measures, when the very end which is answered by them is lost if we do not enter into the reasons of them, as is evidently the case with respect to the doctrine presents the Divine Being to have examples of this. One only, and that taken was the display of his justice, almost the first that occurs, may suffice.

and of his abhorrence of sin to the subjects of his government.

Is it not surprising, then, that, in all the books of scripture, we nowhere find the principle on which the doctrine of atonement is founded? For though the sacred writers often speak of the malignant nature of sin, they never go a single step farther, and assert that, "it is of so heinous a nature, that God cannot pardon it without an adequate satisfaction being made to his justice, and the honour of his laws and government." Nay, the contrary sentiment occurs everywhere, viz. that repentance and a good life are, of themselves, sufficient to recommend us to the divine favour. Notwithstanding so many notorious sinners, particular persons, and whole nations, are addressed by inspired persons, and their conduct strongly remonstrated against in the course of the sacred history, none of them are ever directed to anything farther than their own hearts and lives. Return unto me, and I will return unto you, is the substance of all they say on these occasions.

Certainly, then, we ought to suspend portant nature, which no person can pretend to deduce except by way of inference from particular expressions, which have much the air of figure and allusion. On the other hand, it seems plain and striking texts, relating to the of men. He is willing that we should same subject; and these uniformly rebe satisfied that all his ways are equal, present God as our universal parent, pardoning sinners freely, that is, from his natural goodness and mercy, whenever they truly repent and reform their

All the declarations of divine mercy are made without reserve or limitation to the truly penitent, through all the books of scripture, without the most distant hint of any regard being had of atonement; since the proper end of to the sufferings or merit of any being the measures which this opinion re- whatever. It is needless to quote many his character to Moses, presently after much open. the Israelites had sinned in making Indeed, admitting the popular docthe golden calf. Exod. xxxiv. 6, 7: trine of atonement, the whole of the "And the Lord passed by before him, Old Testament is, throughout, a most and proclaimed, the Lord, the Lord unaccountable book, and the religion God, merciful and gracious, long-suffer- it exhibits is defective in the most ing, and abundant in goodness and essential article. Also the Jews in our truth, keeping mercy for thousands, Saviour's time had certainly no idea forgiving iniquity, and transgression of this doctrine. If they had, they we are said to be "justified freely by not a triumphant Messiah. the grace of God." Rom. iii. 24. had been procured by the suffering of poses his own conduct to our imitation; another person, it could not have been and in the Lord's Prayer we are required said to be bestowed freely.

pious persons in the Old Testament, tainly required of us, that if our brother in their penitential addresses to the only repent, we should forgive him, even Divine Being, never plead anything more than their own repentance, and seven times a day. Luke xvii, 4. Up-the free mercy of God. Thus David, on the same generous maxim, therefore, Ps. xxv. 6, 7: "Remember, O Lord, thy tender mercies, and thy loving-kindnesses, for they have been ever of old. Remember not the sins of my youth nor my transgressions; according to thy mercy remember thou me, for thy goodness' sake, O Lord."

If the doctrine of atonement be true, it cannot, however, be pretended that David, or any other pious person in ble of the prodigal son, or the master the Old Testament, was at all acquain- whose servant owed him a thousand ted with it; and therefore the belief talents, &c.? of it cannot be necessary to salvation, If our Lore or indeed of much consequence. Had as having lost sight of the fundamenthis doctrine, on which so much stress is now laid, been true, we should have expected that Job, David, Hezekiah, Nehemiah and Daniel should have been If, therefore, the proper end of his reproved whenever they presumed to coming into the world had been to mention their integrity before God, and took refuge in his mercy only, without interposing the sufferings or who did not expect a suffering Messiah merits of the Messiah to mediate for could have no idea of,) he would have them. Also, some strong clauses should taken some opportunity of explaining have been annexed to the absolute and it to them. But nothing of this kind unlimited declarations of the divine occurs in the whole course of his preachmercy that are so frequent in the ing; and though he frequently speaks Old Testament, which would have restrained and fixed their meaning, in such an end. order to prevent the dangerous con-

It is the declaration that God made of structions to which they are now too

In the New Testament also would have expected a suffering, and

With respect to forgiveness of in-7. Now, certainly, if the favour juries, the Divine Being always proid to be bestowed freely. "to forgive others, as we hope to be Agreeably to this, David, and other forgiven ourselves." Now it is certhough he should repeat his offence we cannot but conclude that the Divine

Being acts towards us.

The parables, by which our Lord represents the forgiving mercy of God, are the farthest possible from being calculated to give us an idea of his requiring anything more than merely repentance on the part of the offender. What else can we infer from the parable of the prodigal son, or the master

If our Lord had considered the Jews tal principle of their religion, he would certainly have pointed it out to them, and have drawn their attention to it. make satisfaction to the justice of God by his death, (which certainly they of his death, it is never as having had good works, and of the mercy of God, great cause of his death; and as little represented as thinking humbly of sion of their sins. themselves, but they never refer themjudge, as the ground of their hopes; though nothing can be conceived to have been more natural and pertinent on the occasion.

Our Lord speaks of repentance, of

Whenever our Lord speaks of the object of his mission and death, as he often does, it is either in a more general way, as for the salvation of the world, to do the will of God, to fulfil the scripture prophecies, &c., or more parhis mission by his resurrection from the dead, and an assurance of a similar resurrection of all his followers. He also compares his being raised upon the cross to the elevation of the serpent in the wilderness, and to seed buried in the ground, as necessary to its future doctrine of atonement.

When our Lord takes so much pains to reconcile the apostles to his death, in several discourses, of which we have a particular account in the gospel of John, he never tells them that he must die in order to procure the pardon of their sins; nor do we find the least hint of it in his solemn intercessory prayer before his death. On the contrary, he speaks of their that light. sufferings and death in the same light as his own. To James and John he says, Mark x. 39, "Ye shall, indeed, drink of the cup which I drink of, and with the baptism that I am baptized with, shall ye be baptized." And he recommends his own example to them, in laying down his life for them, John xv. 12, 13.

After he is risen from the dead, he keeps the same profound silence on the subject of the supposed true and only in the very same strain with that of do we find of it in the history of the Moses and the prophets, and without book of Acts, after the minds of the giving any intimation that their doc- apostles were fully illuminated with the trine was defective on those heads. knowledge of the gospel. They only In his account of the proceedings of call upon all men everywhere to repent the day of judgment, the righteous are and believe the gospel, for the remis-

The apostle Peter, in his discourse selves to the sufferings or merit of their to the Jews, immediately after the descent of the Holy Spirit, and again in the temple, upon the cure of the impotent man, paints in the blackest colours the sin of the Jews in crucifying our Lord; but though he exhorts them to repentance, he says not one word of satisfaction, expiation, or atonement, to allay any apprehension they might have of the divine justice. And a fairer opportunity he could not ticularly, to give the fullest proof of have wished to introduce the subject. How fine a turn might he have then given to the popular cry of the same nation, at the time of our Lord's crucifixion, His blood be on us, and on our children! Instead of this, he only exhorts them to repent, and to believe that Jesus was the Messiah, for the increase. But all these representations remission of their sins. What he says are quite foreign to anything in the concerning the death of Christ is only that "he was delivered to them by the determinate council and foreknowledge of God, and that with wicked hands they had put him to death." Acts ii. 23, iii. 17, 18.

Stephen, in his long speech at his trial, makes frequent mention of the death of Christ, but he says not one word of his being a propitiation for sin. to lead his hearers to consider it in

What could have been a fairer opportunity for introducing the doctrine of satisfaction for sin by the death of Christ than the evangelist Philip had, when he was explaining to the Eunuch the only prophecy in the Old Testament which can be construed to represent it in that light? And yet in the whole story, which is not a very concise one, there is no mention of it. And when the Eunuch declares his faith, which gave him a right to

Christian baptism, it is simply this, solutely silent, where we cannot but that Jesus is the Son of God.

struction, be turned against this fa- tion. vourite opinion. Acts x. 34: "Of a eousness, is accepted with him."

an event that was foretold by the pro- as no other than an imaginary one. phets. He shows the Jews the aggrato repent, because he hath appointed a some being of a low and revengeful day in the which he will judge the nature, like the most capricious and world in righteousness, by that man depraved of mankind. whom he hath ordained, whereof he We have seen in the Old Testament, hath given assurance unto all men in that the Jews had never any other that he hath raised him from the dead." idea than that God was placable on Now, in all this there is not one word repentance. We find no other senti-of the true gospel scheme of salvation ment in Job or his friends, and cerby Jesus Christ, according to some. tainly no other among the Ninevites, There is nothing evangelical; all is or among the Jews of later ages, as legal and carnal.

think there was the greatest occasion The apostle Peter, preaching to Cor- to open themselves freely concerning nelius, the first of the proper Gentile the doctrine of atonement; when, in converts, is still silent about this fun- their most serious discourses, they damental article of the Christian faith.

Much he says of Jesus Christ, that it aside; when they never once directly God anointed him with the Holy Spirit, assert the necessity of any satisfaction and with power, that he went about for sin, or the insufficiency of our good doing good, &c. He also speaks of his works alone to entitle us to the favour death and resurrection, but nothing at of God and future happiness, must we all of our good works being accepted build so important an article of faith through his sufferings or merit. On on mere hints and inferences from their the contrary, what he says upon the writings? The doctrine is of too much occasion may, without any forced con- importance to stand on such a founda-

It has been pretended, that the aptruth I perceive that God is no re-prehension of some farther satisfaction specter of persons, but, in every nation, being made to divine justice, besides he that feareth him, and worketh right- repentance and reformation, is necessary to allay the fears of sincere peni-The apostle Paul before the Jews at tents. They would else, it is said, be Antioch, Acts xii. 28; at Thessalonica, subject to perpetual alarms, lest all ch. xvii.; before Agrippa, ch. xxvi.; and they could do would be ineffectual to at Rome, ch. xxviii., on all these oc- restore them to the divine favour. casions treats, and sometimes pretty But till clear instances be produced of largely, concerning the death of Christ, persons actually distressed with these but never with any other view than as fears and doubts, I can treat this case

In fact, there is no reason to believe vation of their sins, and exhorts them that any of the human race, if they be to repentance and to faith in Christ, left to their own natural unperverted but nothing farther. In his preaching apprehension of things, will ever fall to Heathens at Lystra, Acts xiv., and into such doubts and uncertainties as at Athens, ch. xvii., he discourses con- all mankind are sometimes represented cerning the supremacy and goodness to be involved in. On the contrary, of the one living and true God, and that God is a merciful being seems to exhorts them to turn from their lying have been a favourite opinion of all vanities; for (xvii. 30, 31), "the times mankind in all ages; except in some of this ignorance God winked at; but religious systems in which the object now commandeth all men everywhere of worship was not the true God, but the books of Apocrypha, Philo, Jose-When we find the apostles to be ab- phus, and all their later writings, when, like others before him, he repre- made to his offended justice. But I sents all mankind as absolutely at a answer, it becomes us ever to bear in loss on what terms God would receive mind that the divine justice is not a offenders into his favour, produces not blind principle, which, upon provocaso much as a single fact or quota-tion, craves satisfaction indiscrimintion, in support of what he asserts, ately, of all that come within its reach. though he is known to be peculiarly or that throw themselves in its way. happy in his choice of the most perti- In the Deity, justice can be nothing nent ones on all other occasions. He more than a modification of anodness, or gives us, indeed, a general reference to benevolence, which is his sole governing Plate's Alcibiades the Second, but I principle, the object and end of which do not find, in all the conversation be- is the supreme happiness of his creatween Socrates and Alcibiades in that tures and subjects. This happiness dialogue, that either of them drops the being of a moral nature, must be chiefly least hint of their uncertainty about promoted by such a constitution of the the divine favour in case of sincerity, moral government we are under, as or the least doubt that human virtue shall afford the most effectual motives is not, of itself, a sufficient recommen- to induce men to regulate their lives dation to his acceptance. All that well. Every degree of severity, therethey appear to be at a loss about is for fore, that is so circumstanced as not to some one to teach them what to pray have this tendency, viz. to promote for, lest, through their ignorance, they repentance and the practice of virtue, should ask of the gods things hurtful must be inconsistent with the fundato themselves. They express no want mental principle of the moral governof any person to intercede with God ment of God, and even with justice acceptance.

Besides, if men should have any divine declarations concerning his own effectually prevent any persons from placability, which abound in the Scriptaking advantage of such lenity. tures, must be sufficient to answer every purpose of that kind.

testify. We also see nothing of any doctrine of atonement, that the scheme other opinion in the doctrine of the is absolutely necessary in the moral Hindoos, or other oriental nations. government of God, because that, upor It is remarkable that Dr. Clarke, different principles, no satisfaction is for them, or one whose sufferings or itself, if it have the same end with merit might avail with God for their divine goodness, the happiness of God's creatures.

Now, that any severity is necessary doubt concerning the divine placability, to be exercised on such offenders as are I do not see that they must therefore truly penitent, even in human governimagine that he would accept the suf- ments, is owing to the imperfection of ferings of another instead of theirs; government when administered by men. but rather, that he would be absolutely For were magistrates judges of the inexorable and rigorous in exacting of hearts of men, there would result no themselves the punishment of their manner of inconvenience from pardon-crimes. Fears of this kind it is very ing all offenders who were become truly possible that men may have enter- penitent and reformed; since hereby the tained, but then there is nothing in offenders themselves would become the doctrine of atonement that is cal- useful members of society, and the culated to allay such fears. But the penetration of the magistrates would

This is exactly the case in the moral government of an all-seeing God. Here, It is urged, however, in favour of the therefore, measures formed upon the justest principles of equity may be taken, without hazarding the ends of government, measures which might be pernicious in any human administration. In the all-perfect government of God, therefore, there is no occasion to exercise any severity, even on penitents themselves. How absurd, then, it would be to exercise it on others, which yet the doctrine of atonement requires! Certainly, then, it must give the mind unfavourable impressions of the divine government, which, if not corrected by something else, must have an unfriendly aspect upon their virtue. Yet, notwithstanding this, the influence which the doctrine of atonement has upon practice, is strongly urged in its favour. Admitting, however, that the popular doctrine of atonement should raise our ideas of the justice, or rather the severity of God, it must, in the same proportion, sink our ideas of his mercy; so that what the doctrine may have seemed to gain on the one hand, it may assist us to conceive more acculoses on the other. And, moreover, though in order to the forgiveness of sin, some farther severity on the part of God be supposed necessary, vet, according to the doctrine of atonement, this severity is so circumstanced, as entirely to lose its effect. For, if the severity be to work upon men, the offenders themselves should feel it. It will be the same thing with the bulk of mankind, who are the persons to be wrought upon, whether the Divine Being animadvert upon the vices that are repented of, or not, if the offenders know that they themselves shall never feel it. This disinterested generosity might, indeed, induce some offenders to spare the lives of their substitutes; but if the sufferings had been endured already by some person of sufficient dignity, on the behalf of all future transgressors, it is impossible to conceive how the consideration of it should be any restraint at all; since nothing that any man could then do would expose any other to farther suffering.

&lt;sup>1</sup> See Clarke's Discourse, Pt. ii. Prop. vi. Ed. 8, pp. 294-296. See also a passage from Second Alcibiades, Rutt's Priestley, II. p. 105, Note *.

SECTION II.

OF THE TRUE END AND DESIGN OF THE DEATH OF CHRIST.

HAVING shown that the death of Christ is not to be considered as having made atonement, or satisfaction, to God for the sins of men, I shall now endeavour to show what the end and use of it really were. Now, the principal design of the life, as well as the death of Christ, seems to be not so much what we may expect to find in any particular texts, or single passages of the evangelists, or other writers of the New Testament, as what is suggested by a view of the history itself, what may be called the language of the naked facts, and what cannot but be understood wherever they are known. What has been written by Christians rately concerning some particulars relating to Christianity, but that must be of more importance, which does not require to be written, what the facts themselves necessarily speak, without any interpretation. Let us, therefore, examine what it is that may be clearly deduced from the history, and how much of Christianity could not but have been known, if nothing had been written, provided a general idea of the life and death of Christ could have been transmitted to us in any other way.

If, then, we attend to the general facts recorded by the evangelists, we cannot but find that they afford the most satisfactory evidence of a resurrection and a future life. The history of Jesus contains (what cannot be said of any other history in the world) an authentic account of a man like ourselves, invested by Almighty God with most extraordinary powers, not only teaching, without the least ambiguity or hesitation, the doctrine of a future life of retribution for all mankind, and directing the views of his disciples to it, in preference to anything in this world; but passing his own life in a voluntary exclusion from all that men call great, evidence of the identity of his person.

Lord's mission was to teach the doctrine assured his followers that they would death and resurrection as a proof of his well-doing, as he had done. doctrine. For whatever he might have preach Christ crucified, unto the Jews heart and reforming the life? a stumbling-block, and unto the Greeks foolishness; but unto them which are particular texts for what is clearly called, both Jews and Greeks, Christ suggested by the history itself, and the power of God, and the wisdom of what could not but be known of it, if God;" also 1 Cor. xv. 14 and 20, "If all that has been written concerning it Christ be not risen, then is our preach- were lost, yet express texts are by no ing vain, and your faith is also vain. means wanting to show that the true

But now is Christ risen from the and proper design of the gospel, and dead, and become the first-fruits of consequently of the preaching and of them that slept."

we may be assisted in forming an idea resurrection and of a future state. I of what is most essential to Christianity. shall content myself with reciting only Suppose a number of persons, educated a few of them. John vi. 40: "This is in the Christian faith, to be cast upon the will of him that sent me, that every a remote island without any Bible. It one which seeth the Son, and believeth is probable they would first of all lose on him, may have everlasting life, and all distinct remembrance of the apos- I will raise him up at the last day." tolical epistles, which may show that xi. 25, 26: "I am the resurrection and

and that others pursue with so much the least necessary to be attended to. assiduity; and, in obedience to the will After this, they would be apt to forget of God, calmly giving up his life, in the particular discourses of our Lord; circumstances of public ignominy and but the last thing they would retain torture, in the fullest persuasion, that would be the idea of a man, who had he should receive it again with advan- the most extraordinary power, spendtage. And in the accomplishment of ing his time in performing benevolent his own prediction, he actually arose miracles, voluntarily submitting to from the dead the third day. After many inconveniences, and last of all to this, he was seen by all those persons a painful death, in a certain expectawho had the most intimate knowledge tion of being presently raised to an of him before, and he did not leave them immortal life, and to great happiness, till after having conversed with them, honour, and power after death; and at intervals, for a considerable time, in that these his expectations were actuorder to give them the most satisfactory ally fulfilled. They would also remember that this person always re-Since, then, the great object of our commended the practice of virtue, and of a resurrection to a future immortal also be raised again to immortal life life, we see the necessity of his own and happiness, if they persevered in

Now, allowing that those persons, said or done while he lived, he could thus cut off from all communication not have given the most satisfactory with other Christians, should retain proof even of his own belief of a resur- only these general ideas of Christianity, rection, unless he had actually died in (and it is hardly to be conceived that the full expectation of it. Hence it is they could retain less,) yet, would any that the apostles glory in the con- body say they were not Christians, or sideration both of the death and of the that they were not possessed of the resurrection of Christ; as, 1 Cor. i. most important and practical truths 22-24, "The Jews require a sign, and of Christianity, those truths which are the Greeks seek after wisdom; but we most instrumental in purifying the

Though there is no occasion to cite the death of Christ, was to ascertain There is another manner in which and exemplify the great doctrines of a these are a part of the New Testament the life. He that believeth in me.

though he were dead, yet shall he live; so in consequence of our relation to and whosoever liveth and believeth in Christ, who is called the second Adam, me shall never die." x. 10: "I am come that they might have life, and that they might have it more abundantly." Rev. i. 18: "I am he that liveth and was dead, and behold I am alive for evermore; and have the keys of the

The apostles, in all their writings, seem clearly to have understood this to have been the principal object of the mission of Christ. Thus Paul says concerning Christ, 2 Tim. i. 10, he "hath abolished death, and hath brought life and immortality to light through the gospel."

This doctrine of a resurrection to immortal life, and the making an express regard to it the principal sanction of the laws of virtue, is not only essential in the Christian scheme, but is an advantage peculiar to Christianity. The discourses of our Saviour relating to this subject appear, at first sight, to be in a strain quite different from that of any other teacher of virtue before him, inspired or uninspired. And what is above all, the example of a man, either living or dying, in the certain prospect of a speedy resurrection to an immortal life, was never before exhi-The bited on the face of the earth. object of the missions of other prophets was always something inferior and introductory to this.

It is allowed that the argument for our having an interest in a future life, drawn from the consideration of the resurrection of Christ, is weakened by any opinion that represents him as of a nature superior to our own. But if, with the author of the epistle to the Hebrews, we conceive him to be in all respects as we are, his resurrection cana pledge of ours. Hence the peculiar propriety of the divine appointment, of our relation to Adam all should die, we should all be made alive. The same argument is also more fully illustrated by the same apostle, in the 5th chapter of his epistle to the Romans, in which, what we suffer by one man is contrasted by what we gain by another man.

The great object of the mission and death of Christ being to give the fullest proof of a future life of retribution, in order to supply the strongest motives to virtue, we see the greatest propriety in those texts, in which this ultimate end of his sufferings is immediately connected with them; as Titus ii. 14, "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works;" Eph. v. 25, 26, "Christ loved the church and gave himself for it, that he might sanctify and cleanse it," &c.; Rev. i. 5, "Unto him that loved us, and washed us from our sins in his own blood," &c.

Also, true religion being by means of Christianity extended to the Gentile world as well as the Jews, this ultimate end, viz. the abolition of the Jewish ritual, at least with respect to the Gentiles, is sometimes immediately connected with the mention of his death; as Eph. ii. 13, "But now in Christ Jesus, ye who sometimes were far off are made nigh, by the blood of Christ;" Col. ii. 14, "Blotting out the handwriting of ordinances, that was against us, which was contrary to us, and tool it out of the way, nailing it to the cross."

Besides the principal object of the death of Christ, other uses of it are occasionally mentioned, but they are such as are perfectly consistent with this. For instance, Christ having subnot but be considered as a pattern and mitted to all these sufferings for so great and benevolent a purpose, it was highly proper that he should be reexplained by Paul, 1 Cor. xv. 21, that warded for it; and the Divine Being since by man came death, by man has, therefore, in this case, exhibited should also come the resurrection of an illustrious example of the manner the dead; and that, as in consequence in which he will always crown obedience to his will. Moreover, Christ, being a man like ourselves, and therefore influenced by hopes and fears, it was reasonable that he should have a view to this glorious reward, in order to support him under his sufferings, as is particularly expressed in the following passages. Rom. xiv. 9: "For, to this end, Christ both died and rose. and revived, that he might be Lord both of the dead and living." Heb. xii. 2: "Who for the joy that was set before him, endured the cross, despising the shame, and is set down at the right hand of the throne of God."

As Christ was intended to be our example and pattern, in his life, death, and resurrection from the dead, his sufferings were absolutely necessary to qualify him for the work on which he was sent. This is expressed in the following passages, which also clearly show the necessity of his being a man like ourselves, in order to undergo sufferings like ours. Heb. ii. 10, 11: "For it became him for whom are all things, and by whom are all things, in bringing many sons unto glory, to make the captain of their salvation perfect, through sufferings; for, both he that sanctifieth, and they who are sanctified, are all of one (that is, of one nature and rank), for which cause he is not ashamed to call them brethren." Ver. 14: "Forasmuch then as the children are partakers of flesh and blood, (that is, are men,) he also himself likewise took part of the same," (that is, was a man also.) Ver. 17, 18: "Wherefore, in all things, it behoved him to be made like unto his brethren.-For in that he himself has suffered, being tempted, he is able to succour them that are tempted." Ver. 8: "Though he were a Son, yet learned he obedience by the things which he suffered, and being made perfect, he became the author of eternal salvation unto all them that obey him."

As Christ was the person foretold by the ancient Jewish prophets, and he carbeen done before, giving proper extent the ever-blessed God.

and force to its moral precepts, Christ is properly said to have come to fulfil the law, and for the accomplishment of ancient prophecies. Matt. v. 17: "Think not that I am come to destroy the law, or the prophets; I am not come to destroy but to fulfil." Acts iii. 18: "But those things which God before had shewed by the mouth of all his prophets, that Christ should suffer, he hath so fulfilled."

Lastly, as the end of Christ's mission necessarily required him to undergo a great variety of sufferings, he is, with propriety, said to come in order to exhibit tomankind a most perfect example of voluntary obedience to the will of God, under the severest trial of it; and his example is justly proposed to us under our trials and sufferings. 1 Pet. ii. 21: "Christ also hath suffered for us, leaving us an example, that ye should follow his steps." 1 John iii. 16: "Hereby perceive we the love of God, because he (that is, Christ) laid down his life for us; and we ought to lay down our lives for the brethren."

SECTION III.

OF THE SENSE IN WHICH THE DEATH OF CHRIST IS REPRESENTED AS A SACRI-FICE, AND OTHER FIGURATIVE REPRE-SENTIONS OF IT.

HAVING explained the one great and primary end of the life and death of Christ, and also pointed out the other secondary and subordinate ends which were likewise really answered by it, I shall now attempt to illustrate the figurative representations that are made of it by the sacred writers. These have unfortunately misled many Christians, and have been the occasion of their entertaining opinions concerning the end of Christ's coming into the world, quite different from those which appear upon the very face of the history; opinions ried the proper and ultimate object of which are contradicted by the whole the law of Moses into execution, in a tenor of revelation, and which are exmore extensive manner than it had ever tremely injurious to the character of rative representations of the death of Christ, is that in which he is compared to a sacrifice; and, as a figure, it is just and beautiful. In every sacrifice the victim is slain for the benefit of the person on whose account it is offered; so Christ, dying to procure the greatest possible benefit to the human race, is said to have given his life a sacrifice for us; and, moreover, as the end of the gospel is to promote the reformation of sinners, in order to procure the pardon of sin, the death of Christ is more expressly compared to a sin-offering.

These points of resemblance between the death of Christ and the Jewish sacrifices, sufficiently justify and explain the language of the Scriptures relating to it. From this circumstance, however, has arisen a notion, that the sacrifices prescribed in the Jewish law were types of this great, complete, and expiatory sacrifice of the death of Christ, which now supersedes and abrogates them. On account, therefore, of the great stress which has been laid on this view of the death of Christ, I shall consider it more fully than it would otherwise deserve.

All the texts in which Christ is indisputably represented as a sacrifice are the following. Eph. v. 2: "Christ also hath loved us, and hath given himself for us, an offering and a sacrifice to God, for a sweet-smelling savour." Heb. vii. 27: "Who needeth not daily, ... to offer up sacrifices, first for his own sins, and then for the people's; for this he did once when he offered up himself." The same allusion is also frequent in this epistle. We find it also,  $\hat{\mathbf{1}}$  Pet. i. 2, 19, Rev. v. 6, and 1 John ii. 2: "and he is the propitiation for our sins." The same expression occurs ch iv. 10. But these two are the only places in which the word propitiation (¿λασμος) occurs in the New Testament.

With respect to these texts, it is obvious to remark, that the far greater part of them are from one epistle of an unknown writer, (for it is not certain, at least, that the epistle to the Hebrews was written by Paul,) which is allowed,

The most remarkable of these figu- in other respects, to abound with the strongest figures, metaphors and allegories; and the rest are too few to bear the very great stress that has been laid upon them. Besides, the manner in which this idea is introduced in these texts, which is only indirectly, intimates plainly enough, that a few circumstances of resemblance are sufficient to justify the allusion. Had the writers really considered the death of Christ as the intended antitype of the sacrifices under the law; had this been the great and principal end of his death, it would have been asserted in the fullest and plainest manner, and references to it would certainly have been much more direct and frequent than they are.

It is something similar to this view of the death of Christ, as a sacrifice, that he is also called a priest, and a high priest, especially by the author of the epistle to the Hebrews. But this very circumstance might have given us to understand, that both the representations are merely figurative, because both taken together are hardly consistent, at least they make a very harsh figure, and introduce confusion into our ideas.

That the death of Christ is no proper sacrifice for sin, or the intended antitype of the Jewish sacrifices, may be inferred from the following considera-

1. Though the death of Christ is frequently mentioned, or alluded to, by the ancient prophets, it is never spoken of as a sin-offering. For the propriety of our translation of Isaiah liii. 10, may be doubted; 1 or if it be retained, it cannot be proved to exhibit anything more than a figurative allusion. Now, that this great event of the death of Christ should be foretold, with so many particular circumstances, and yet that the proper, the ultimate, and the great end of it should not be pointed out, is unaccountable.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mr. Dodson thus translates the verse: "Yet it pleased Jehovah to crush him with affliction. Since he is made an offering for sin, he shall see a seed, and shall prolong his days, and the gracious purpose of Jehovah shall prosper in his hand." Mr. D. also proposes to transpose a passage from ch. lvii. See Isaiah, 1790, pp. 113-114 cm. 224 228

2. Great weight is given to this observation by the converse of it, viz. that the Jewish sacrifices are nowhere said, in the Old Testament, to have any reference to another more perfect sacrifice, as might have been expected if they really had had any such reference. On the contrary, whenever the legal sacrifices are declared by the prophets to be insufficient to procure the favour of God, as they often are, the only thing that is ever opposed to them, as of more value in the sight of God, is good works or moral virtue; as Ps. li. 16, 17, "Thou desirest not sacrifice, else would I give it. Thou delightest not in burnt-offering. The sacrifices of God are a broken spirit; a broken and a contrite heart, O God, thou wilt not despise." To the same purpose see Isaiah i. 11, &c., Hos. vi. 6, Amos v. 22, Mic. vi. 6.

The wisest of the Jews in our Saviour's time speak exactly in the same strain, and in the presence of our Lord himself; who is so far from disapproving of it, that he gives his own sanction to the sentiment in the most open manner. A scribe says, Mark xii. 32–34, "There is one God, and there is none other but he; and to love him with all the heart, &c. is more than whole burnt-offerings and sacrifices. And when Jesus saw that he answered discreetly, he said unto him, Thou art not far from the kingdom of God." Having a perfect knowledge of the law, he was prepared for embracing the gospel.

The general strain of the passages, quoted and referred to above, cannot but appear very extraordinary, if the Jewish sacrifices had in reality any reference to the death of Christ, and were intended to prefigure it, as types to an antitype.

3. Many other things, besides the death of Christ, are expressly called sacrifices by the sacred writers; and if it be universally allowed to be in a figurative sense only, why may not this be the case with the death of Christ also? Isa. lxvi. 20: "They shall bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord." Rom. xii. 1: "That ye present your bodies a living sacrifice, holy, acceptable unto God, which is your reasonable service."

4. Christians in general are frequently called priests, as well as Christ himself. 1 Pet. ii. 5: "Ye are an holy priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices."

5. The death of Christ cannot be considered as a proper sacrifice for sin, because many things essential to such a sacrifice were wanting in it, especially its not being provided and presented by the sinner.

6. We meet with many figures in the writings of the apostles no less bold than this. Thus the body of Christ is the veil through which we pass to the holy of holies. We are said to be circumcised in his circumcision, and to be buried with him by baptism. Our sins are crucified with him, and we rise again with him to nevness of life. After meeting with figures like these (and many more might be mentioned quite as harsh as these), can we be surprised that Christ, who died to promote the reformation of the world, should be called a sacrifice for the sins of men?

Still less shall we wonder at this, if we consider how familiar all the rites of the Jewish religion were to the minds of the apostles, so that whatever they were writing about, if it bore any resemblance to that ritual, it was sure to obtrude itself. It must also be considered, that the death of Christ was the greatest objection to Christianity both with Jews and Gentiles; and what could tend more to remove this prejudice, with both of them, and especially the Jews, than taking every opportunity of describing it in language which to them was so familiar and respectable?

7. It has been said by some, that sacrifices were originally intended to prefigure the death of Christ; and that, in themselves considered, they were of such a nature, that they would never have been thought of by man, without an express command from God.

But whether sacrifices were originally appointed by God, or a method which men themselves thought of, (which I think not improbable,) of expressing their gratitude to God, for his favours to them, when we consider the circumstances in which they were used, they appear easily to fall under either the general notion of gifts, or the more particular one of entertainments, furnished at the expense of the person who was dependent and obliged. They were therefore always considered as acknowledgments for favours received from, or of homage due to, God or man. In like manner, they might be used to deprecate the anger of God or man, or to procure favours of any other kind, by begetting in the mind of our patron an opinion of our respect and esteem for him.

To all these purposes served sacrifices before and under the law of Moses. Without a sacrifice or some other gift, the Jews were not allowed to approach the tabernacle or the temple, that is, the house of God. They were expressly commanded never to appear before God empty, lest wrath should be upon them, which was agreeable to a custom that is still universal in the East, never to appear in the presence of any prince, or great man, without a pre-

That the offering of an animal upon the altar was considered, in the law of Moses, in the same light as any other offering or gift, and a sacrifice for sin as any other sacrifice, is evident from several facts in the Jewish history, and from several circumstances in their ritual. In many cases, where a person was not able to provide an animal for a sacrifice, an offering of flour was accepted. The Philistines also, when they were convinced of their fault in taking captive the ark of God, returned it with a present of golden mice and emrods, to make atonement for them, evidently in the place of a sacrifice; and from the Grecian history it appears that (αναθηματα,) or presents of gold, silver, statues, &c., were considered by them as equivalent to expensive sacrifices for any purpose whatever.

In the Jewish ritual, the ceremonies attending a sacrifice for sin did not differ in anything material from those that were used in any other sacrifice. Whatever was the occasion of the sacrifice, the person who offered it laid his hand, in a solemn manner, on the head of the victim, which was the formal presentation of it, the animal was slain. and the blood sprinkled. Part of the victim was always burnt on the altar, a part was the portion of the priest, and in some cases the remainder was eaten by the offerer. When, therefore, the Jews sacrificed an animal as a sinoffering, the use and signification of the sacrifice itself, were the same as if it had been intended to procure any other favour; and there was no more bearing of sin, or anything properly vicarious in the offering of the animal that was made a sin-offering, than if it had been sacrificed on an occasion of thanksgiving, or on any other account.

From all that has been said concerning sacrifices under the law, and the history of their uses, they appear to have been considered as circumstances attending an address to the Deity, and not as things that were of any avail in themselves. It was not the sacrifice, but the priest that was said to make atonement; nor was a sacrifice universally necessary for that purpose. For, upon several occasions, we read of atonement being made when there was no sacrifice. Phineas is said to have made atonement for the children of Israel by slaying the transgressors, Num. xxv. 13. Moses made atonement by prayer only, Exod. xxxii. And Aaron made atonement with incense.

Whenever the writers of the Old Testament treat largely concerning sacrifices, it is evident the idea they had of them was the same with that which they had concerning gifts, or presents of any other nature. Thus the Divine Being is represented as saying, Ps. l. 9, 14, "I will take no bullock thousand hills. I know all the fowls of the mountains; and the wild beasts sation. of the field are mine. If I were hungry, I would not tell thee; for the world is mine, and the fulness thereof. Will I eat the flesh of bulls, or drink the blood of goats? Offer unto God thanksgiving, and pay thy vows unto the Most High," &c.

Lastly, if the death of Christ had been a proper sacrifice, and the forgiveness of sins had depended upon it only, having had the same use; as Rom. iv. 25, He "was raised again for our justification." As figures of speech, these things are consistent enough, but not otherwise.

8. Had the death of Christ been simply and properly a sacrifice, we should not expect to find it denominated in any manner that was inconsistent with this representation, which, however, is very common in the Scriptures. If there be a resemblance to the death of Christ in those things to which they compare it, the writers are sufficiently justified, as such figures of speech are adapted to give a strong view of what they wish to describe; but if no figure be intended, they are chargeable with real inconsistency, in calling the same thing by different names. If one of the representations be real, and the rest figurative, how are we to distinguish among them, when the writers themselves give us no inti- for by any sacrifice, but the contrary mation of any such difference? This is strongly expressed by David and circumstance alone seems to prove that they made use of all these representations in the same view, which, therefore, could be no other than as comparisons in certain respects.

Because the word atonement frequently occurs in the Old Testament, and in some cases atonements are said to legal atonements. to have been made for sin by sacrifices, out of thy house, nor he-goat out of to the death of Christ, as the only thy folds. For every beast of the atoning sacrifice. But this notion must forest is mine, and the cattle upon a be given up if we consider the meaning of atonement under the Jewish dispen-

From comparing all the passages in which atonement is mentioned, it is evident that it signifies the making of anything clean or holy, so as to be fit to be used in the service of God, or, when applied to a person, fit to come into the presence of God; God being considered as, in a peculiar manner, the king and sovereign of the Israelitish nation, and, as it were, keeping a we should hardly have found the court among them. Thus atonement resurrection of Christ represented as was said to be made for the altar, Exod. xxix. 36, and for a house after having been infected with leprosy, Lev. xiv. 53. Aaron made atonement for the Levites, Num. viii. 12, when they were dedicated to their office and ministry, when no sin, or offence, is said to have been done away by it. Atonement was also made at the purification of a leper, Lev. xiv. 18. Burnt-offerings that were wholly voluntary are said to be accepted to make atonement for the offerer, Lev. i. 3, 4. Atonements were also appointed after involuntary uncleanness and sins of ignorance, as well as in some cases of wilful transgression, upon repentance and restitution; but in this case it had no relation to the pardon of sin in the sight of God, but only to the decency and propriety of public worship, for which a man who had so offended was considered as disqualified. Guilt, in a moral sense, is never said to be atoned others.

The English word atonement occurs but once in the New Testament, and in other places the same word in the original (καταλλαγη) is rendered reconciliation; and this word is never used by the Seventy in any passage relating

Had the death of Christ been the this whole business has, on this account proper atoning sacrifice for the sins of more particularly, been thought to refer men, and as such been prefigured by the atonements in the Jewish dispen- ever suffered to be brought to the altar also that the time, and other circumstances of the death of Christ, should have corresponded to those of the types of it. Christ being put to death at the feast of passover, might lead us to imagine that his death had some reference to that business; but if he had died as a proper expiatory sacrifice, it might have been expected that he would have died on the day of expiation, and at the time when the high priest in Exod. xii. 46, which relate to the was entering into the holy of holies. paschal lamb. Had this been the case, I much doubt making such a comparison.

law, being made a curse for us."1 things devoted to destruction. Christ, us, in consequence of his devoting himself to death for us. But that this evident, because this idea of a curse is inconsistent with that of a sacrifice, and therefore shows that both these representations are to be considered as mere figures of speech. Though in some of the Heathen sacrifices the victim was an animal abhorred by the god to which it was offered, as the goat sacrificed to Bacchus; yet in the Jewish sacrifices the victim was always a clean and useful animal, and perfect in its kind. And nothing accursed was sation, we might have expected not of God. Cities and cattle accursed only to have been expressly told so, (if were in the law devoted to utter denot from the first, at least after the struction. Not one sheep or ox of all fulfilment of the prophetic type,) but the cattle of Jericho, or of the Amalekites, was permitted to be sacrificed.

Christ is also compared to the paschal lamb among the Jews. 1 Cor. v. 7: "Christ our passover is sacrificed for us." Also when the legs of Jesus were not broken upon the cross, it is said, John xix. 36, "These things were done, that the Scripture should be fulfilled, a bone of him shall not be broken," evidently referring to the same words

There are, moreover, several other whether it would have been in the circumstances in the evangelical history power of any reasons, though ever so which lead us to this view of the death solid, to have prevented men from con- of Christ, especially that of his being sidering the one as a proper type of the crucified at the feast of passover, and other. Now the want of this coinci- of his institution of the Lord's supper dence should lead our minds off from at that time, and seemingly in resemblance of it, as if it was to be considered In one passage of the New Testa- in the same light. However, the paschal ment, Christ is said to have died as a lamb was far from being a proper sacri-curse for us. Gal. iii. 13: "Christ fice. It is never so denominated in the hath redeemed us from the curse of the Old Testament, except once, Exod. xii. w, being made a curse for us."

27, where it is called "the sacrifice of Mention is made of several kinds of the Lord's passover." But this could things accursed under the Jewish con- be only in some secondary or partial stitution, but in general they were sense, and not in the proper and primary sense of the word. For there therefore, may, in a figurative way of was no priest employed upon the occaspeaking, be considered as a curse for sion, no part was burned or offered unto the Lord. And certainly no propitiation or atonement is said to have can be nothing more than a figure is been made by it, and therefore it was very far from being a sin-offering.

Christ, with respect to his death, is by himself compared to the serpent which was exposed by Moses in the wilderness, that those of the people who looked upon it might be cured of the bite of such serpents. Here the analogy is obvious. The distempers of which they were cured were of the body, but those of which we are cured by the gospel are of the mind. John iii. 14: "And as Moses lifted up the serpent in the wilderness, even so must the Son of man be lifted up." Ch.

<sup>1</sup> See Lardner on this text, Post, Serm. Works, X. p. 506.

xii. 32: "And I, if I be lifted up, . . . count, or for our benefit. Or if, when wards heaven.

I should glory, save in the cross of our world." See also Eph. ii. 5, 6.

expressly called a sacrifice, and various nation perish not." sacrificial expressions being applied to it, the language of Scripture is thought his sheep, evidently gives his life for to favour the doctrine of atonement theirs, in a sufficiently proper sense; in various other respects, perfectly cor- because if he had not thrown himself responding with the idea of its being a in the way of the wild beasts that proper sacrifice, and irreconcilable with were rushing upon his sheep, they other views of it. I shall, therefore, must have died. But here was no briefly consider every representation compact between the beasts and the which I can find of this nature.

will draw all men unto me." In this rigorously interpreted, it should be latter text the allusion is perhaps found that if Christ had not died, we different from that above mentioned; must have died, it is still, however, for here Christ, being raised above the only consequentially so, and by no earth by means of the cross, is repre-means properly and directly so, as a sented as drawing men from earth to- substitute for us. For if, in consequence of Christ not having been sent I shall close this account of the to instruct and reform the world, manfigurative representations of the death kind had continued unreformed, and of Christ that occur in the New Testa- the necessary consequence of Christ's ment, with a view of the principal coming was his death; by whatever uses that the sacred writers make of means, and in whatever manner it was it in illustrating other things. They brought about, it is plain that there show that the apostles were glad to was, in fact, no other alternative, but take every opportunity of considering his death or ours. How natural then the death of Christ in a moral view, was it, especially to writers accustomed as affording the strongest motives to to the strong figurative expression of a holy life. They also show a fondness the East, to say that he died in our for very strong figures of speech. For stead, without meaning it in a strict the greater part of the metaphors in and proper sense, as if God had absothe following verses are much bolder, lutely required the death of Christ, in and more far-fetched than comparing order to satisfy his justice for our sins, the death of Christ to a sacrifice. Rom. and as a necessary means of his forvi. 3, 4: "Know ye not, that so many giving us! Nothing but declarations of you as were baptized into Jesus much more definite and express, con-Christ, were baptized into his death? tained at least in some part of Scrip-Therefore we are buried with him by ture, could authorize us to interpret baptism into death; that, like as Christ in this manner such general expreswas raised up from the dead by the sions as the following. John x. 11: glory of the Father, even so we also "I am the good shepherd; the good should walk in newness of life," &c. shepherd giveth his life for the sheep." Gal. ii. 20: "I am crucified with Christ, xv. 13: "Greater love hath no man nevertheless I live, yet not I, but Christ than this, that a man lay down his liveth in me." vi.14: "God forbid that life for his friends." 1 Pet. iii. 18: "Christ hath once suffered for sins, Lord Jesus Christ, by whom the world the just for the unjust, that he might is crucified unto me, and I unto the bring us to God." John xi. 50: "It is expedient for us that one man should Besides the death of Christ being die for the people, and that the whole

A shepherd, in risking his life for shepherd; the blood of the sheep was 1. Christ is frequently said to have not due to them, nor did they accept died for us. But, in general, this may of that of the shepherd in its stead. be interpreted of his dying on our ac- This case is, therefore, no proper is only in two passages that this view them, as it were, for himself. unto, but to minister, and to give his life a ransom for many." 1 Tim. ii. 6: "Who gave himself a ransom (avriλυτρον) for all." We meet, however, with other expressions similar to these, as Tit ii. 14: "Who gave himself for us, that he might redeem us from all iniquity, and purify unto himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works."

demption is said to have been given had been doomed to die, and Christ had interposed, and offered his life to the Father in the place of ours, the representation might have been expected to be uniform; whereas, we find, in general, that the price of our redemption is given by God; as John iii. 16: "God so loved the world, that he gave his only begotten Son, that whosoever believeth on him should not perish, but have everlasting life." Rom. viii. 32: "He that spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for freely give us all things?"

This language, on the part of God, the world, and his death was the necessary consequence of his undertaking it, God is very properly said to have 4. Some who are willing to give up given him up for us; or, since he the idea of Christ dying as a proper parallel to the death of Christ, on the figurative sense the gospel may be said principle of the doctrine of atonement. to be the most expensive provision that 2. Christ is said to have given his God has made for recovering men from life as a ransom (Aυτρον) for us, but it the power of sin, in order to purchase of it occurs, viz. Matt. xx. 28, and 3. Christ is said to bear the sins of Mark x. 45, both of which contain the men in the following texts. Isaiah same expressions, as delivered by our liii. 11: "He shall bear their iniqui-Saviour on the same occasion: "The ties." Ver. 12: "He bare the sins of Son of man came not to be ministered many." 1 Pet. ii. 24: "Who his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." Heb. ix. 28: "So Christ was once offered to bear the sins of many." But the idea we ought to annex to the term bearing sin, is that of bearing it away, or removing it. an effect which is produced by the power of the gospel. These texts are, therefore, similar to 1 John iii. 5: "And ye know that he was manifested In all these cases, the price of re- to take away our sins; and in him is no sin." The phrase, bearing sin, is by Christ; but had we been authorized never applied, under the law, but to to interpret these expressions as if we the scape-goat, on the day of expiation, which was not sacrificed, but, as the name expresses, was turned out into the wilderness.

We see clearly in what sense the evangelist Matthew understood the passage above quoted from Isaiah; when, speaking of some of our Saviour's miraculous cures, he says, ch. viii. 17, "That it might be fulfilled which was spoken by Esaias the prophet, saying, Himself took our infirmities, and bare our sicknesses." Now how did Christ bear the diseases of men? Not by us all, how shall he not with him also taking them on himself, and becoming diseased as they had been, but by radically curing them. So also Christ or of Christ, is very proper, considered bears, that is, bears away, or removes, as figurative. For, if nothing but the the sins of men, by healing their dismission of Christ could have saved tempered minds, and restoring them to a sound and virtuous state, by the power of his gospel.

undertook the work voluntarily, and sacrifice for us, or in our stead, say, from the love that he bore to man, he nevertheless, that God forgives the sina also may be said to have given his life of men for the sake of the merits, or at as a ransom for ours; and thus these the intercession, of Christ, and that texts come under the same general idea this appears to be analogous to the with those explained above. In a divine conduct in other respects; as

God is often said to show favour to some on the account of others, and especially to have favoured the Israelites on account of their relation to Abraham, Isaac and Jacob; and for this reason they say we are required to ask in the name of Christ. The texts, however, which bear this aspect are very few, perhaps none besides the us." following. 1 John ii. 1: "If any man sin, we have an advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the righteous."

It is not denied, that it may be consistent with the maxims of divine government, to show favour to some persons on the account of others, to whom they bear a near relation. It is a wise maxim in human government. because we are, in many cases, as much concerned for others as for ourselves; and therefore a favour to a man's children, and posterity, may be the proper reward of his own merit, and also answer other ends of a reward, by being a motive to other persons to behave well. But, in general, favours distributed in this manner, are such as it is perfectly consistent with divine rectitude to grant to men without any regard to others, as giving the land of Canaan to the posterity of Abraham, &c. When the Jews incurred actual guilt, they were always punished like any other people, and by no means spared on account of their relation to Abraham. On the contrary, they are often said to have been more severely punished for not improving their privileges, as his descendants, &c.

Admitting, however, that God may be represented as forgiving sin, in paronly, we ought, at least, to have been says that forgiveness of sin was procured by him, but he always speaks of the free mercy of God in the same him; and it is particularly remarkable that in his last prayer, which is properly intercessory, we find nothing on the subject.

If any stress be laid on Christ being said to be our advocate, the Holy Spirit is much more frequently and properly called so, and by our Lord himself; and he is represented by Paul as acting the part of an advocate and intercessor. Rom. viii. 26: "The Spirit itself maketh intercession for "Repentance and remission of sins" are said to be "preached in the name of Christ," Luke xxiv. 47; and "through him," Acts xiii. 38; and all who believe in him are said to have "remission of sin,...through his name," ch. x. 43. But this phraseology is easily explained on the idea that the preaching of the gospel reforms the world, and that the remission of sin is consequent on reformation. In one passage, indeed, according to our translation, God is said to forgive sin for the sake of Christ. Eph. iv. 32: "Be ye kind one to another, tender-hearted, forgiving one another, even as God, for Christ's sake, hath forgiven you."1 But in the original it is in Christ, and may be understood of the gospel of Christ. Had sin been forgiven, in a proper and strict sense, for the sake of Christ, the word freely would hardly have been used, as it often is, with relation to it, as in Rom. iii. 24; for this implies that forgiveness is the free gift of God, and proceeds from his essential goodness and mercy, without regard to any foreign consideration whatever.

The very great variety of manners in which the sacred writers speak of the method in which the pardon of sin ticular cases, on this principle; if all is dispensed, is a proof that we are to sin be forgiven for the sake of Christ allow something to the use of figures in their language upon this subject; expressly told so. Our Saviour never for some of these phrases must be accommodated to the others. general, the pardon of sin is represented as the act of God himself, but manner as the prophets who preceded in some particular cases it is said to him; and it is particularly remarkable be the act of Christ. Matt. ix. 6: "But that ye may know that the Son of man hath power on earth to forgive sins." Col. iii., 13: "Even as Christ forgave you, so also do ye." But upon a careful examination of such texts as these, and the comparison of them with those in which the pardon of sin seems to be represented as dispensed in consideration of the sufferings, the merits, the resurrection, the life, or the obedience of Christ, (for all these views of it occur.) we cannot but conclude that they are partial representations, which, at proper distances, are allowed to be inconsistent, without any charge of impropriety; and that, according to the plain general tenor of Scripture, the pardon of sin is, in reality, always dispensed by the free mercy of God, on account of men's personal virtue, a penitent upright heart, and a reformed exemplary life, without regard to the sufferings, or merit, of any being what-

> On this mistranslation, see [Rutt's Priestley,] Vol. II. p. 296. Note.

On this subject I would refer my readers to a very valuable essay on the doctrine of Atonement, in the Theological Repository,1 in which the writer (who is the Rev. Mr. Turner of Wakefield) shows, that in the Old Testament, to make atonement for any thing or person, signifies, as I have mentioned above, making it, or him, clean, or proper for the divine service; and that in the New Testament, similar expressions, which are there used by way of figure or allusion, "relate only to the establishment and confirmation of those advantages we at present enjoy by the gospel, and particularly of a free and uninterrupted liberty of worshipping God according to the institutions of Christ, granted to us in the gospel:2 just as the legal atonements served (though far more imperfectly) similar purposes under that dispensation." But he says he doth not recollect any texts in which the death of Christ is represented as the cause, reason, or motive, why God has conferred these blessings on man.

The advocates for the doctrine of atonement must be embarrassed when they consider that, the godhead of Christ being incapable of suffering, his manhood alone was left to endure all the wrath of God that was due for every sin which he forgives; and surely one man (and that which actually suffered of Christ, on their own principles, was no more) could never make a sufficient atonement for the sins of the whole world, or even of the elect only, especially considering, as they do, that the sufferings of Christ were but temporary, and the punishment due to sin eternal.

There is a considerable difference in opinion, also, with respect to the place or scene of this expiatory suffering. In general it is thought to have been, in part, at the time of the agony in the garden, and in part on the cross. But to account for this extraordinary suffering, they are obliged to suppose something uncommon and undescribable in it, to which nothing in the common feelings of human nature ever corresponded, though at the same time it was only human nature that suf-

Bishop Burnet was aware of this difficulty, and he expresses his ideas of it in a very natural manner, so as to show clearly how his scheme was pressed with it. In his Exposition of the Thirty-nine Articles, he says, "It is not easy for us to apprehend in what that agony consisted. For we understand only the agonies of pain or of conscience, which last arise out of the horror of guilt, or the apprehension of the wrath of God. It is, indeed, certain that he who had no sin could melting apprehension of the corruption made exactly like themselves, and per-and miseries of mankind by reason of haps of a delicate, tender habit. sin, together with a never-before-felt. As to the sins of others, it is natural withdrawing of those consolations that to suppose that his mind would be had always filled his soul. But what less at leisure to attend to them then might be farther in his agony and in than at any other time, his mind being his last dereliction, we cannot dis- necessarily occupied with the sense of tinctly apprehend. Only this we per- his own sufferings; and accordingly ceive, that our minds are capable of we find that all he says upon that ocgreat pain, as well as our bodies are. casion respects himself only. "Father, Deep horror, with an inconsolable if it be possible, let this cup pass from sharpness of thought, is a very intoler- me. Nevertheless, not as I will, but able thing. Notwithstanding the as thou wilt." That the presence of bodily or substantial indwelling of the God forsook him, whatever he meant fulness of the godhead in him, yet he by it, is not at all supported by fact; was capable of feeling vast pain in his and when he was much oppressed with body, so that he might become a com- sorrow, an angel was sent on purpose plete sacrifice, and that we might have, to comfort and strengthen him. from his sufferings, a very full and He went through the scene of his amazing apprehension of the guilt of trial and crucifixion with wonderful sin. All those emanations of joy with composure, and without the least ap-which the indwelling of the eternal pearance of anything like agony of word had ever till then filled his soul, mind. His saying, "My God, my might then, when he needed them God, why hast thou forsaken me?" most, be quite withdrawn, and he be was probably nothing more than his left merely to the firmness of his faith, reciting the first verse of the twenty-to his patient resignation to the will of second Psalm, to which he might wish his heavenly Father, and to his willing to direct the attention of those who readiness of drinking up that cup were present, as it contained many which his Father had put in his hand things peculiarly applicable to his case. to drink."1 have no such horror in him; and yet terrors of a guilty conscience, and it is as certain that he could not be therefore he could feel nothing but the put into such an agony only through dread of his approaching painful and the apprehension and fear of that vio- ignominious death. But having a lent death which he was to suffer the clearer idea of this, as we perceive in next day. Therefore we ought to con-the history, and consequently of the clude that there was an inward suffer-agony of it, than other men generally ing in his mind, as well as an outward have of approaching sufferings, the visible one in his body. We cannot apprehension which he was under, no distinctly apprehend what that was, doubt, affected his mind more than we since he was sure both of his own spot-less innocence, and of his Father's un-Christ as something more than a man, changeable love to him. We can only cannot imagine how he should be so imagine a vast sense of the heinous-much affected in those circumstances; ness of sin, and a deep indignation at but there is no difficulty in the case the dishonour done to God by it, a with those who consider him as a being

&lt;sup>1</sup> Vol. III. pp. 385-433. (P.) In his Memoirs, Dr. Priestley ascribes the origin of the Theol. Repos. to a sight of some critical notes by Mr. Turner, whose contributions to that publication Turner, whose contributions to that publication were numerous and highly important. Mr. T. (in whose intercourse Dr. P. expresses himself particularly happy while he resided at Leeds) was of the party, at Richmond, mentioned in the Note, p. S. He afterwards, in concert with Mr. Cappe, defended Mr. L. against a rude attack by a clergyman, and was his frequent correspondent. See Mem. of Lindsey, pp. 35, 91. Notes.

&quot; In consequence of his death." Orig. Theol. Repos. III. p. 431.

There is nothing in this scene, any All this only shows how miserably more than in his agony in the garden, men may involve themselves in systems but what is easily explicable, on the unsupported by facts. Our Saviour, supposition of Christ being a man; an innocent man, could have no and to suppose that he was then under any agony of mind, impressed upon him, in any inexplicable manner, by the immediate hand of God, in order sins, or even if they carried this figuto aggravate what he would naturally rative language a little farther, that suffer, and thereby make his sufferings they really held what is now called the an adequate expiation for the sins of doctrine of atonement, viz. that it the world, is a mere arbitrary suppo- would have been inconsistent with the sition, not countenanced by any one maxims of God's moral government to circumstance in the narration.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Burnet's Expos. Art. II. ad fin. Ed. 4, pp. 54, 55. See Mon. Repos. II. p. 317, &c.

to have been in hell, in the interval between his death and the resurrection.1 But this is an hypothesis no less arbitrary and unsupported than any other.

Having now seen what the Scriptures contain concerning the doctrine reform the world. of atonement, let us see what Chris-The foundation we shall find very inadequate to the superstructure.

SECTION IV.

OF THE OPINIONS OF THE APOSTOLICAL FATHERS.

figurative sense, there must be some meagrely (maigrement) of the satisfacdifficulty in ascertaining the real mean- tion of Christ, and give much to good ing of the person who makes use of it. works; a sufficient indication, I should For it is the same thing as if the word think, that they had no such ideas as was properly ambiguous. Thus, a he had concerning the satisfaction of use of the words of our Saviour, this good works of men as in themselves is my body, but it does not therefore acceptable to God, in the same manner memorials, of the body and blood of subject. Christ; whereas the other takes them In the [first] epistle of Clemens Roto be the body and blood itself, without manus are some expressions which, any figure.

mined from the primitive Christians calling the death of Christ a sacrifice had no proper idea of it. Exhorting for sin, a ransom, &c., or from their the Corinthians to repentance, and saying, in a general way, that Christ to virtue in general, he mentions the died in our stead, and that he bore our pardon any sin whatever, unless Christ Calvin, as we shall see, supposed the had died to make satisfaction to divine great scene of our Saviour's sufferings justice for it: because the language above mentioned may be made use of by persons who only believe that the death of Christ was a necessary circumstance in the scheme of the gospel, and that this scheme was necessary to

According to the modern system, tians in after ages have built upon it. there is nothing in any of the good works of men that can at all recommend them to the favour of God; that their repentance and reformation is no reason or motive with him to forgive their sins, and that all the mercy which he ever shows them is on the account of the righteousness of Christ imputed to them. But it will appear that this language was altogether unknown in the early ages of Christianity; and, WHEN any mode of speech may be accordingly, Basnage ingenuously acunderstood either in a literal or in a knowledges that the ancients speak Papist and a Protestant equally make Christ, and that they considered the follow that they think alike with re- as the virtue or merit of Christ was spect to the Lord's supper. For one acceptable to him. I shall, however, of them uses the expression as a mere quote from the early Christian writers figure of speech, meaning that the as much as may enable us to perceive bread and wine are representations, or how they thought with respect to this taken singly, might seem to favour the In like manner, it cannot be deter- doctrine of atonement. But the general strain of his writings shows that he

See Institut. L. ii. C. xvi. Sect. viii.-x.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Histoire de la Religion des Eglises Reformées, 4to. 1725, I. p. 75. (P.)

example of Christ in the following Paul. The Jews, he says, "were all repetition of what is said in the book of Acts, of Christ being "exalted as a prince and a saviour, to give repentance and remission of sins."

into all the ages that have gone before, says, "Howbeit, they, repenting of what was our Father Abraham their sins, appeased God by their blessed; was it not that through prayer, and were saved though they faith he wrought righteousness and were strangers to the covenant of truth?"5 God." After this he recites what his subsequent exhortations he seems to "Wherefore," says he, "let us obey and cast ourselves upon his mercy."2 power with God. "And especially, fied that those phrases conveyed no let them learn how great a power such ideas to them as they now do humility has with God, how much a to us. pure and holy charity avails with him, how excellent and great his fear is, and sacrifices, says, "These things, therehow it will save all such as turn to fore, has God abolished, that the new him with holiness in a pure mind." law of our Lord Jesus Christ, which is He speaks of the efficacy of faith in without the yoke of any such necessity, the same language with the apostle might have the spiritual offerings of manner: "Let us consider what is greatly glorified, not for their own good and acceptable, and well pleasing sakes, or for their own works, or for in the sight of him that made us. Let the righteousness which they themus look steadfastly to the blood of selves had wrought, but through his Christ, and see how precious his blood will" (in consequence of the blessing is in the sight of God, which, being promised to Abraham). "And we shed for our salvation, has obtained the also, being called by the same will in grace of repentance for all the world."1 Christ Jesus, are not justified by our-This seems to be little more than a selves, either by our own wisdom, or knowledge, or piety, or the works which we have done, in the holiness of our hearts, but by that faith by which d remission of sins." God Almighty has justified all men He farther says, "Let us search from the beginning." But by faith this writer only means another virtue and let us learn that our Lord has, in of the mind, viz. that regard to God, every one of them, still given place for belief in his promises, and submission repentance to all such as would turn to to his will, which supports the mind him." He then mentions the preach- of man in great difficulties and trials. ing of Noah to the old world, and of This was plainly his idea of the jus-Jonah to the Ninevites, of whom he tification of Abraham himself. "For

Gen. Ep. p. 6.

Sect. vii. and ix. (P.) Gen. Ep. pp. 7, 8.

Sect. xxi. (P.) Gen. Ep. p. 19.

It is possible that persons not ac-Isaiah, Ezekiel, and other prophets quainted with the writings of the have said to this purpose; and in all apostolical fathers would imagine that, when they used such phrases as, behave no idea of anything but repent- ing justified by the blood of Christ, ance and the mercy of God, and the they must mean, as some now do, that immediate consequence of it, without without the death of Christ our rethe interposition of anything else. pentance would have been of no avail: but when we consider all that they his excellent and glorious will, and, have written, and the language of imploring his mercy and goodness, let those who followed them, who treat us fall down upon our faces before him, more fully on the subject, and who appear not to have been sensible that This writer also speaks of virtue they thought differently from them alone as having immediately great with respect to it, we shall be satis-

Barnabas, speaking of the Jewish 1 Sect. vii. Cotilerii, Ed. I. p. 150. (P.) Wake's men themselves. For so the Lord saith again, to those heretofore, Did I at all command your fathers, when they came out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices? But this I commanded them, saying, Let none of you imagine evil in your hearts against his neighbour, and love no false oath. Forasmuch, then, as we are not without understanding, we ought to apprehend the design of our merciful Father. For he speaks to us, being willing that we, who have been in the same error about the sacrifices. should seek and find how to approach unto him; and therefore he thus bespeaks us: The sacrifice of God is a broken spirit. A broken and a contrite heart God will not despise." This is not substituting the sacrifice of Christ in the place of the sacrifices under the law, but moral virtue only.

Sect. xxxii. (P.) Gen. Ep. p. 25.
 Sect. xxxi. (P.) Gen. Ep. p. 24.

In the Shepherd of St. Hermas (if this should be thought to be the work of the Hermas mentioned by Paul) we find nothing of the doctrine of atonement, but strong expressions denoting the acceptableness of repentance and good works only. "Then," says he, "shall their sins be forgiven, which they have heretofore committed, and the sins of all the saints, who have sinned even unto this day, if they will repent with all their hearts, and remove all doubt out of their hearts."2 He farther says, "Whosoever have suffered for the name of the Lord are esteemed honourable by the Lord, and all their offences are blotted out, because they have suffered death for the name of the Son of God."3

It seems pretty evident that so far we find no real change of opinion with respect to the efficacy of the death of Christ. These writers adopt the language of the apostles, using the term sacrifice in a figurative sense, and represent the value of good works, without the least hint or caution, lest we should thereby detract from the merits of Christ, and the doctrine of salvation by his imputed righteousness.

1 Sect. ii. Cotilerii, Ed. p. 57. (P.) Gen. Ep.

pp. 161, 162.

<sup>2</sup> Vis. ii. Sect. ii. (P.) Gen. Ep. p. 206.

<sup>3</sup> Sim. ix. Sect. xxviii. (P.) Gen. Ep. p. 386.

SECTION V.

OF THE OPINION OF THE FATHERS TILL. AFTER THE TIME OF AUSTIN.

THAT it was not the received doctrine of the Christian church within this period, that Christ did, in any proper sense, make the Divine Being placable to men, but that the pardon of sin proceeded from the free mercy of God, independently of his sufferings and merit. may, I think, be clearly inferred from several considerations.

1. This doctrine, on which so much stress has been laid by some moderns, is never enumerated as an article of Christian faith, in any ancient summary of Christian doctrine; and the early Christian writers, especially those who made apologies for Christianity, had frequent occasion to do it; and we have several summaries of this kind.

To say nothing of the apologies of Justin Martyr, Athenagoras and Tertullian, who give accounts of the principal articles of Christian faith, but may be thought to do it too concisely for us to expect that they should take notice of such a doctrine as this, (though the great importance of it, in the opinion of those who hold this doctrine, is such. as ought to have given it the preference of any other,) I cannot help laying particular stress on the omission of it by Lactantius, who treats professedly of the system of Christianity, as it was generally received in his days. Yet, in his Divine Institutions, there is so far from being any mention of the necessity of the death of Christ to atone for the sins of men, that he treats of the nature of sin, of the mercy of God, and of the efficacy of repentance, as if he had never heard of any such doctrine.

We see his sentiments on these subjects very fully in his treatise De Ira Dei.4 And when he professedly considers the reasons of the incarnation and death of Christ, he only says, that, "example was necessary to be exhibited to men as well as precepts, and therefore benefits.

4 C. xix. xx. (P.) Lactant. Op. II. pp. 37. 38,

their lives." 4

it was necessary that God should be what was laid out for them, that is, clothed with a mortal body, be tempted. suffer and die." He gives no other reason whatever. Again, he says, "Christ was made flesh, because he was not only to teach, but also to do, and to be an example, that none might allege in their excuse the weakness of the flesh."

Cyprian, an early writer, often mentions the humiliation and sufferings of Christ, but always either as an example, or simply as foretold by the prophets.

Arnobius says, that "Christ permitted his man—that is, the man to whom he was united—to be killed, that, in consequence of it, (viz. his resurrection afterwards,) it might appear that what they had been taught concerning the safety of their souls was safe, or to be depended upon, and that death was not to be defeated any other way."

Austin, in several places, speaks of the end of Christ's life and death, but never as designed to make satisfaction for the sins of men, but generally as an example. "In his passion he showed what we ought to endure; in his resurrection, what we are to hope for." Speaking of the incarnation in general. he says, "Christ assumed a human body, and lived among men, that he might set us an example of living and dying and rising again." When he speaks figuratively, it is plain he did not carry his ideas so far as the orthodox now do. "In his death," he says, "he made a gainful traffic; he purchased faithful men and martyrs. He bought us with his blood. He laid down the price of our redemption." But he likewise says, "Martyrs have returned læus observes," according to Lardner. "that Lactantius says little or nothing of Christ's priestly office." Lardner himself adds, "I do not remember that Jerome has anywhere taken notice of this, but it is likely enough to be true: and that Lactantius did not consider Christ's death, in the modern way, as a propitiatory sacrifice for sin, or a satisfaction made to divine justice for the sins of the human race. This may be argued from his passages, before transcribed, concerning the value of repentance, and the ends of Christ's death." He adds that "many other ancient Christians will come in for their share in this charge. For," according to Matthias Flacius Illyricus, "the Christian writers who lived soon after Christ and his apostles discoursed, like philosophers, of the law and its moral precepts, and of the nature of virtue and vice: but they were totally ignorant of men's natural corruption, and the mysteries of the gospel, and Christ's he says, "was well skilled in the languages, and endeavoured to explain the Scriptures by versions and commentaries. But, after all, he was able to do very little, being ignorant of the human disease, and of Christ the physician.

and wanting both the key of Scripture,

His countryman, Jerome," have given what was purchased. even the imperfect knowledge which the primitive Christian writers had of the Christian system in this respect. "Gal-

Some orthodox writers complain of and the Lamb of God, to open to him."5 The same Flacius, or some other learned writer of his time, observes concerning Eusebius, Bishop of Cæsarea, that "it is a very low and imperfect description which he gives of a Christian, making him only a man who, by the knowledge of Christ and his doctrine, is brought to the worship of the one true God, and the practice of 4 Lardner's Credib. X. pp. 299, 800. (P.) Works, V. pp. 121, 122. 5 Ibid. VII. pp. 145, 146. (P.) Works, IV.

p. 61.

<sup>1</sup> Epitome, C. 1. p. 142. (P.) "Superest respondere etiam its, qui putant inconveniens fuisse, nec habere rationem, ut Deus mortali corpore in-ducretur, ut hominibus subjectus esset, ut contumelias sustineret, cruciatus etiam mortemque tumeitas sustineree, cruciatus etiam morterique pateretur. . . . Si non fecerit, præceptis suis fidem derogabit. Exemplis igitur opus est, ut ea, quæ præcipiuntur, habeant firmitatem, et si quis con-tumax extiterit, ac dixerit non posse fieri, præ-ceptor illum præsenti opere convincat." Op. II.

pp. 37, 38.

2 Ibid. p. 143. (P.) Ergo ideo corporatus est, ut eum vincenda esse carnis desideria doceret, ipse faceret prior, ne quis excusationem de carnis fragilitate prætenderet." Op. II. p. 38. <sup>2</sup> Adversus Gentes, L. i. p. 24. (P<sub>*</sub>)

eousness."1

fest hazard of all earthly good things; principles. and many of them laid down their lives the Scriptures likewise, I think, recomof a Christian. And I am not a little ance and good works in the sight of apprehensive, that many things which God. now make a fair show among us, and in which we mightily pride ourselves, will in the end prove weeds only, on which the owner of the ground sets no

2. Some controversies were started in the primitive times which could not have failed to draw forth the sentiments of the orthodox defenders of the faith, on this subject, if they had really believed the death of Christ to be a proper sacrifice for sin; and that, without it. God either could not, or would not, pardon any sin.

All the Docetæ, and the Gnostics in general, who believed that Christ was man only in appearance, and did not pacified by repentance (penitendo posse really suffer, could have no idea of the placari?")5 Again, "Whoever, theremeritorious nature of his death, as such; and yet this is never objected to any of them by Irenæus, or others, who write the most largely against them.

that Christ died, and consequentially,

1 Lardner's Credib. VII. pp. 145, 146. Works, IV. p. 61. <sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 62.

sobriety, righteousness, patience, and as Beausobre, who writes their history, other virtues. But he has not a word observes, they must necessarily have asabout regeneration, or imputed right- cribed the salvation of the soul to the doctrine and the example of Christ; I cannot forbear adding what Dr. and yet none of the primitive fathers Lardner very pertinently subjoins to who write against them observe, that this quotation: "Poor, ignorant, primithe great end of Christ's coming into tive Christians, I wonder how they the world would then be defeated, in could find the way to heaven! They that the sins of men would not be salived near the times of Christ and his tisfied for.3 Austin, who writes against apostles. They highly valued, and dili- the Manicheans, and from whom, on gently read, the Holy Scriptures, and account of his doctrine of grace and some of them wrote commentaries upon original sin, we might expect a comthem; but yet, it seems, they knew little plete system of atonement, never obor nothing of their religion, though they jects to them their want of such a embraced and professed it with the manidoctrine, but combats them on other

3. Had the ancient Christian writers rather than renounce it. Truly we of had the ideas which some of the mothese times are very happy in our or- derns have concerning the all-sufficient thodoxy; but I wish that we did more sacrifice of Christ, and the insufficiency excel in those virtues which they, and of good works, they could not have expressed themselves as they generally mend, as the distinguishing properties do with respect to the value of repent-

Cyprian says, "What sinners ought to do, the divine precepts inform us, viz. that satisfaction is made to God by good works, and that sins are done away by the merit of compassion." (Operationibus justis Deo satisfieri, misericordiæ meritis peccata purgari.)4 Lactantius says, "Let no one who has been led into sin by the impulse of passion despair of himself, for he may be restored if he repent of his sins, and by good works make satisfaction to God (satisfaciat Deo): for if we think our children to be corrected when they repent of their faults, why should we despair of the clemency of God being tem by Irenæus, or others, who write the most largely against them.

3 Ibid. VI. p. 294. (P.) Works, pp. 488, 489. 4 De Opere et Eleemosynis, Opera Ed. Caillau,

The Manicheans also did not believe the most largely against them.

The Manicheans also did not believe the most largely against them. errore deceptus; aut vi coactus, ad injustitiæ viam lapsus est. Potest enim reduci, ac liberari, si eum peniteat actorum, et ad meliora conver-sus, satisfaciat Deo.... Nam si liberos nostros, cum delictorum suorum cernimus pœnitere, correctos esse arbitramur, et abdicatos, abjecfore, obeys the divine precepts, is worshipper of the true God, whose sacrifices are gentleness of mind, an innocent life and good works."1

The manner in which Austin speaks of the merit of good works, shows that he could not have had any proper idea of the satisfaction of Christ. "By these alone," says he, "we secure happiness. In this way we recover ourselves. In this way we come to God, and are reconciled to him, whom we have greatly provoked. We shall be brought before his presence, let our good works there speak for us, and let them so speak that they may prevail over our offences. For which soever is most will prevail, either for punishment or for mercy."2 in the highest esteem by all the primitive is exceedingly inconsistent with any notion of atonement for sin by the to anything that man can do for himself.

Ignatius, in a fragment of an epistle preserved by Chrysostom, speaking of certain crimes, says, that they could not be wiped out even by the blood of martyrdom. He also wishes that his own sufferings might be accepted as a purification and price of redemption for them (περιψημα και αντιψυχον).3

his life for us. Let us also lay down tosque rursus tamen suscipimus, fovemus amplectimur: cur desperemus clementiam Dei Patris pœnitendo posse placari?" Op. I. pp. 502, our lives, I will not say for him, but for ourselves, and for those who may be edified by our martyrdom. . . . . And, perhaps, as we are redeemed by the blood of Christ, Jesus having received a name above every name, so some will be redeemed by the blood of martyrs."4 And yet this writer says, "Christ offered his own life not unlike those who of their own accord devoted themselves to death, to deliver their country from some pestilence," &c.5 As this language could only be figurative in this writer, we may conclude that it is no otherwise to be interpreted when we meet with it in other writers of those times.

1 Inst. L. vi. C. xxiv. p. 636. (P.) "Quisquis i Inst. L. vi. C. XXIV. D. 636. (P.) "Quisquis gittur his omnibus praeceptis celestibus obtemperaverit, hic cultor est verus Dei, cujus sacrificia sunt, mansuetudo animi, et vita innocens et actus boni," Op. I. p. 506.

2 Lardner's Credib. X. p. 302. (P.) Works, IV.

Le Clerc's Historia Eccl. A.D. 116. (P.)

5. The great virtue which the ancient fathers ascribed to baptism, and the 4. The merit of martyrdom was held Lord's supper, with respect to the forgiveness of sins, shows plainly that they Christians. If, therefore, good works did not consider the wrath of God as in general were thought by them to pacified by the death of Christ once have merit with God, much more may for all. And though the Lord's supper we expect to find that they had this was commemoration of the death of idea of what they considered as the Christ, it is plain that they did not most heroic act of virtue. And in- consider the administration of it merely deed the language of the primitive as an application of his merits or suf-Christians on the subject of martyrdom ferings to themselves; but as having a virtue independent of that, a virtue originating from the time of the celedeath of Christ alone, without regard bration. This will be abundantly evident when I come, in the course of this work, to show the abuses of those institutions. However, what they say concerning baptism will not admit of such an interpretation as some persons, not well acquainted with their writings. might be disposed to put on similar expressions relating to the eucharist.

Among others, Tertullian frequently speaks of baptism as washing away Origen says, "Christ has laid down the guilt of sin. In several of the ancient liturgies, particularly that of Chrysostom, the priest prays that the eucharist may serve for the remission of sins and the communication of the Holy Spirit. It is well known, that at length the church of Rome, in pursuance of the same train of thinking, 4 Lardner's Credib. III. p. 226. (P.) Works, II.

p. 462. Contra Celsum, L. i. pp. 24, 25. (P.) Avadoyov τοις αποθανουσιν ύπερ πατριδων.

itself, and as having the same original that age.

independent virtue.

6. Many of the ancient writers, in imitation of the author of the epistle to the Hebrews, call the death of Christ a sacrifice, and also say that it was prefigured by the sacrifices under the law. But that this was no fixed determinate view of the subject with them, is evident from their language upon other occasions; especially when, like the prophets of old, they oppose good works, and not the death of Christ, to the sacrifices under the law, as being of more value than they were.

Lactantius, in his Epitome of Divine Institutions, speaking of sacrifices, says, "the true sacrifice is that which is brought from the heart," meaning good works.1 With respect to the same, he also says, "These are victims, this is a piacular sacrifice, which a man brings to the altar of God, as a pledge of the disposition of his mind."2

Though, therefore, in the Clementine liturgy, contained in the Apostolical Constitutions, Christ is called a high priest, and is said to be himself the sacrifice, the shepherd, and also the sheep, "to appease his God and Father, to reconcile him to the world, and to deliver all men from the impending wrath," 3 we must not infer (notwithstanding, in these general terms, this writer seems to express even the proper principle of the doctrine of atonement) that, if he had dwelt longer on the subject, he would have been uniform in his representations. If this was the opinion of the author of that liturgy, and those who made use of it, it did not generally prevail. For the principles of that doctrine will very clearly came to consider the eucharist to be as appear to have been altogether unproper a sacrifice as the death of Christ known to the most eminent writers of

One might have imagined that when Justin Martyr says that "Christ took (ειληφε) the sins of men,"4 his idea had been that he made himself responsible for them. But the tenor of all his writings shows that he was very far from having any such idea. He will not even admit that, in any proper sense, Christ can be considered as having been made a curse for us. He says that, "when in the law they are said to be accursed who were crucified, we are not to suppose that the curse of God lies against Christ, by whom he saves those who have done things worthy of a curse." Again he says, "if the Father of all chose that his Christ should receive (αναλαβεσθαι) the curses of all men, (that is, be cursed or hated by all men,) knowing that he would raise him again after he was crucified and dead, will you consider him who endured these things, according to his Father's will, as accursed?"5

Austin says, "Christ took their punishment but not their guilt." And again, "by taking their punishment and not their guilt, he abolished both the guilt and the punishment."6 But it is to be considered, as was observed above, that Austin was certainly ignorant of the principle of the doctrine of atonement; so that we can only suppose him to have meant that Christ suffered upon our account, and for our benefit; and though if he had not suffered, we must, it would have been not directly, but by remote consequence. His saying that Christ did not take the quilt of our sins, shows clearly that he had no idea of his bearing our sins in the common acceptation of the word, so as to make himself answerable for them; and therefore he could not, in a proper sense, be said to take the punishment of them.

<sup>1</sup> C. Iviii. p. 173. (P.) "Hoc est sacrificium verum, non quod ex aros, sed quod ex corde profertur, non quod manu, sed quod mente libatur." Op. II. p. 47.

2 C. Ixvii. p. 215. (P.) "Hæc, sunt quæ debeat cultor Dei exhibere; hæ sunt victimæ, hoc sacrificium placabile: hic verus est cultus, quum homo mentis suæ pignora in aram Dei confert.'

Op. II. p. 60.

3 Apost, Con. Brett's Ed. p. 8. (P.)

Apol. I. Ed. Thirlby, p. 73. (P.) Αυτος <sup>a</sup>μαρτιας πολλων ειληφε, from Isaiah, liii. 12.
 <sup>5</sup> Dial. Ed. Thirlby, pp. 345, 346. (P.)
 Grotius de Satisfact. Test. Vet. Op. IV.

p. 345. (P.)

7. When the ancient Christian wri- father, as a man, that, as when he was state in which they were before the alone, in his second carnal nativity, he fall, so as to make them once more immight become holy flesh; that by his was effected by procuring the pardon ject to sin, might be delivered from even of that sin of Adam, by which death."2 death was entailed upon his posterity; Athanasius did plainly consider but by means of Christ doing (which Christ as dying in the place of men indeed they did not clearly explain) who were subject to death. But he what Adam was not able to do. "For does not say that it was to satisfy the this reason," says Irenæus, "was the justice of God for their sins, but to word of God made man, and he who procure the resurrection of mankind was the Son of God, became the son of in general, the wicked as well as the man, that man, being mixed with the righteous, to a future life; which is by word of God, he might, by receiving no means the idea of those who now the adoption, become the Son of God. maintain the doctrine of atonement, For we could not otherwise receive in- though it may be said to be an corruptibility and immortality, unless approach towards it. sorbed by what was incorruptible, and sons P" I

I am far from pretending to explain, and much less to defend this passage of Irenæus. But it is evident, that it atonement. If this writer had had it, he could not have been so embarrassed on the subject.

of Christ is expressed by Lactantius, the Son of the Father, should die; but without annexing to it any par- for this cause he took to himself a ticular explanation, in the following passage of his Epitome: "Therefore but also by actions. Wherefore he was born again of a virgin, without a

1 Hær. L. iii. C. xxi. p. 249. (P.)

ters do speak of the mission and death created by God alone, in his first of Christ, as reversing the effects of spiritual nativity, he was made a holy sin, and restoring things to the same spirit, so being born of his mother mortal, their idea was not that this means the flesh which had been sub-

we were united to incorruptibility and "It was," says he, "an instance of immortality. But how could we be his love to mankind, that both instead united to incorruptibility and immor- of the death of all men before, the law tality, unless that which we are had be- which related to that mortality, might come incorruptible and immortal; that be disannulled, as having its power so, what was corruptible might be ab- entirely satisfied in the Lord's body. and so had no more place against the what was mortal by immortality, that rest of mankind; and also, that he we might receive the adoption of might recover and revive those men that were returning to corruption from death, by making their bodies his own, and by the grace of the resurrection: and so might extinguish the power of is not capable of receiving any light death with respect to them, as stubble from the principle of the doctrine of is plucked out of the fire. For the Word being conscious that the morthe same idea that many now have of tality of all men could not otherwise be put an end to than by the dying of all men, and it being impossible that The same general object of the death the Word, which was immortal, and body that could die, that the same

C. xliii. p. 113. (P.) "Jussit igitur eum Sumthe Supreme Father ordered him to descend upon earth, and put on a human body, that, being subject to the passions of the flesh, he might teach virtue and patience, not by words only, but also by actions. Wherefore, he sould ger all ex sola metre genits, care secunda carnali ex sola matre genitus, caro sancta fieret, ut per eum caro que subjecta peccato fuerat, ab interitu liberaretur." Op. II.

valent for the death of all, and yet over for our sins. Wherefore, he demight afterwards continue incorrup- manded the blood of Christ, as the might afterwards cease from all men by Christ was given, which was so prethe grace of the resurrection." Also cious that it alone could suffice for the in the liturgy ascribed to Nestorius. Christ is said to have "undergone for all those who were under the law to men the punishment due to their sins, giving himself to die for all whom death had dominion over."2

It is evident, from all these passages, that these writers had no idea of Christ's so suffering for men, as to endure for them any part of the punishment that was to be inflicted in a future world, but only to procure the reversion of the sentence passed upon man in consequence of the fall of Adam; so far, that, though all men should actually die, they should not the benefit of a resurrection.

now treating, that it was generally mischief by means of plagues, dearths, supposed that the death of Christ was tempests, &c. Is it not probable, a price paid for our redemption from therefore," he says, "that Christ died it there would have been no resurrection from the dead. But this system was so far from being completed, that these writers could not determine to whom this price was paid; and in general it was agreed that it was paid to the devil, to whom mankind had been given over, in consequence of the sin of Adam.

Origen was clearly of this opinion. "If," says he, "we are bought with a price, as Paul affirms, we must have been bought from some person whose what price he pleased, that he might dismiss from his power those which he body, by partaking of that Word, held. But it was the devil that held which was over all, might be an equi- us. For to him we had been given tible, on account of the Word that price of our redemption." He goes was the inhabitant, and so corruption on to observe, that "till the blood of redemption of all, it was necessary for give each his own blood, in a kind of imitation of a future redemption; and therefore that we, for whom the price of Christ's blood is paid, have no occasion to offer a price for ourselves, that is, the blood of circumcision."3 this place, therefore, he supposes that the rite of circumcision, and not the sacrifice of animals, was intended to prefigure the death of Christ, and to serve as a kind of temporary substitute for it.

This writer also compares the death continue subject to death, but have of Christ to that of those in the heathen world who devoted themselves 8. It appears, that by some means to death, to avert public calamities or other, probably the too literal inter- from their country. "It is requisite, pretation of the figurative language for some secret and incomprehensible of Scripture, such an advance was reasons in nature, that the voluntary made towards the doctrine of atone- death of a righteous man should disment, in the period of which I am arm the power of evil demons, who do the power of death, and that without to break the power of the great demon, the prince of the other demons, who has in his power the souls of all the men that ever lived in the world?"4

This opinion, however, of the price of our redemption being paid to the devil, appears not to have been universally acquiesced in; and Gr. Nazianzen takes it up as a question that had not been discussed before; and after proposing several schemes, and not appearing to be satisfied with any of them, he gives his own opinion with considerable diffidence. "We may inquire," slaves we were, who also demanded he says, "into a fact, and an opinion. which had been overlooked by many, but which I have diligently considered. viz. to whom, and for what, was the blood of Christ shed. We were in the possession of the devil, being sold to him for sin, we having received the pleasures of sin in return. But if the price of redemption could only be received by him who had possession of us, I ask to whom was this blood paid. and for what cause? For if it was paid to that wicked one, it was shameful indeed; and if he not only received a price from God, but God himself was that price, for such a price it was certainly just that he should spare us. Was the price paid to the Father? But how, for we were not held by him, and how could the Father be delighted with the blood of his only begotten Son, when he would not receive Isaac, who was offered to him by Abraham? Or rather, did the Father receive the price, not because he desired, or wanted it, but because it was convenient that man should be sanctified by what was human in God, that he, by conquering the tyrant, might deliver us, and bring us to him?"1

&lt;sup>1</sup> Athan. Opera, I. p. 61. (P.) <sup>2</sup> Apost. Con. Brett, p. 94. (P.)

 <sup>3</sup> Orig. Opera, II. p. 486. (P.)
 4 Orig. Contra Celsum, L. i. p. 25. (P.) See the Quotation, p. 76. Note 5.

The opinion which this writer mentions in the last place, and that to which we may, therefore, suppose he was most inclined, is, that the death of Christ is, in some manner, instrumental to our sanctification, that is, to our being made fit to be offered to God, and to be made his property, after having been in the power of the devil, but he does not say that it was for our justification. He, therefore, had no proper idea of what is now called the doctrine of atonement. Indeed. he expresses himself with so much uncertainty, that some may still think he was, upon the whole, of the opinion of Origen, viz. that the price of our redemption was paid to the devil, but that it was more than he was fairly entitled to.

That the devil was the person to whom the price of our redemption was due, seems to have been the general opinion of speculative writers till the age of the schoolmen. Ambrose says, "we were pledged to a bad creditor, for sin....Christ came, and offered his blood for us."2 This writer has a distinction with respect to our redemption by Christ, which is something curious. For he says, "the flesh of Christ was given for the salvation of the body, and his blood for the salvation of the soul." I do not know that any of the moderns follow him in this. Optatus Milevitanus also speaks of the devil being in possession of men's souls, before they were redeemed by the blood of Christ.3

Austin writes so fully on this subject. and his opinions in general acquired such an ascendency in the Western church, for many centuries after his death, that I shall give a larger extract from his writings. "What," says he, "is the power of that blood, in which, if we believe, we shall be saved; and what is the meaning of being reconciled by the death of his Son? Was God the Father so angry with us, that he could not be pacified without the death of his Son? By the justice of God the race of man was delivered to the devil: the sin of the first man being transferred to all his posterity, the debt of their first parents binding them: not that God did it, or ordered it, but he permitted them to be so delivered. But the goodness of God did not forsake them, though in the devil's power, nor even the devil himself, for he lives by him. If, therefore, the commission of sin, through the just anger of God, subjects man to the power of the devil, the remission of sins, by the gracious forgiveness of God, delivers man from the devil. But the devil was not to be overcome by the power, but by the justice of God; and it pleased God, that in order to deliver man from the power of the devil, the devil should be overcome not by power, but by justice. What then is the justice (or rather righteousness)

<sup>1</sup> Greg. Nazian. Opera, 1630. Orat. xlii. p. 691. (P.)

<sup>2</sup> Grotii Op. Test. Vet. IV. p. 344. (P.)
■ Opera, p. 80. (P.)

what but the righteousness of Jesus Christ? And how is he conquered? Christ? And how is he conquered? 9. Lastly, nothing, perhaps, can Because, though there was in him show more clearly how far the primifore it was necessary for him to be both tained. God and man; man, that he might be show that it was voluntary in him. What could show more power than to rise again, with the very flesh in which he had been killed? He, therefore, conquered the devil twice, first by righteousness, and then by power." having received it, is not enriched, but from his bonds."1 fondness for antithesis, without per- blood of Abel cried unto God. haps intending to be understood in the manner in which his expressions will now be naturally understood by many,

deserts."2

Op. VII. p. 915. (P.)

writer of the same age, but somewhat in the New Testament, was something later than Austin, considered the price more than a figure; and therefore that of our redemption as paid to the devil. the death of Christ was truly a price "The devil," he says, "held us in a paid for our redemption, not indeed state of servitude, boasting that he directly from sin, but rather from had bought us..... It was necessary, death, though it was not settled to therefore, that all being condemned, whom this price was paid. In general either they should be dragged to death, the writers of those times rather seem or a sufficient price be paid; and because no angel had wherewithal to

1 Augustin de Trin. L. xiii. C. ii. Op. III.

by which the devil was conquered; pay it, it remained that God should die for us."3 nothing worthy of death, he (that is, tive Christians were from entertaining the devil) killed him. Was not, then, the idea that many now do concerning the devil to have been fairly conquered, the efficacy of the death of Christ, as though Christ had acted by power, instrumental to the pardon of all sin, and not by righteousness? But he than their interpretation of some of postponed what he could do, in order those texts in which the doctrine of to do what ought to be done. Where- atonement is now supposed to be con-

Clemens Alexandrinus explains Rom. capable of being killed; and God, to iv. 25, he was delivered for our offences, by saying that Christ was the corrector and director of sinners, so that he alone can forgive sins, being appointed a pedagogue by the universal Father. He explains Matt. xxvi. 28, in which our Lord calls the wine, his blood which He also says, "the blood of Christ is is shed for many, "by his word or given as a price, and yet the devil doctrine, which was poured out for many, for the remission of sins," and bound by it, that we might be delivered interprets what our Lord says in the 6th chapter of John's gospel, about This last quotation contains an anti- eating his flesh and drinking his blood, thesis of which all the writers of that of faith and hope, which supports the age were too fond, and to which they soul; 4 and to prove that blood may sometimes sacrificed more than they represent word or doctrine, he alleges ought to have done. From the same Gen. iv. 10, in which it is said, the

Upon the whole, I think it must appear sufficiently evident, that the proper doctrine of atonement was far he says, "Christ alone suffered punish- from being settled in the third or ment without bad deserts, that by him fourth centuries, though some little we might obtain favour without good approach was made towards it, in consequence of supposing that what is Proclus of Constantinople also, a called a ransom in a figurative sense, to have considered God as the person who paid the price, than he that received it. For, man being delivered into the power of the devil, they considered the price of redemption as paid to him. As to the forgiveness of sins. it was represented by all the fathers, and even by Austin himself, as proceeding from the free grace of God, from which free grace he was farther induced to give up his Son, as the price of our redemption from the power of the devil. We must, therefore, proceed farther, before we come to any regular system of atonement, founded on fixed principles, such as are now alleged in support of it.

■ Grotii Op. Test. Vet. IV. p. 346. (P.) Milton, the orthodoxy of whose Paradiss Lost has, probably, been overrated, seems to have supposed that an angel might have made the Atonement, had any one of them possessed sufficient charity and resolution. See B. iii. line 213-221. pp. 414 and 417. (P.)

2 Centra duas Pelagianorum Epistolas, L. iv.

<sup>4</sup> Fed. L. i. Opera, pp. 110, 158. (P.)

SECTION VI.

OF THE STATE OF OPINIONS CONCERNING
THE DOCTRINE OF ATONEMENT, FROM THE TIME OF AUSTIN TO THE REFORMATION.

AFTER Austin, we find but few writers of eminence for several centuries, owing to the great confusion of the times; so that he being the last very considerable writer in the Western church, his works went down to posterity with peculiar advantage, having no rival of any note. He was, therefore, considered as an authority, and his opinions were seldom disputed. But having himself formed no fixed opinion with respect to the doctrine of atonement, his doctrines of grace, original sin and predestination, were not connected with it, as they now are. We shall find, however, that though not immediately, yet by degrees, something more like the present doctrine of atonement got established before the æra of the Re-

About two centuries and a half after Austin, we find Gregory the Great, who was the most considerable writer in his time. But he also was far from having any consistent notions on this subject. For, at the same time that he insists upon the necessity of some expiation, he says, that our redemption might have been effected by Christ in some other way than by his death. He says, "The rust of sin could not be purged without the fire of torment; Christ therefore came without fault, that he might subject himself to voluntary torment, and that he might bear the punishment due to our sins." But he says, "Christ might have assisted us without suffering, for that he who made us could deliver us from suffering without his own death. But he chose this method, because by it he showed more love to us."

In Theodorus Abucara, a Greek writer of the ninth century, we find something more like the doctrine of atonement, than in any writer in the Latin church. Indeed, as far as the extract given us by Grotius goes, it is very express to the purpose. But how he would have explained himself if he had written more largely on the subject, I cannot tell. He says, "God, by his just judgments, demanded of us all the things that are written in the law; which, when we could not pay, the Lord paid for us, taking upon himself the curse and condemnation to which we were obnoxious." Again, he says, "Christ, the mediator, reconciled us to God."2

In the Latin church, however, the doctrine of atonement does not appear to have been fixed in the eleventh century; at least if we may judge of it by the writings of Anselm, who was one of the greatest theologians of that age, and one of the first who distinguished himself by that peculiar kind of acuteness of speculation, which was carried much farther some time afterwards, in what is called the age of the schoolmen. This, however, we may say, that all the ideas of Anselm on this subject, would not be adopted by those who are advocates for the doctrine of atonement at present. He says, "that of innumerable other methods, by which God, being omnipotent, might have saved men, he chose the death of to us. How? By bearing what we for the Father had love for us even when we were in our sins." 1 Yet he restored unless man paid what for sin passage above quoted. he owed to God; and that which Christ In the following co

<sup>1</sup> In Job ii. Cap. 12; xxx. Cap. 26. Op. fol. 13, 123. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Grotii Op. Test. Vet. 1V. pp. 347, 348. (P.)

be united to man."2

that it should be conferred; and on we are moved and excited to love God. whom could he more justly choose to who hath done so much for us, and have it bestowed, than upon his relat thus we become justified, that is, being tions and brethren, whom he saw in so free from sin, we become righteous. miserable a state; that that might be The death of Christ, therefore, justiremitted to them which they owed for their sins, and that might be given to excited in our hearts."4 them, which on account of their sins they wanted?"

atonement occurs in Theophilus, a Greek writer of the age of Anselm. But the quotation from him in Grotius, is so short, that, as in the case of have explained himself if he had written more largely upon the subject. It may be observed, however, that as Grotius was professedly collecting authorities in support of the doctrine of atonement, he would not have omitted anything that he had found more to ner in which we are delivered from his purpose. "The Father," says this writer, "was angry; wherefore Christ, being made a mediator, reconciled him

Ad Rom. C. v. Op. II, p. 31. (P.) Cur Deus Homo, L. ii. C. xviii. Op. III. p. 63.

Christ, that by it he might, at the same ought to have borne, viz. death." By time, manifest his love to men." "Was this, however, he might not mean the the Father," says he, "so angry with wrath of God in a future state, but men, that unless the Son had died for simply death, respecting the whole us, he would not be appeased? No: human race, which we have seen to be the opinion of the primitive fathers. And this, indeed, might be all that says, "Human nature could not be Abucara intended to express in the

In the following century we meet ought not to pay but as man, he was with Peter Lombard, the greatest not able to pay but as God; so that authority in the school of theology there was a necessity that God should before the appearance of Thomas Aquinas; but in him we find nothing This seems, indeed, to be the proper more settled about the doctrine of language of the doctrine of atonement. atonement than in the time of Austin. But he afterwards expresses himself This writer, in his book of Sentences, in a manner not quite so favourable to in which he meant to comprise the that scheme, for he says, "As Christ sum of universal theology, treating of died without any sin of his own, a the manner in which we are delivered reward was due to him; and because from sin and the devil by the death of he, being God, could not receive any Christ, says, that "in the death of addition of happiness, the reward was Christ the love of God towards us is bestowed on those on whom he chose made conspicuous, and by means of it fies us, because by means of it love is

He adds, but more obscurely, that, "in another manner also, we are justi-Something more like the doctrine of fied by the death of Christ, viz. because by faith in it we are freed from sin, looking to it as the children of Israel looked to the brazen serpent; so that though after the death of Christ Abucara, I cannot tell how he would the devil may tempt us, as he did before, he cannot conquer us as he did before. Thus Peter was overcome by temptation before the death of his Master, but afterwards behaved with the greatest boldness before the Jewish rulers." Again, treating of the manpunishment by the death of Christ, he says, that "the penance enjoined by the church would not suffice without the sufferings of Christ, co-operating us to God, as that he then begins to but that he chose this method because the ideas of Austin. in this manner the devil is overcome but by righteousness, which he hated. For we being the captives of the devil. God might have released us by his authority only." This is the same view of this subject that was before given by Austin.

 &lt;sup>8</sup> Grotii Op. Test. Vet. IV. p. 348. (P.)
 <sup>4</sup> L. iii. Dist. 19, 20, p. 596. (P.)

In this last quotation from Peter Lombard, we find some remains of the old doctrine of redemption from the power of the devil; but in Bernard, who was Lombard's contemporary, we find more of the proper doctrine of satisfaction, but not very fully stated, and mixed with some principles not very consonant to it. Upon the whole, however, his doctrine on this subject is nearer to that of the moderns than anything we meet with before the Reformation. He also speaks of imputed sin and imputed righteousness more expressly, I believe, than any who had gone before him. He says, that, and voluntary, the other corporeal and necessary, God by his corporeal and voluntary death obviated both. Had he not suffered corporeally, he had not paid our debts; had he not suffered voluntarily, there would not have been any merit in it." "God-man," says he, "taking the punishment, and being free from the guilt, dying of his own accord, merits life and righteousness for us." Death, he says, "is driven away by the death of Christ, and his righteousness is imputed to us. Shall the sin of Adam be imputed to me? And shall not the righteousness of with it; so that the sins of good men Christ belong to me also? We are before the death of Christ were borne much more truly born of God accordwith by God until that event." He ing to the spirit, than we are born of says, however, "we are not to suppose Adam according to the flesh." "A that the death of Christ so reconciles foreign righteousness," says he, "is given to man who wanted his own. love those whom he before had hated: It was man that owed, and it was man for, that God always loved men, and that paid. The satisfaction of one is that he might have chosen any other imputed to all."2 But in all this he method to redeem us from sin than by is speaking of natural death only, and the death of Christ, if he had pleased; therefore he did not in fact go beyond Notwithstanding this language, so not by power, of which he was a lover, exceedingly favourable to the doctrine of atonement, he speaks of the power that God and every person has, to forgive sins committed against himself. "Can I," says he, "forgive an offence against myself? The Omnipotent certainly can. We know, therefore, that Christ can forgive sin by the power of his divinity, and we cannot doubt of his willingness."3

The great oracle of the Latin church was Thomas Aquinas; and his doctrine, we may presume, was that which was most generally received in that church, and retained till the time of the Reformation. The following quotations from his Summa show that his doctrine of satisfaction was a mixed one. He says, that "in consequence of sin man was a debtor to God as a judge, and to the devil as a tormentor. And with respect to God, justice required that man should be redeemed, but not with respect to "since man, by sin, became obnoxious the devil; so that Christ paid his blood to two kinds of death, the one spiritual to God, and not to the devil. It was not naturally impossible for God," he says, "to be reconciled to man without the death of Christ, but this was more convenient, as by this means he obtained more and better gifts than by the mere will of God." 4 He says, that "God might have remitted the sins of men by his mere will, but that it is more convenient to do it by the death of Christ, on account of the various uses which it

| Bernardi, Op. Picard, 1609. Ad Milites Templi, C. xi. p. 837. (P.)
| Did, Epist. cxc. p. 1556. (P.)
| Bidd, Ad Milit. C. xi. p. 837. (P.)
| Summa, Pt. iii. Ques. xlviii. Art. vi. p. 120.

answered at the same time, especially have given of it, it should seem, that moral ones;" and among others he their opinions were nearer to those of mentions our being thereby the more our reformers than those of the church excited to love God, and that Christ of Rome. thereby gave an example of obedience. and the other sacraments, derived their from it. virtue from the death of Christ.2

It appears from these extracts, that the Latin church was far from having any consistent doctrine of atonement, though a great deal was ascribed to the death of Christ. We shall find, in another part of this work, that though the writers of this age admitted the doctrine of Austin concerning grace, they were not without expedients to make room for the doctrine of the merit of good works, and even to provide a fund of merit, transferable to those who had it not, of which the court of Rome made a most intemperate use. This doctrine of merit, would naturally check the tendency which the divines of that church might otherwise have had, to perfect their doctrine of satisfaction for sin by the death of Christ; and it was in opposition to this doctrine of human merit, that Luther, and some others of the reformers, laid the great stress which we find they did upon the doctrine of the merit of Christ, and the satisfaction made for our sins by his With them, therefore, and with them only, shall we find the doctrine of atonement completed in all its parts. How this business stood in the Greek church, I have had no opportunity of tracing; but, from the few specimens I

It is very remarkable, that we find humility and fortitude. He says, that nothing like a controversy on the subject "the guilt of sin is taken away by the of this doctrine in all the Western renovating power of grace, and the church, quite down to the Reformation; punishment by Christ, as a man, making nor do we find anything of this kind in satisfaction to God." He illustrates the Greek church, except that, in the the merits of Christ with respect to twelfth century, the emperor Emanuel Christians, by the idea of his being the Comnenus exercised himself and his head, and they the body, as if, says he, divines with this question, "In what a man by means of his hands should sense it was, or might be affirmed, that redeem himself from a punishment due an incarnate God was at the same time for a sin committed by his feet. Lastly, the offerer and the oblation?"3 But he maintained that baptism, penance, nothing of any consequence resulted

SECTION VII.

OF THE DOCTRINE OF THE REFORMERS ON THE SUBJECT OF ATOMEMENT.

THE first who separated from the church of Rome were the Waldenses, of Piedmont, in the Alps. They seem to have had their origin from the time of Claudius, bishop of Turin, who distinguished himself by his opposition to the worship of images, and other innovations of the church of Rome, in the tenth century. With them we find a general outline of the doctrine of atonement, in the confession of faith which they presented to the king of France in 1544; in which they say, that "the fathers, to whom Christ was promised, notwithstanding their sin, and their impotence by the law, desired the coming of Christ to satisfy for their sins, and to fulfil the law by himself."4 But we find nothing of this subject in their older confessions. In general, however, it cannot but appear probable, that as the advocates of the church of Rome were inclined to explain away the doctrine of grace, and to introduce that of merit, those who

<sup>1</sup> Summa, Pt. iii. Ques. xlvi. Art. iii. p. 111. (P.) <sup>2</sup> Ibid. Ques. xxii. xlviii. Art. vi. pp. 57, 120. (P.)

Mosheim, II. p. 435. (P.) Cent. xii. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. xv. Leger, Histoire, p. 94. (P.)

of penance, purgatory and indulgences, which were founded on the doctrine of merit, would lean to the other extreme, and lay great stress on the satisfaction made for sin by the death of Christ alone.

Wickliffe seems to have been a firm believer of the doctrine of predestination, and also of the absolute necessity of the death of Christ, in order to the forgiveness of sin, if his sentiments be faithfully represented by Du Pin, who censures him for maintaining that God could not pardon sin without the satisfaction of Jesus Christ; that he can save none but those who are actually saved; and that he wills sin in order to bring good out of it.1 And Mr. Gilpin represents him as maintaining that "all men, as far as the merit of another can avail, are partakers of the merits of Christ."2 This, however, is not very consistent with the doctrine of predestination.3

But after the reformation by Luther. we find the doctrine of satisfaction, or atonement for sin by the death of Christ, reduced to a regular system, grounded on certain principles, and pursued to its proper extent. It cannot be said of the divines since that period, as it may perhaps be said of some before it, that what we meet with in them on this subject were only casual expressions or hasty and unsettled thoughts, and that if they had written more fully and professedly on the subject, they might, perhaps, have advanced what would have been inconsistent with it. There can be no doubt but that the principles of this doctrine were the real persuasion of many of the first reformers; that they considered it as an article of the utmost consequence, and that even the doctrine of the divinity of Christ was wished for a reformation of the abuses only a secondary consideration with respect to it. Since the reason of the incarnation of Christ, they say, was the giving merit to his sufferings and death. and to enable him to make an infinite satisfaction for sin, which was of infinite magnitude, and which required nothing less to expiate it at the hands of a righteous and just God. That the first reformers should so eagerly catch at this doctrine, and lay the stress they did upon it, may be accounted for upon two considerations. The first is, that the controversy began on the subject of indulgences, which were built on the doctrine of merit, and this was most effectually opposed by disclaiming merit altogether, under-valuing all good works, and building all hopes of future happiness on the perfect satisfaction that Christ has made to the justice of God for us, and his righteousness imputed to us.

Another circumstance which contributed to give them this turn, was, that Luther had been a friar of the order which bore the name of Austin. He was much conversant in his writings. and therefore would have a leaning not only to his doctrines of grace, original sin, and predestination, but also to this of satisfaction, which, though it was not properly advanced by Austin himself, had been gradually established on his general principles.

The doctrine of Luther and his followers on this subject, we see in the Confession of Faith presented to the emperor Charles the Fifth, at Augsburg, in 1530, where we find it asserted, that "Christ died to reconcile the Father to us, and that he might be a true sacrifice for the guilt not only of original sin, but also for all the actual sins of men."4

This doctrine is more fully expressed in the Helvetic Confession of the year 1536, and which was approved by all the Protestant churches in Europe at that time. It is there declared, that "Christ took upon him, and bore the

&lt;sup>1</sup> Hist. XIII. p. 117. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Life of Wickliffe, p. 68, (P.)
<sup>3</sup> See Toplady's **Ikstoric Proof, I. pp. 191—196.
Dr. Towers says of Wickliffe, that "in some part of his writings he speaks so strongly of fate, that he appears an absolute predestinarian. In other parts he expresses himself in so cautious a manner, that it seems as if his principles were not fixed upon the subject." Brit. Biog. I. p. 49.

<sup>4</sup> Syntagma Confessionum Fidei, 1654, p. 10.

sins of the world, and satisfied divine ever merit they have. This application perly speaking, God alone justifies us, and only for the sake of Christ, not imputing to us our sins, but imputing to us his righteousness."1

But the proper principle of this doctrine, as providing an infinite satisfaction for offences of infinite magnitude, is most fully expressed in the synod of Dort, held in 1618. "God," say they, "is not only supremely merciful, but which pains we cannot escape till the justice of God be satisfied. But when we could not make satisfaction, God gave his only-begotten Son to satisfy for us; and he was made sin and a curse upon the cross in our stead."2 Notwithstanding the satisfaction, thus supposed to be made to the justice of God, by the sufferings of Christ, it is evident that there must be some method of appropriating the benefit of these sufferings to individuals; for otherwise all mankind would have an equal claim to it. And since it would favour the doctrine of human merit too much, to suppose that the merit of Christ's suffering was always applied to persons of a certain character and conduct, advantage was taken of an expression of the apostle Paul, that we are saved by faith alone; interpreting it, as if it was something altogether independent of good works, or even of a good disposition of mind, which always precedes.good works, and constitutes what-justice. God therefore, on account of of the merits of Christ was, therefore, the passion and resurrection of Christ said to be made by something to which only, is propitious to our sins, nor does they gave the name of faith, but at the he impute them to us, but he imputes same time they disclaimed its being either the righteousness of Christ for ours; so of the nature of a work, or of faith, in that we are not only cleansed from our the usual sense of the word, viz. the sins, but also presented with the right- belief of a truth. They therefore coneousness of Christ, and being absolved tented themselves with defining it by from sin, we become righteous, and its effects; and this has been done, as heirs of eternal life. Therefore, promight be supposed, very differently, and generally in figurative language, which conveys no determinate ideas, and therefore leaves the mind in great uncertainty, whether it be possessed of it or not.

In the Saxon Confession, faith is defined to be "not the knowledge of any historical fact, but the embracing of all the articles of faith, and especially this, I believe the remission of sins, not to supremely just. But his justice requires others only, but to myself also."3 It that our sins, being committed against is also there called, "an acquiescing his infinite Majesty, must be punished confidence in the mediator." In the not only with temporal, but with eter- Synod of Dort, it is called "an instrunal pains, both of body and mind; ment by which we lay hold of the righteousness of Christ;" and it is always supposed to be something that is imparted by God, and nothing which can be acquired by man himself. So, also, that repentance on which salvation is promised, is said, in the Augustan Confession, to be "the free gift of God, and to be given not on account of any works that we have done, or may do."4

It is evident, that the more careful divines have been to explain faith, as something that is neither of the nature of a work, nor yet the proper belief of anything, the more inexplicable and uncertain they have left it. In consequence of this, persons of a warm imagination more readily fancy that they have experienced this kind of inward operation, or feeling; while persons of more sober minds have often great doubts and distress on this account. This act of faith, as it is sometimes called, is also represented either as coincident, or the same thing with the new birth, without which no man there was so much ambiguity in them, but be satisfied, that faith is the belief of the gospel, or of those historical facts which are contained in the writings of the evangelists; and, that the new birth is that change of character and conduct which is produced by

<sup>1</sup> Syntagma Confessionum Fidei, 1654, p. 26. (P.) 2 Canon i. ii. (P.)

Syntagma, p. 57. (P.)
 Art. iv. (P.)

This improved doctrine of satisfaction being held up by the reformers in opposition to the popish doctrine of the reformed. merit, did not a little embarrass the divines of the Church of Rome, among whom that doctrine had never been brought to any certain standard, so that there has always been room for great diversity of opinion on the subject.

In the debate about imputed righteousness in the Council of Trent, it was agreed by all the divines, that Jesus Christ had merited for us, and that his merit is imputed to us; but Dominicus a Soto maintained that the term ought to be exploded, because neither the Fathers nor the Scriptures ever used it, and especially because the Lutherans had abused it, affirming that imputed righteousness is the sole justification of man. He added, that it cut off all the necessity of satisfaction, and equalled the meanest of all saints to the blessed virgin.1

At length the council condemned certain assertions of Luther, especially that God converts those whom he will, even though they resist; and some in the writings of Zuinglius, viz. that in predestination and reprobation men have no power, but only the will and pleasure of God; that the justified cannot fall from grace, &c.2 After much debating on the subject, the decrees of this council were so framed, that it was hoped they might have satisfied all parties. But in consequence of this, can be called a child of God, or an heir that they decided nothing; 3 and the of eternal life. But when the phrase- controversy among the Catholics themology of Scripture, and the reason of selves went on just as before; persons the thing, are considered, we cannot of the most opposite sentiments appealing to the same decrees of this conneil.

Among other things it was determined by them, that the grace by which men are justified is merited by Christ.4 And upon the whole, it is evident, that their decrees are in favour of that set of opinions which is termed orthodox. in all the established churches among

We are not to conclude that because this doctrine of satisfaction for sin by the death of Christ, was held up by almost all the reformers as an article of so great magnitude and importance. that, therefore, it was soon so reduced to a system, as that there was no diversity of opinion about it. Nay, it appears that some very essential points belonging to it were then, and indeed still are, undetermined; and they are things of such a nature as, in fact. leave great doubts with respect to the very foundation of the doctrine itself.

Calvin makes it essential to the satisfaction of Christ, that his death should be both voluntary (which, indeed, others had said before him), and also that he should be condemned in a court of justice. "Had Christ been killed," said he, "by robbers, or in a sedition, his death would have been no kind of satisfaction; but by being condemned before a judge, it is plain that he assumed the character of a guilty person." 5 should imagine, however, that many very orthodox persons of this day would think, that there might have been the same merit in the death of Christ, with

See Sessio Sexta, 13 Jan. 1547, C. i-x.
 Du Pin's History of the 16th Century, p. 50.

<sup>1</sup> Hist. of the Council of Trent, abridged by Jurieu, p. 122. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> lbid. p. 130. (P.)

&lt;sup>4</sup> Du Pin's History of the 19th Century, p. su. (P.)
<sup>5</sup> Institutiones, L. ii. C. xvi. Sect. v. (P.) "Si a latronibus jugulatus fuisset vel tumultuarie cesus per seditionem vulgi, in ejusmodi morre nulla satisfactionis species extitisset. Verum ubi reus ad tribunal sistitur, testinoniis arguitur, et premitur, ipsius judicis ore, morti addicitur: h's documentis intelligimus ipsum personam sontis et malefici sustincre." Ed. 1602, fol. 172.

the sins of men, if the malice of his enemies had brought him to any kind of violent death, though there had been no sentence of an iniquitous court of justice for the purpose.

It is now generally thought that the scene of Christ's meritorious sufferings, when he actually bore the sins of men. and suffered the punishment due to them, was either in his agony in the garden, or in his death upon the cross; but Calvin says, "nothing would have been done by the mere death of Christ. if he had not also afterwards descended into hell, where he sustained that death which is inflicted by an angry God on the wicked." 1 To this he applies what the author of the epistle to the Hebrews says of Christ's praying with strong cries and tears, which he says was, lest he should be swallowed up by the wrath of God as a sinner.2 In another place, however, he says, that in general Christ takes our sins and purchases righteousness for us by the whole course of his obedience.3 But this is a thing about which those who now believe the doctrine of atonement are not agreed.4

It is evident, however, that Calvin believed the real descent of Christ into hell, not for the sake of preaching to the spirits in prison, or, as the primitive fathers understood it, to those who died under the old dispensation, but that he might there suffer the proper torments of the damned, and bear the wrath of God that had been merited respect to his making satisfaction for by the sins of men. Yet he says, "God was not really angry with Christ, though he made him bear all the effects of his anger." 5 He would certainly, however, have been the proper object of God's anger, if, as he maintains. "the stain (that is the guilt) as well as the punishment of sin, was laid upon him, so that it ceased to be imputed to men."6 If God was neither displeased with men because their guilt was transferred to Christ, nor with Christ to whom it was transferred, what was the object of his anger, and how was his justice really satisfied?

> which it is impossible that any satisfactory answer should be given, is, how the sufferings of Christ can be deemed infinite, so make atonement for sins of infinite magnitude, when the divine nature of Christ, to which alone infinity belongs, is im-

A more difficult question, and to passible, and his human nature could bear no more than that of any other man? It must be exceedingly difficult to conceive how any supposed union of the two natures can be of any avail in this case, unless, in consequence of that union, the divine nature had borne some share of the sufferings, which the scheme requires to be infinite, and this idea is justly disclaimed as impious. Osiander the Lutheran maintained that Christ, as man, was obliged to obey the law of God himself, and therefore that he made expiation for sin as God; but Stancarus, another Lutheran divine, in opposition to him, maintained that the office of mediator belonged to Christ as man only. Both these opinions, this writer says, are dangerous.7 This is not the only case in which we see men bewildering themselves, and puzzling others, by depart-

<sup>1</sup> Institutiones, L. ii. C. xvi. Sect. x. (P.)
"Nihil actum erat si corporea tantum morte defunctus fuisset Christus: sed opera simul pretium erat ut divinæ ultionis severitatem sentiret: quo et iræ ipsius intercederet et satisfaceret justo judicio." Ed. 1602, fol. 174.
2 Ibid. Sect. xi. (P.) "Christus ergo cum lacrymis et clamore valido orans, a metu suo exauditur: non et a morte sit immunis, sed ne exauditur; ut pregenter. Livid fol. 175.

exauditur: non at a morte sit immunis, sed ne absorbeatur ut peccator. Ibid. fol. 175.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. Sect. v. (P.) "Jam ubi quæritur quomodo abolitis peccatis dissidium Christus internos et Deum sustulorit, et justitiam acquisierit quæ eum nobis faventem ac benevolentem redderet: generaliter responderi potest, toto obedientiæ suæ cursu hoc nobis præstitisse."

Ibid. fol. 172.

<sup>4</sup> See Poddridge a Lachunga (P. 12). "P. **

<sup>4</sup> See Doddridge's Lectures, p. 421. (P.) Prop. clxx.

Institutiones, L. ii. C. xvi. Sect. xi. (P.)
"Neque tamen innuimus Deum fuisse unquam illi vel adversarium vel iratum." Ed. 1602, fol.

<sup>175.

6</sup> Ibid. Sect. vi. (P.) "Filius Dei, omni vitio purissimus, iniquitatum tamen nostrarum probrum as ignominiam induit, as sua vicissim puritate nos operuit." Ibid. fol. 173. 7 Mosheim, IV. p. 47. (P.) Cent. xvi. Pt. ii Ch. i. Sect. xxxvi.

Such, however, is the constitution of things, that we are not authorized to expect any great good without a proportionable mixture of evil. The case of Luther, and of Calvin too, was such. that the reformation of the errors and abuses of Popery could not have been expected of them, or of their followers, but on principles equally erroneous. Happily, however, other persons, unconnected with them, were able, even at that time, to hit the happy medium between the popish doctrine of merit, as a foundation for the abuses of penance, indulgences, &c., and that of cipal and peculiar punishment. But the total insignificance of good works to procure the favour of God. If by punishment of our sins is very diffeour good works we procure the favour rent from that which implies a satisfacof God to ourselves, which is the unition for them.... Nothing can be more form language of the Scripture, and repugnant to each other than a free yet no portion of one person's merit pardon and satisfaction.... Indeed, no be considered as capable of being trans- man of judgment and piety ought to ferred to another (which, indeed, is in entertain the idea of a satisfaction for the nature of things impossible), the very foundation of the popish doctrine of supererogation, and consequently of or goodness and mercy of God."1 indulgences, is overturned; and yet no one false or dangerous principle is introduced in its place.

Faustus Socinus, who distinguished himself so much in recovering the original doctrine of the proper humanity of Christ, as to give occasion to all who now hold that doctrine to be called by his name, saw clearly the absurdity of what was advanced by the other reformers concerning satisfaction being made to the justice of God by the death of Christ. Indeed, it immediately follows from his principles, that Christ being only a man, though ever so innocent. his death could not, in any proper sense of the word, atone for the sins of other men. He was, however, far from abandoning the doctrine of redemption in the Scripture sense of the word, that is, of our deliverance from the guilt of sin by his gospel, as promoting repentance and reformation, and from the punishment due to sin, by his power of giving eternal life to all that obey ing from the plain path of truth and him. But, indeed, if God himself freely forgives the sins of men upon their repentance, there could be no occasion, properly speaking, for anything farther being done to avert the punishment with which they had been threatened. What he says on the subject is as follows :-

"We are thus saved from the punishment of our sins by Christ, because, by his great power in heaven and earth, he brings it about, that no proper punishment can reach us; and by the same power he will accomplish our entire and perpetual freedom from death, which is the wages of sin, and its printhis method of rescuing us from the sin; ... since it plainly does very much derogate from the power and authority,

He farther observes, that "although John the Baptist, when he ascribes to Christ the taking away sin, hath called him a lamb, and in that mode of expression, without doubt, alluded to the expiatory sacrifices" in the law, yet he apprehends that in this the Baptist alluded "to Christ in his whole character, who, in many ways, takes away the sins of the world." In support of this he alleges, "that in the expiatory

&lt;sup>1</sup> Toulmin's Socinus, pp. 185, 186. (P.) "A poenis siquidem peccatorum nostrorum ideo per Christum liberamur, quia Christus summa illa sua in cœlo et in terra potestate efficit, ne ullæ propriæ in con et in terra potestate emet, ne ullæ proprise
peccatorum penænosattingant, et tandem eadem potestate efficiet Phil. iii. 21, ut a morte quæ stipendium peccati est Rom. vi. 23, et ejus quam maxime propria pena, prorsus atque in perpetuum liberi simus. Hæc certe ratio liberandi a penis peccatorum diversissima est ab ea que a peenis peecatorum diversissima est ab ea, quæ satisfactione pro ipsis continetur. . Nihl autem invicem magis pugnare potest, quam gratuita remissio seu condonatio, et satisfactio; quippe quod vel potentiæ et auctoritati, vel certe bonitati et misericordiæ ipsius Dei aperte ac plurinum deroget." Christ. Relig. Instit. F. Socini Opera, 1656, p. 665, Col. i. See also The Recovian Catechism, Sect. v. Ch. viili. in the Translation of the Rev. T. Rees, 1818, pp. 303–320.

pressly offered for sin, no lamb was sacrificed."1

Grotius, having written a treatise in defence of the doctrine of satisfaction, against Socinus, gave occasion to a most excellent answer by Crellius, in defence of the Socinian doctrine on this subject; and to this, Grotius did not think proper to make any reply.

In England, this doctrine of atonement seems to have got as firm possession of the minds of men, as that of the divinity of Christ. It is the doctrine of the established churches of England and Scotland, and is retained, at least in some qualified sense, even by many who do not hold the divinity of Christ, at least, those who are styled Arians.2 For, that a Socinian should hold this doctrine, in any sense, is hardly possible. We are not, however, to expect a sudden and effectual reformation in this or in any other capital article of the corruption of Christianity.

To establish this article was a work, as we have seen, of long time, and therefore we must be content if the overthrow of it be gradual also. Great buildings do not often fall at once, but some apartments will still be thought habitable, after the rest are seen to be totumque Christum ea translatione quodammodo exprimere voluisse; præsertim cum, ut dictum est, Christus non ipsa sui immolatione tantum, sed pluribus allis modis peccata tollat." Prelect. Theol. Op. 1. p. 591. Col. 2.

¹ Toulmin's Socinus, p. 194. (P.) Cujus rei etiam argumentum esse potest, quod in expiatoriis Illis legis sacrificiis, que nominatim pro peccato ofierebantur, nullus agnus immolabatur. Ex quo apparet, cum Baptista Christum agnum appellavit, alterius citam cujuspiam rei, prætor sacrificia illa, rationem habuisse, et ad puritatem, impocentium agnum appearet, ulium illigu respansiona. innocentiam ac mansuetudinem illius respexisse, totumque Christum ea translatione quodammodo

2 Among these Mr. Martin Tonkins, of whom see p. 50, Note, and Dr. John Taylor were distinguished. The former published, in 1732, "Jesus Christ, the Mediator between God and Men; an Advocate for us with the Father; and Propitiation for the Sins of the World." Driestles assas in his Memoirs, that he "left the Priestley says in his Memoirs, that he "left the scademy, with a qualified belief of the doctrine of Atonement, such as is found in that book." Dr. John Taylor published, in 1751, "The Scripture Doctrine of Atonement examined; first, irrelation to Jewish Sacrifices; and then to the Scripture of Says belowed Lord and Sarjour Leave. Sacrifice of our blessed Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ." Of this piece there was a second enlarged edition.

sacrifices of the law, which were ex- in ruins. It is the same with great systems of doctrine, the parts of which have long gone together. The force of evidence obliges us at first to abandon some one part of them only, and we do not immediately see that, in consequence of this, we ought to abandon others, and at length the whole. And, indeed, could this have been seen from the beginning, it would have been with much more difficulty that we should have been prevailed upon to abandon any part. The very proposal might have staggered us; and any doubt with respect to the whole, might have been followed by universal scepticism. It hath pleased Divine Providence, therefore, to open the minds of men by easy degrees, and the detection of one falsehood prepares us for the detection of another, till, before we are aware of it, we find no trace left of the immense and seemingly well-compacted system. Thus, by degrees, we can reconcile ourselves to abandon all the parts, when we could never have thought of giving up the whole.

There are many who can by no means think that God has, in a proper sense, accepted of the death of Christ in lieu of that of all men, (having no idea of the possibility of transferring guilt, and consequently of transferring punishment,) who yet think that the death of Christ serves to show the divine displeasure at sin, in such a manner, as that it would not have been expedient to pardon any sin without it; and they think that the sacrifices under the law had a real reference to the death of Christ in the scheme of the gospel; while others think the death of Christ was necessary to the pardon of sin, and our restoration to eternal life, in some method of which we have no clear knowledge, being only obscurely intimated in the Scriptures, and therefore could not be intended to produce its effect by any operation on our minds.

In time, however, I make no doubt, but that an attention to what seems now to be ascertained with respect to the moral character and government of God, viz. that he is a being purely good, that in him, justice is only a modification of benevolence, that he simply wishes the happiness of all his creatures, and that virtue is a necessary means of that happiness; that he is incapable of introducing any unnecessary evil, and that his displeasure at sin is sufficiently shewn by the methods which he takes to promote the reformation of sinners, and by the punishment of those who continue unreformed: these, I say, together with other considerations, suggested in the argumentative part of this division of my work, will in time eradicate whatever yet remains of the doctrine of atonement; a doctrine which has no foundation in reason, or in the Scriptures, and is indeed a modern thing.

In fact, the only hold it has on the minds of many Protestants, is by means of such a literal interpretation of single texts of Scripture, as gives the doctrine of transubstantiation a like hold on the minds of Papists. Besides, it must, I am persuaded, lead many persons to think rationally on this subject, and especially dies.

reason; and if there should be found the Scriptures.

any difficulty in accommodating the one to the other, (and I think there is even less of this than might have been expected,) the former, and not the latter, should remain unaccounted for. Time may clear up obscurities in particular texts, by discovering various readings. by the clearer knowledge of ancient customs and opinions, &c. But arguments drawn from such considerations as those of the moral government of God, the nature of things, and the general plan of revelation, will not be put off to a future time. The whole compass and force of them is within our present reach, and if the mind be unbiassed, they must, I think, determine our assent.

It is certainly a great satisfaction to entertain such an idea of the Author of the universe, and of his moral government, as is consonant to the dictates of reason and the tenor of revelation in general, and also to leave as little obscurity in the principles of it as possible; that the articles of our creed on this great subject may be few, clear and simple. Now it is certainly the to abandon all middle opinions with doctrine of reason, as well as of the respect to it, to observe, as they must Old Testament, that God is merciful do if they give due attention to the to the penitent, and that nothing is language of Scripture, that those par- requisite to make men, in all situations, ticular texts on which they are dis- the objects of his favour, but such posed to lay so much stress, give no moral conduct as he has made them countenance to any middle doctrine. capable of. This is a simple and a For they must either be interpreted pleasing view of God and his moral literally, according to the plain and government, and the consideration of obvious sense of the words, which will it cannot but have the best effect on enforce the belief of proper vicarious the temper of our minds and conduct punishments, or they must be inter- in life. The general tenor of the New preted figuratively; and then they will Testament is likewise plainly agreeable not oblige us to believe the doctrine of to this view of things, and none of the atonement in any sense, or that Christ facts recorded in it require to be illusdied a sacrifice in any other manner, trated by any other principles. In than as any person might be said to this, then, let us acquiesce, not doubtbe a sacrifice to the cause in which he ing but that, though perhaps not at present, we shall in time be able, with-It is now, certainly, time to lay stress out any effort or straining, to explain on the interpretation of particular texts, all particular expressions in the aposand to allow more weight to general tolical epistles, &c. in a manner perconsiderations, derived from the whole feetly consistent with the general strain tenor of Scripture and the dictates of of their own writings, and the rest of

PART III.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS CONCERNING GRACE, ORIGINAL SIN AND PREDESTINATION.

THE INTRODUCTION.

That it must be naturally in the New Testament is uniformly delivered power of man to do the will of God, in the same strain.

Motwithstanding this, it hath been case being able to alter it.

to the practice of their duty, by the most solemn assurances, that God is NEXT to the opinions concerning the not willing that any should perish, and person of Christ, none have agitated by repeated warnings, that their dethe minds of men more, or produced struction will lie at their own door: more serious consequences, than those the general tenor of the preaching of relating to the doctrines of grace, ori- the old prophets being, Turn ye, turn ginal sin and predestination, which ye, from your evil way. Why will ye have so many connections, that I think die, O house of Israel? Also, everyit proper to treat of them all together. thing that is of a moral nature in the pose the moral government of God to imagined that all these representations be at all an equitable one. He that are to be accommodated to a system, made man, certainly knew what he according to which, the whole race of was capable of, and would never commankind received so great an injury mand him to do what he had not en- by the fall of Adam, that from that abled him to perform; so as to propose time none of his posterity have been to him a reward which he knew he capable even of forming a good thought, could never attain, and a punishment and much less of doing all that God which he knew he had no power of requires of them; and, moreover, that avoiding. If it be worth our while to they are all so far involved in the coninquire at all into the government sequences of his fall, and his sin is under which we live, we must begin considered as so much their own, (he with assuming these first principles. being their representative, standing in For, otherwise, we have nothing to do their place, and acting for them,) that but to await whatever he who made they are even properly punishable for us hath pleased to determine concernit, and liable on that account to evering us, nothing that we can do in the lasting torment, though they had never sinned themselves. It is believed. Supposing, therefore, that God did however, that God hath been pleased not mean to tantalize his creatures, in to save certain individuals of mankind the most cruel and insulting manner, from this general ruin, but that it was every moral precept in the Scriptures not from any respect to the better chais a proof that man has naturally a racter or conduct of such individuals, power of obeying it, and of insuring but of his mere free and arbitrary the reward annexed to the observance grace. It is also part of the same of it. Now moral precepts, with ex- system, that every good thought and press sanctions of rewards and punish-purpose, in the hearts even of those ments, abound in the Scriptures; and who are thus elected, is immediately men are even expostulated with, in the inspired by God, and that without this most earnest manner, and persuaded continual assistance, to which they give the name of grace, no man has language on this subject will appear ment of his birth to his death.

that is good to God; but to ascribe to mankind as abandoned by the same thing. What have we, as the apostle most objectionable side of any scheme says, that we have not received? How, of principles which they adopt. then, are we the less indebted to God, certainly tends to make the divine character and government appear less respectable, indeed execrable.

first suggested in the heat of controversy; and when the mind was once prepossessed in favour of some of the maxims of it, the rest were gradually introduced to complete the scheme; to favour the preconceived hypothesis.

system, or that which ascribes everything that is good immediately to God, without respect to second causes, has any choice but of evil, from the mo- to be as just as it is pious, when it is rightly interpreted. Many persons, no It is not easy to imagine, a priori, doubt, will be more easily reconciled what could have led men into such a to the doctrine of election by previously train of thinking, so evidently contrary imagining that they themselves are in to the plain dictates of reason, and the the number of the elect; and while most natural interpretation of Scrip- they can thus fancy themselves to be ture. There is, indeed, an appearance the peculiar favourites of heaven, they of humility in ascribing everything can better bear to consider the rest of him, as all men must do, those powers Being to a severer fate. Also, in by which we are enabled to perform general, all men are sufficiently ingood works, comes, in fact, to the same clined to look off from the dark and

With respect to the fall of Adam, whether he works all our works in us all that we can learn from the Scripand for us, by his own immediate tures, interpreted literally, is, that the agency, or, he does it mediately, that laborious cultivation of the earth, and is, by means of those powers which he the mortality of his race, were the conhas given us for that purpose? With sequence of it. This is all that is said respect to the character of the Divine by Moses, and likewise all that is al-Being, it certainly loses more by the luded to by the apostle Paul, who says, idea of the predestination of the greatest that by one man sin entered into the part of mankind to inevitable destruc- world. For what he adds, all have tion, than it can gain by the belief of sinned, can only mean that all are inan arbitrary interference in favour of volved in that death which was the a few. The whole scheme, therefore, consequence of his sin. If, indeed, this be interpreted literally, it will imply that all are involved in his guilt as well as in his sufferings. But this is In fact, it is probable that such a so unnatural an interpretation, and so scheme as this would never have en- evidently contrary to sense and reason, tered into the mind of any man, who (sin being in its own nature a personal had been left to his own speculations thing, and not transferable,) that the on the subject, or to his study of the text was never understood in this sense Scriptures. Accordingly, we find that till the system, the history of which I the principal parts of this system were am writing, was so far advanced as to require it, and to have prepared the minds of men for it. In like manner, the words of our Saviour, this is mu body, was always understood to mean a memorial of his body, till the minds and the Scriptures, as in all other of men were gradually prepared to bear cases, were afterwards easily imagined a literal interpretation of them; and favour the preconceived hypothesis. then that interpretation was made use Indeed, the more amiable part of the of to support the doctrine which suggested it.

In like manner, there is a predestination spoken of by the apostle Paul; considerable countenance from the but, in general, it means the good-will piety of the sacred writers; but their and pleasure of God, in giving certain people peculiar privileges, and especially the knowledge of the gospel, for the improvement of which they were answerable. If he does speak of future glory, as the consequence of this predestination, it was upon the presumption that they improved those advantages, and by that means made themselves the proper subjects of future happiness. Or, possibly, in some cases, the apostle, considering God as the ultimate and proper author of everything that is good, and of all happiness, might overlook the immediate means and steps, and with this sense of piety and comprehension of mind, might speak of future glory itself as the gift of God, and therefore might make no difference in his mind, at that time, between predestination and foreknowledge. But the tenor of all his writings shows, that it was far from being his intention to represent future glory as given by an arbitrary decree of God, without any respect to the good works which alone can fit men for it; which good works are as much in a man's power as any other action of which he is capable.

Having premised these general observations, I now proceed to show by what steps these principles of the utter inability of man to do the will of God, as derived from the fall of Adam, the imputation of his sin to all his posterity, and the arbitrary predestination of some to eternal life, and the consequent rejection, or reprobation, of the rest of mankind, by which they are devoted to certain and everlasting destruction, were first introduced, and at length got the firm establishment they now have in the creeds of almost all Christian churches.

SECTION I.

OF THE DOCTRINES OF GRACE, ETC. BE-FORE THE PELAGIAN CONTROVERSY.

It is remarkable that we find hardly any trace of what are now called the doctrines of grace, original sin, or predestination before the Pelagian controversy, which was near the end of the fourth century. I believe all the moderns are agreed, that it was clearly the opinion of all the ancient fathers, that God has left it entirely in the power of every man to act well or ill. Basnage, who was himself sufficiently orthodox in the modern sense of the word, acknowledges, that though the fathers in general thought that we are indebted to the grace of God for all our virtues, yet they say that the beginning of salvation is from man, and that it depends entirely upon himself.1 It is not denied, however, but that they might believe an internal influence upon the mind on extraordinary occasions; but, as Vossius observes, none before Austin supposed that there was an immediate concurrence of divine grace, necessary to every good thought or action.2

"God," says Justin Martyr, "has not made man like trees and quadrupeds, (δενδρεα και τετραποδα,) who can do nothing from choice and judgment; for he would not be worthy of reward or praise, if he did not of himself choose what was good, but was made good; nor, if he was wicked, could he be justly punished, as not having been such of himself, but only what he had been made."3 In support of this he quotes Isa. i. 16: "Wash ye, make ye clean," &c. Basnage says,4 that the ancients maintained free-will with much warmth, granting men an entire power to be converted or not. Clemens Alexandrinus and Origen, he says, were at the head of this party.

It is remarkable that Austin himself, before he engaged in the controversy with Pelagius, held the same opinion concerning free-will with the rest of the fathers who had preceded him, and he was far from denying this. In particular, he acknowledges, that before this time he had been of opinion, that faith, or at least the beginning of faith, and a desire of conversion, was in the

Hist. des Eglises Reform. I. p. 169. (P.)

Historia Pelagianismi, p. 291. (P.)

Apol. I. Ed. Thirlby, p. 65. (P.)

Hist, des Eglises Reform. p. 76. (P.)

"If there be not grace, how should God punished him according to the use he save the world, and if there be not free- made of it.6 will, how can he judgethe world?2 No man," says he, "can be justly con- must have maintained, according to his demned for doing that which he was known philosophical principles, that not able to resist."3 Citing a passage in perfect freedom with respect to virtue the son of Sirach, (Eccles. xv. 14, 17,) and vice was only enjoyed by man in his "God left man in the hands of his coun- pre-existent state. For he, with other sel, he placed life and death before him, Platonists, maintained that the souls of that that which he pleased should be men had sinned in heaven, and theregiven him," he says, "Behold here is a fore were united to such bodies as were very plain proof of the liberty of the human will; for how does God command, if the flesh laid upon it a kind of necessity man has not free-will, or power to obey."4 He also proves, that it is in our power to change the will, from these words of our Saviour, "Make the tree good and tions." But he was far from supposing

the fruit good," &c.5

We have almost the same unanimous opinion of the ancients, concerning the effects of the sin of Adam, as concerning the natural capacity of man with respect to virtue and vice; and they had occasion to speak to this subject very early, in consequence of the opinion of the Gnostics in general, and the Manicheans in particular; who held that the souls of men were originally of different ranks, and sprang from different principles, good beings having produced jected men to this mortality not out of some of them, and bad beings the rest; on which account they said some were to beget in them a hatred of sin, and naturally carnal and others spiritual. Accordingly, they had taught that sin arose not from the free-will of man, but from the substance of matter, which natural, and not the effect of sin.10 they held to be the only source of evil; so that some souls were wicked not by choice, but by nature.

In opposition to this, Origen maintained, that all souls were by nature equally capable of virtue or vice, and that the differences among men arose merely from the freedom of the will, and the various uses of that freedom; that God power of man. It was a saying of his, left man to his liberty, and rewarded or

It is evident, however, that Origen a clog and a prison to the soul, and that of sinning. Chrysostom also says, that with an infirm body we derive from Adam a proneness to inordinate affecthat men were in any other manner sufferers by the fall of Adam; and least of all that they were personally responsible for his conduct of himself. Le Sueur laments that this writer was not quite orthodox with respect to original sin, grace and free-will; but he apologizes for him, as having written before the heresy of Pelagius broke out.8

The fathers who, in general, held that the punishment of Adam's sin "was only mortality,...declare, that God subanger, but out of wisdom and clemency, that sin might not be eternal in them."9 But Titus, bishop of Bostra, who was before Pelagius, taught that death was

Vossius acknowledges, that Clemens Alexandrinus had no knowledge of original sin; 11 and "Epiphanius truly blames Origen, and John of Jerusalem, for saying that the image and similitude of God was lost in man after the expulsion of Adam out of paradise."12

Austin himself, in his controversy

1 De Prædestinatione, L. i. C. iii. Op. VII. p. 1235. (P.)

Epist. xlvi. Op. II. p. 160. (P.)
 De Duabus Animabus, C. x. Op. VI. p. 153.

(P.)
4 De Gratia, C. ii. Op. VII. p. 1299. (P.)
5 Contra Adimantum, C. xxvi. Op. V. p. 210.

<sup>6</sup> See his Philocalia, p. 50, &c. (P.)

<sup>7</sup> Opera, IX. p. 136. (P.)

8 A.D. 407. (P.)

9 Whitby on the Five Points, 1710. Preface,

<sup>10</sup> Basnage, Hist. des Eglises Reform. I. p. 167.

(P.)
11 Hist, Pelag. p. 160. (P.)
12 Whitby, Ibid. p. 391. (P.)

with the Manicheans, declared that it is impossible that souls should be evil by nature.1 So far was he from supposing that men were responsible for Adam's conduct, that he said, "no man is wise, valiant or temperate, with the wisdom. valour or temperance of another, or righteous with the righteousness of another."2

The testimony of the fathers in this period is no less clear against the doctrine of predestination to eternal life, without respect to good works. All the fathers before Austin, says Whitby, interpreted what the apostle Paul says of predestination, in the 8th and 9th chapters of his epistle to the Romans, of those whom God foreknew to have good purposes; and in a simuar manner they explain all the other texts from which the doctrine of election and reprobation is now deduced: and Austin himself, in his controversy with the Manicheans, interpreted them in the same manner. Melancthon says, that all the ancients, except Austin, asserted that there was some cause of election in ourselves; and Prosper, who took the part of Austin, acknowledged that the Pelagians treated his doctrine as a novelty.3

Justin Martyr could have no knowledge of arbitrary predestination, when he said, "if everything come to pass by fate, it is plain that nothing will be in our power. If it be fate that this man shall be good, and the other bad, the one is not to be praised, nor the other blamed." 4

Didymus, who taught theology at Alexandria, (afterwards condemned for his adherence to Origen, but on no other account,) says, that predestination depends upon God's foreknowledge of those who would believe the gospel, and live according to it; 5 and Jerome was so far from believing the modern doctrine of election and reprobation, that he thought that no Christian would finally perish.

It is sufficiently evident from these testimonies, that the doctrine of the utter inability of man to do the will of God, of the corruption of our nature by the fall of Adam, and of our responsibility for it, together with the doctrine of absolute, unconditional election of some to eternal life, and of the reprobation of the rest of mankind, were altogetherunknown in the primitive church. We must now consider the Pelagian controversy, and the remarkable change which it occasioned with respect to these doctrines.

SECTION II.

OF THE PELAGIAN CONTROVERSY AND THE STATE OF OPINIONS IN CONSEQUENCE OF IT.

Pelagius was a British monk, allowed by Austin himself to have been a man of irreproachable morals, who travelled in company with Celestius, another monk and a native of Ireland, and with him resided some time at Rome, a little after the year 400. As far as appears, these two men had no opinions different from those which we have seen to have been generally held by the Christian writers of that age; but being men of sense and virtue, they opposed with warmth some growing abuses and superstitions, especially with respect to the efficacy of baptism.

This rite, we shall find, was very soon imagined to have a power of washing away sin; and a notion of a similar nature had also prevailed respecting the Lord's supper. But it was the former of these superstitions that happened to come in the way of Pelagius to oppose. As an argument that baptism could not of itself be of any avail to the pardon of sins, he urged the application of it to infants, who had no sin: he maintained that nothing but good works are

De Duabus Animabus, C. xii. Op. VI. p. 155, &c. (P.)

2 De Libero Arbitrio, L. ii. C. xix. Op. I. p. 663.

(P.)

2 Five Points, pp. 101-103. (P.)

4 Apol. I. Edit. Thirlby, p. 64. (P.)

5 Basnage Hist. des Eglises Reform, I. p. 168.

of any avail in the sight of God; and that to these alone, which it is in every sin is annexed.

It does not appear that these doctrines, which were the outlines of what has since been called the Pelagian heresy, met with any opposition at Rome. But retiring from that city on the approach of the Goths, these monks went to Africa, and Celestius remaining there, Pelagius proceeded to Palestine. where he enjoyed the protection of John, bishop of Jerusalem, while his friend. and his opinions, met with a very different reception from Austin, bishop of Hippo, who, in his account of what followed, says he was first staggered at hearing it asserted, that "infants were not baptized for the remission of sins, but only that they might be sanctified in Christ;" by which was probably meant, that they were dedicated to God, and destined to be instructed in the principles of the Christian religion.

Upon this, Celestius and his friend were gradually engaged in a warm contest, in the course of which (as was certainly the case with respect to Austin, their principal opponent) they were probably led to advance more than had originally occurred to them, in order to make their system more complete. Among other things, they are said to have asserted that mankind derives no injury whatever from the fall of Adam; that we are now as capable of obeying the will of God as he was; that otherwise it would have been absurd and cruel to propose laws to men, with the sanction of rewards and punishments; and that men are born as well without vice as without virtue. Pelagius is also said to have maintained that it is even possible for men, if they will use their best endeavours, to live entirely without sin. This, Jerome says, he borvinian, whom he calls the patriarchs of the Pelagian heresy.

De Peccatis, &c. L. iii. C. vi. Op. VII. p. 725.

Pelagius did not deny what may be called external grace, or that the docman's power to perform, the pardon of trines and motives of the gospel are necessary, but he admitted nothing of internal grace. He acknowledged, indeed, that the power we have to obey the will of God, is the gift of God to us; but he said that the direction of this power depends upon ourselves. He is even said to have advanced, after Titus of Bostra above mentioned, that we do not die in consequence of the sin of Adam, but by the necessity of nature, and that Adam himself would have died if he had not sinned.2 Much farther was he from supposing that the second death, or the punishment of the wicked in a future world, was any consequence of the sin of Adam.

In several of these positions, Pelagius appears to have gone farther than the generality of Christians in his time, even of those in the East, where he met with the most favourable reception. He was particularly censured by Chrysostom and Isidore, for asserting that man had no need of any inward assistance, which was generally believed to be afforded, especially on extraordinary occasions, and that man had received no injury whatever from the sin of Adam.

Austin, in his controversy with the Pelagians, made no difficulty of renouncing many of the things which he had advanced against the Manicheaus. "Yet," says Whitby, "he hath been able to say nothing in answer to some of the arguments produced by him in their confutation;" and "the exceptions which he makes to some of his own rules, and the answers he attempts to make to some of his own arguments are vain, false and absurd." Thus he had before defined sin to be "the will to do that from which we have the power to abstain;" but afterwards he said, he had then "defined that which was rowed from Origen, from whomit passed only sin, and not that which is also, to Rufinus, Evagrius, Ponticus and Jo- pæna peccati, the punishment of sin."3 Inopposition to the doctrine of human without this we are free only to do evil, them all.

> <sup>2</sup> Austin De Hæresibus, Sect. lxxxviii. Op. VI. p. 33. (P.) Five Points, p. 392. (P.)

but have no power to do good.

have had that grace of God, spoken of state of perdition into which the fall in the gospel, by the help of which of Adam had brought them, and therewere performed; to be consistent with himself he maintained that none of the works of the Heathens were properly good, and that even the good works of Cornelius would have availed nothing without faith in Christ. Sometimes, indeed, he would allow that the good them to a temporary reward, and lessen their future torments.2 But he likewise distinguished himself by saying that such good works were only a kind of shining sins. In support of this doctrine, he said that Christ would have died in vain, if, in any other manner than by faith in him, men could have attained to true faith, virtue, righteousness and wisdom.3 But in this he did not attend to the doctrine of Paul, who says, that they who have not the law are judged without law; they being a law to themselves; their own consciences accusing or else excusing them.

With respect to original sin, Austin strenuously maintained that infants derive sin from Adam, and that his guilt was, in some way, entailed upon them, so that they are obnoxious to punishment on account of it; though he acknowledges it was no proper guilt of theirs, but only that of their ancestor, the sin being an act of his will only.4 Afterwards, an improvement was made upon this doctrine by the disciples of Austin, who asserted, that a covenant was made with all mankind in Adam, as their first parent, and that he was made to represent them all; so that, had he obeyed, all his posterity would have been happy through his obedience; but that in his merit, he asserted that divine grace is disobedience they are all sinners, his necessary to bend the will, for, that act being imputed and transferred to

Austin maintains that baptism is As the Heathens could not be said to necessary to recover men from that alone Austin supposed that good works fore that all who were not baptized were in a state of damnation. To prove that infants had sinned in Adam. he urged, that otherwise Christ could not be their Saviour.5 He appears, however, to have been shocked at the thoughts of exposing infants to the torments of hell on account of the sin works of the Heathens would entitle of Adam only; and therefore he maintained that, though they were in hell, their punishment was so little, that they would rather choose to exist under it, than not to exist at all.6 This was afterwards dressed up as a division, or partition in hell, and was called Limbus Infantum. Before the Pelagian controversy, Austin had said that the souls of infants, dying unbaptized, went neither to heaven nor to hell, but went to a place where they neither enjoyed the vision of God, nor suffered the pains of the damned.7

Since, according to the preceding doctrine, the very first motion towards any good work, such as faith and repentance, is immediately from God, and it is not in the power of man to contribute anything towards it, Austin was obliged, in pursuance of his doctrine, to maintain that God had, of his own arbitrary will, predestinated to eternal life all that were actually saved, while the rest of mankind were left exposed to a punishment which they had no power of avoiding. At the same time, however, maintaining, according to the universal opinion of that age, that baptism was the Christian regeneration. and washed away all sin, original and actual, he was under a necessity of distinguishing between regeneration and

<sup>1</sup> De Baptismo, C. viii. Op. VII. p. 379. (P.)

2 Epist. v. Op. II. p. 25, contra Julianum, L. iv.
C. iii. Op. VII. p. 1033. (P.)

4 Opera, I. p. 22. (P.)

 &lt;sup>6</sup> Contra duas Pelagianorum Epistolas, L. i.
 C. xxiii, Op. VII. p. 879. (P.)
 <sup>6</sup> Contra Julianum, L. v. C. viii. Op. VII.
 p. 1085. (P.)
 <sup>7</sup> De Libero Arbitrio, L. iii. C. xxiii. Op. I. p. 695, (P.)

faith, and regenerating grace might be lost, or that the regenerate might have all grace, but not that of perseverance, since it depended upon the decree and good pleasure of God, whether they would persevere to the end or not.1 In this respect those who now maintain the doctrine of predestination differ very considerably from Austin, maintaining that none are truly regenerated except the elect, and that all these will certainly persevere to the end, and be saved. In the Church of Rome, however, and also in that of England, regeneration and baptism are confounded, and the terms are used as expressing the same thing.2

Austin, whose influence in the churches of Africa was uncontrolled, procured the opinions of his adversary to be condemned in a synod held at Carthage in 412; but they prevailed notwithstanding. The Pelagian doctrine was received with great applause even at Rome. There the conduct of the bishops of Africa, who had stigmatized it as heretical, was condemned, and Pope Zozimus was at the head of those who favoured Pelagius. Austin's doctrine of predestination, in particular, was not confirmed by any council within a century after his death; and though it was defended by the most celebrated divines in the West, it was never generally received in the East. and was controverted by many in Gaul, and the favourers of it explained it with more or less latitude. This controversy, which began with the doctrine of grace, and was extended to original sin and predestination, rent the church into the most deplorable divisions in all succeeding ages, and they have been continued, with little intermission, to the present time.

This controversy was, however, almost wholly confined to the Western church, while the Greeks continued in

1 Vossii Historia Pelagianismi, p. 565. (P.) 2 The question whether baptism be regeneration has, very lately, been started, and is still warmly agitated among the clergy of the Church of England.

salvation; maintaining that justifying the state in which the Christian church in general has been represented to have been before the Pelagian controversy; supposing that election or predestination was always made with a view to men's good works. Chrysostom, as well as John of Jerusalem, continued to hold opinions very different from those of Austin, though these were very soon generally received in the Western church; and just in the heat of this controversy, Cassian, a disciple of Chrysostom, coming to Marseilles, taught a middle doctrine, which was, that "the first conversion of the soul to God was the effect of its free choice," so that all preventing, as it was called, or predisposing grace, was denied by him; and this came to be the distinguishing doctrine of those who were afterwards called Semi-Pelagians. Prosper and Hilary, who were bishops in Gaul, gave an account of this doctrine to Austin, but it was so popular, that he did not venture to condemn it altogether, or to call it an impious and pernicious heresy.3 This controversy also interested many persons, and much was written on both sides of the question.

> The peculiar opinion of the Semi-Pelagians is expressed in a different manner by different writers, but all the accounts sufficiently agree. Thus some represent them as maintaining that inward grace is not necessary to the first beginning of repentance, but only to our progress in virtue. Others say that they acknowledged the power of grace, but said that faith depends upon ourselves, and good works upon God; and it is agreed upon all hands, that these Semi-Pelagians held that predestination is made upon the foresight of good works, which also continued to be the tenet of the Greek church.

> The Semi-Pelagian doctrine is acknowledged by all writers to have been well received in the monasteries of Gaul, and especially in the neighbourhood of Marseilles; owing in a great measure to the popularity of Cassian, which

> 3 Basnage, Hist. des Englises Reform. I. p. 192. Mosheim, I. p. 427. (P.) Cent. v. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. xxvii.

and to the irreproachable lives of those expressly to contradict upon the whole, who stood forth in defence of it. Pros- the Semi-Pelagian doctrine may be said per, writing to Austin about these Semi- to have been most prevalent in England stations in the church.1

The assistance of Austin, though he was then far advanced in life, was called in to combat these Semi-Pelagians, and it was the occasion of his writing more treatises on these subjects. In these he still strenuously maintained, that the predestination of the elect was independent of any foresight of their good works, but was according to the good pleasure of God only, and that perseverance comes from God, and not from the Semi-Pelagian doctrine, and its being patronized by some persons of considerable rank and influence, the majority of such persons must have been against it; for we find that it was generally condemned whenever any synod was called upon the subject. But there were some exceptious. Thus one which was assembled at Arles, about A.D. 475, pronounced an anathema against those who denied that God would have all men to be saved, or that Christ died for all, or that the Heathens might have been saved by the law of nature.2 Upon the whole, it cannot be said that the doctrine of Austin was completely established for some centuries; nor indeed was it ever generally avowed in all its proper consequences, and without any qualifications, till after the Reformation, when the Protestants espoused it, in opposition to the Popish doctrine of merit.

SECTION III.

OF THE DOCTRINE OF GRACE, ETC. IN THE MIDDLE AGES, AND TILL THE RE-FORMATION.

It is pretty evident that, notwithstanding the great nominal authority of Aus-

Sueur, A. D. 429. (P.)
 Vossius, p. 696. Basnage, Hist. des Eglises Reform. II. p. 699. (P.)

counteracted the authority of Austin, tin, whom it was seldom reckoned safe Pelagians, says, "they surpass us in the andin France, especially during the sixth merit of their lives," and are in high and seventh centuries. All the grace that was generally contended for in this period, was that which they supposed to be imparted at baptism, or a kind of supernatural influence which did not fail to accompany or to follow men's own endeavours. Consequently, the operation of it in practice did not materially differ from that of Semi-Pelagianism itself. All the difference in speculation was, that, whereas Pelagius supposed the power of man to do the will of God was given him in his formation, and was therefore properly Notwithstanding the popularity of inherent in him, as much as his bodily strength, that which was asserted by his opponents in these ages was something foreign indeed to a man's self, and imparted at another time, or occasionally, but still, in fact, at his command, and the doctrine of reprobation was never much relished.

In a council held at Orange, in 529, against the Pelagians and Semi-Pelagians, it was determined, that "all those who have been baptized, and have received grace by baptism, can and ought to accomplish the things which belong to their salvation; Jesus Christ enabling them...provided they will labour faithfully." And not only do the fathers assembled upon this occasion profess not to believe that there are men destined to evil or sin by the will of God, but they say that, "if there beany who will believe so great an evil, they denounce [a hundred] anothemas upon them with all detestation."3

In this state things continued, the Pelagian or Semi-Pelagian doctrine being generally received, till about the middle of the ninth century. For, notwithstanding the credit of Austin's name, and the authority of his writings, yet no books were more generally read in those ages than Cassian's Col-best book of institutions for a monk to form his mind upon, and which gave a strong impression in favour of the doctrine of the Greek church. This was very apparent in the ninth sentury, when Godeschalchus was severaly reproved by Hincmar for asserting some of Austin's doctrines, and laving particular stress upon them.

3 Sueur, A.D. 529. (P.) See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. III. p. 533. Note t.

This Godeschalchus was a monk of Orbais, in the diocese of Rheims, who, being fond of Austin's doctrines, carried them rather farther than Austin himself had done; teaching, among other things, that baptism did not save men, that God had predestinated the greatest part of mankind to damnation, and that none would be saved but the elect, for whom only Christ had shed his blood. In this he was opposed by Rabanus Maurus; and a council being held on the subject, at Mayence, and also at Creci, he was condemned, and at length died in prison. Remi, archbishop of Lyons, wrote in his favour, and maintained that Godeschalchus had not said that God predestinated the reprobate to sin and wickedness, but only that he abandoned them to their own free-will, to be punished because they would not believe: and in a council held at Valence in Dauphiny, in which Remi himself presided, the decrees of the former council were annulled. But still the members of this council founded the doctrine of divine decrees on God's prescience that the wicked would destroy themselves. We find no other decisions of any synod or council after this, and different opinions continued to be held on the subject.1

When we come to the age of the proper schoolmen, it is somewhat difficult, notwithstanding they write professedly and at large on all these subjects, to state their opinions with precision, as they seem to confound themselves and their readers with such nice distinctions. In general, Austin lections, which was thought to be the being the oracle of the schools, his doctrine was professed by them all, even by the Franciscans, as well as the Dominicans. They only pretended to dispute about the true sense of his writings. His general doctrine with respect to grace and predestination was so well established, that we only find some subtle distinctions upon the subject, and some evasions of his doctrine by those who did not altogether relish it.

It was agreed among the theologians of this age, that infants are properly chargeable with the sin of Adam, and liable to damnation on that account. because the will of Adam was in some sort the will of the infant. Thomas Aguinas endeavours to prove that it was only the first sin of Adam that could be transferred to his posterity, and that vitiated all his offspring, his subsequent offences affecting himself only. He farther maintains that original sin, being communicated in the act of generation, a person born miraculously cannot have it.2

According to some of the schoolmen, the power of man was but inconsiderable, even before the fall. Peter Lombard says, that "by the grace of God given to man, he could resist evil, but could not do good. Free choice," he says, "is the faculty of reason and will, by which, with the help of grace, we can choose good, or without it.

"Thomas Aguinas-not only asserted all St. Austin's doctrine (especially that of predestination), but added this to it, that, whereas formerly it was, in general, held that the providence of God did extend to all things whatsoever, he thought this was done by God's concurring immediately to the production of every thought, action, motion or mode." And, not to make "God the author of sin, a distinction was made between the positive act of sin, which was said not to be evil, and the want of its conformity to the law of God, which, being a nega-tion, was no positive being."

&lt;sup>1</sup> Vossii Historia Pelagianismi, p. 734. (P.)

Summa, II. pp. 166, 168. (P.)
 Sententiæ, L. ii. Dist. iv. pp. 391, 892. (P.)

There is no small difficulty in settling the opinion of Thomas Aquinas about grace, though he writes so largely on the subject. He says, that a man cannot even prepare himself for the grace of God without prior grace. Yet he says, in general, that a man must prepare himself for receiving grace, and that then the infusion of grace necessarily follows. He also says, that a man's free will is necessary to receive the grace by which he is justified. And yet he says, that it cannot be known to any person, except by revelation, whether he has grace.2 No modern fanatic can say anything more favourable to the doctrine of instantaneous conversion than this writer does. "The justification of a sinner," he says, "is in an instant;" and, again, that "it is the greatest work of God, and altogether miraculous."3

The manner in which this writer and other catholics make room for the doctrine of merit, together with these high notions concerning grace, which they never professedly abandoned, is not a little curious. "A man may merit of God," says Thomas Aquinas, "not absolutely, indeed, but as receiving a reward for doing that which God enables him to do." Yet he still acknowledges, that a man cannot merit the first grace, either for himself or for another, and that Christ alone can do this.4

If Thomas Aquinas could find room for the doctrine of merit in his system, which was professedly built on that of Austin, it may well be presumed, that the disciples of Duns Scotus (the head of the Franciscan order, as Aquinas was the chief of the Dominicans), and who opposed the doctrine of Aquinas as much as he could, were not less favourable to the doctrine of merit. Burnet says, that "Scotus, who was a Franciscan, denied the pre-determination and asserted the freedom of the will," and that Durandus denied that immediate concourse of God with the human will, which had been asserted by Aquinas, but that in this "he has not had many followers, except Adola and some few others."5

At length, the members of the Church of Rome not only attained to a firm persuasion concerning the doctrine of merit, notwithstanding the slender ground on which it was built, but imagined that not only Christ, but also some men, and especially martyrs, and those who lived a life of great austerity. had even more merit than themselves had occasion for; so that there remained some good works in the balance of their account more than they wanted for their own justification. These they termed works of supererogation, and imagined that they might be transferred to the account of other persons. The whole accumulated stock of this merit was called the treasure of the church, and was thought to be at the disposal of the Popes. Clement VI., in his bull for the celebration of the jubilee in 1350, speaks of this treasure as composed of "the blood of Christ, the virtue of which is infinite, of the merit of the virgin mother of God, and of all the saints."6 This doctrine was the foundation for those indulgences, of which an account will be given in another place, and the monstrous abuse of which brought about the Reformation by Luther.

SECTION IV

OF THE DOCTRINES OF GRACE, ORIGINAL SIN, AND PREDESTINATION, SINCE THE REFORMATION.

As good generally comes out of evil, so sometimes, and for a season at least, evil arises out of good. This, however. was remarkably the case with respect to these doctrines, in consequence of

<sup>1</sup> Burnet on the Articles, p. 194. (P.) Art. xvii.

Ed. 4. p. 147.

2 Summa, II. pp. 243-252. (P.)

3 Ibid. pp. 254, 255. (P.)

■ Ibid. II. pp. 257, 258. (P.)

<sup>5</sup> Exposition, p. 194. (P.) Art. xvii. p. 147.
6 Memoires pour la Vie de Petrarch, III. p. 75. (P.)

the reformation by Luther. For the abuse of that of the doctrine of merit zeal of this great man against the doctrine of indulgences, and that of merit, as the foundation of it, unhappily led him and others so far into the opposite extreme, that from his time the doctrines of grace, original sin, and predestination, have been generally termed the doctrines of the Reformation, and everything that does not agree with them has been termed popish, and branded with other opprobrious epithets.

These doctrines, I observed, originated with Austin, and though they never made much progress in the Greek church, they infected almost all the Latin churches. We see plain traces of them among the Waldenses, who were the earliest reformers from Poperv. For, in the Confession of their Faith bearing the date of 1120, they say, "We are sinners in Adam and by Adam," and in another Confession. dated 1532, they say, that "all who are or shall be saved, God has elected from the foundation of the world; and that whoever maintains free-will, de-God."1 Wickliffe also "asserted the necessity of being assisted by divine grace. Without this, he saw not how a human being could make himself acceptable to God."2

But if we were sufficiently acquainted with all the opinions of the Waldenses, and other early reformers, we might, perhaps, meet with many things that would qualify the seeming rigory of these articles. It is certain, however, that neither among the ancient re-formers, nor among the Dominicans, or any others who leaned the most to the doctrine of Austin in the Church of Rome, was the scheme so connected in all its parts, and rendered so systematical and uniform, as it was by Tuther and the reformers who followed him. Besides that Luther was led to lay the stress that he did upon the doctrine of grace, in consequence of the

<sup>1</sup> Leger, Histoire, pp. 87, 95. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Gilpin's Life of him, 1765, p. 75. (P.)

in the Church of Rome, he had himself been, as was observed before, a monk of the order of Austin, and had always been a great admirer of his writings. Also most of those of the Church of Rome who first opposed him were of a different persuasion; the doctrines of Austin having been either abandoned. or nearly explained away, by the generality of the divines of that age. Upon the whole, therefore, it was not to be expected, that such a person as Luther was, should begin a reformation upon any more liberal principles. The fact.

however, is notorious. "Luther," says the translator of Mosheim, "carried the doctrine of justification by faith to such an excessive length, as seemed, though perhaps contrary to his intention, to derogate not only from the necessity of good works, but even from their obligation and importance. He would not allow them to be considered either as the conditions or means of salvation, nor even as a preparation for receiving it." He adds, that "the doctrines of absonies predestination, and the grace of lute predestination, irresistible grace, and human impotence, were never carried to a more excessive length.... by any divine than they were by Luther."3 Amsdorf, a Lutheran divine, maintained, Mosheim says, "that good works were an impediment to salvation." Flacius, another Lutheran, held, that original sin was not an accident, but of "the very substance of human nature."4

In some of the first Confessions of Faith published by the Lutherans, and others of the first reformers, the doctrines of grace, original sin, and predestination,5 are laid down with remarkable rigour, and a studied exact-The Augustan ness of expression. Confession says, "On the account of Adam's sin we are liable to the wrath of God, and eternal death, and the corruption of human nature is propagated

Eccl. Hist. IV. pp. 36 Note [q], 40 Note [b], (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. iii. Pt. ii. xvii. xxx. Notes. 4 Ibid. pp. 39, 43. (P.) Ibid. xxix. xxxiii. 5 Ibid. p. 40. Note [b].

(vitium originis) is truly a damning friend of Luther, and the support of sin, and causing eternal death to all his cause, being convinced by the reawho are not born again by baptism and the spirit."1 We find, however, some expressions rather stronger than even these in the Gallic Confession: "We believe that this vice," (vitium,) meaning original sin, "is truly a sin, which makes all and every man, not even excepting infants in the womb, liable, in the sight of God, to eternal death."2 If any doctrine can make a man shudder, it must be this. Believing this, could any man (unless he had a firmer persuasion than most men can, by the force of any imagination, attain to, of himself being among the number of the elect) bless God that he is a descendant of Adam?

Calvin held these doctrines with no less rigour; and as the Lutherans afterwards abandoned them, they are now generally known by the name of Calvinistic doctrines. As to "the most ancient Helvetic Doctors," says Mosheim, "their sentiments seemed to differ but very little from those of the Pelagians; nor did they hesitate in declaring, after the example of Zuingle, that the kingdom of heaven was open to all who lived according to the dictates of right reason;" but Calvin, when he came among them, " maintained that the everlasting condition of mankind in a future world was determined, from all eternity, by the unchangeable order of the Deity," arising from "no other motive than his own good pleasure and free will."3

Luther's rigid doctrine of election was opposed by Erasmus, who wished well to the Reformation, but was concerned as well for the violence with which it was carried on, as for the unjustifiable length to which Luther carried his opposition, especially with respect to the doctrine of predestination. Luther never answered the last piece of Erasmus on the subject of

1 Eccl. Hist. IV. p. 9. (P.)

This vice of our origin free-will; and Melancthon, the great soning of Erasmus, came over to his opinion on that subject. And it is very remarkable, that by degrees, and indeed pretty soon afterwards, the Lutherans in general changed also; and some time after the death of Luther and Melancthon, the divines who were deputed by the elector of Saxony, to compose the famous book entitled The Concord, abandoned the doctrine of their master, and taught that the decree of election was not absolute, that God saves all who will believe, that he gives all men sufficient means of salvation, and that grace may be resisted.4

The principles of all the other reformed churches are, however, still Calvinistic, and among them those of the Churches of England and of Scotland, notwithstanding the generality of divines of the former establishment are acknowledged to be no great admirers of that system.

In Holland, there was no obligation on the ministers to maintain what are called the Calvinistic doctrines, till the synod of Dort; when, by the help of faction in the state, the Calvinistic party in that country prevailed, and those who opposed them, and in consequence of remonstrating against their proceedings, got the name of Remonstrants, were cruelly persecuted and banished. It is remarkable, however, as Mosheim observes, that since the time of that synod, "the doctrine of absolute decrees lost ground from day to day."5

With respect to the Church of Rome, it cannot be denied, that the cause of sound morality had suffered much by means of many sophistical distinctions. introduced by their divines and casuists about the time of the Reformation, as by the distinction of sins into venial and mortal; the latter of which only, they say, deserve the pains of hell, whereas the former may be atoned for

Pt. ii. Ch. ii. xii.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 80. (P.) <sup>3</sup> Ibid. pp. 72, 73, 80. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. iii. Pt. ii, C. ii. vii. xii.

<sup>4</sup> Basnage, Histoire, II. p. 265. (P.) See Toplady, Hist. Proof, I. p. 318.
5 Eccl. Hist. IV. p. 499. (P.) Cent. xvii. Sect. it.

by penances, liberality to the church, &c. It was another of their tenets, that if men do not put a bar to the efficacy of the sacraments, particularly that of penance; if there had been but "imperfect acts of sorrow accompanying them," (such as sorrow for the difficulties a man brings himself into by his vices,) "the use of the sacraments does so far complete those weak acts, as to justify us." The Jesuits introduced several other exceedingly dangerous maxims with repect to morals; but they were never received by the Catholics in general, and were sufficiently exposed by their enemies the Jansenists, within the pale of that church.

The fathers of the Council of Trent found much difficulty in settling the doctrines of grace and predestination, Dominicans, being attached to the doctrine of Austin. At length their sole object was to make such a decree as should give the least offence, though it should decide nothing. Among other things, it was determined that "good works are, of their own nature, meritorious of eternal life;" but it is added, by way of softening, that it is through the goodness of God "that he makes his own gifts to us to be merits in us."2 It is, says Burnet, "the doctrine of a great many in the Church of Rome, and which seems to be that established at Trent,...that the remission of sins is to be considered as a thing previous to justification, and ... freely given in Christ Jesus; and that in consequence of this there is such a grace infused, that thereupon the person becomes truly just, and is considered as such by God;" but this, he adds, "is but a question about words."3

At the Council of Trent, Catarin revived an opinion which was said to have been invented by Occam, and supported by some of the schoolmen, viz. that God has chosen small number of persons, as the blessed virgin, and the apostles, &c. whom he was determined to save without any foresight of their good works, and that he also wills that all the rest should be saved, providing for them all necessary means for that purpose, but, that they are at liberty to use or refuse them.4 This opinion was that of Mr. Baxter in England, from whom it is frequently with us, and especially the Dissenters, called the Baxterian scheme. 5 Upon the whole, the Council of Trent made a decree in favour of the Semi-Pelagian doctrine.6

At first, Bellarmine, Suarez, and the Jesuits in general, were predestinarians, but afterwards the fathers of that order abandoned that doctrine, and differed many of the members, particularly the from the Semi-Pelagians only in this, that they allowed a preventing grace, but such as is subject to the freedom of the will.

The author of this, which is commonly called the middle scheme, or the doctrine of sufficient grace for all men, was Molina, a Jesuit; from whom the favourers of that doctrine were called Molinists, and the controversy between them and the Jansenists, (so called from Jansenius,8 a great advocate for the

<sup>4</sup> Basnage, Histoire, II. p. 612. (P.)

<sup>8</sup> Dr. Kippis says, that <sup>7</sup> Baxterianism strikes into a middle path between Calvinism and Arminianism, endeavouring in some degree, though perhaps not very consistently, to unite both schemes, and to avoid the supposed errors of each." Biog. Brit. II. p. 22. Milton has immortalized this scheme, P. L. III. line 183-202.

<sup>6</sup> See Cappa Navii p. 40.

of each." Big. Brit. II. p. 22. mitton has importalized this scheme, P. L. III. line 183-202.

<sup>6</sup> See Canon xxxii. p. 40.

<sup>7</sup> A native of Spain, who entered the Society at the age of 18. He died at Madrid in 1600, aged 65. His work, which produced the seet of the Molinists, was printed at Lisbon in 1588, and entitled De Concordia Grative at Liberi Arbitris. See Nouv. Dict. Hist. IV. p. 551.

<sup>8</sup> He was born in Holland, in 1585, and in 1604 removed to Paris, where he took his degrees. He was afterwards deputed by the University of Louvain to the King of Spain, whom he gratified by writing a book against the French. Philip IV. made him bishop of Ypres, where he died in 1638, of the plague, in the midst of his charitable attentions to the people of his diocess. His book, which gave occasion to the sect of the Jansenists, is entitled "Augustinus Cornelii Jansenit Fpiscopi, seu Doctrina Sancti Augustini, de humane Nature Sanitate, Egritudine, Medicina adversus doctrines of Austin,) has been as vehement as any controversy among Protestants on the same subject. And though besides the Council of Trent. whose decrees are copious enough, appeals were frequently made to the Popes, and their decisious were also procured, the controversy still continues. Of so little effect is the authority of men to prevent different opinions in articles of faith. Different Popes have themselves been differently disposed with respect to these doctrines; and on some occasions a respect for the Jesuits, who were peculiarly devoted to the Popes, was the means of procuring more fayour to the tenets which they espoused, than they would otherwise have met with.

1 Burnet on the Articles, p. 161. (P.) Art. xi.

Ed. 4, p. 125. 2. Itid. p. 156. (P.) Art. Xi. Ed. 4, p. 128. 2. Itid. p. 156. (P.) Art. Xii. Ed. 4, p. 128. See Sessio vi. De Justificatione, "Concil. Trident. Canones et Decreta." Rothomagi, 1781, 18mo. pp. 35, 36, 40. Ibid. p. 160. (P.) Art. xi. Ed. 4, p. 124.

Among Protestants, there are great numbers who still hold the doctrines which are termed Calvinistic in their greatest rigour; and sometime ago they were usually distinguished into two kinds, viz. the Supralapsarians, who maintained that God had originally and expressly decreed the fall of Adam, as a foundation for the display of his justice and mercy; while those who maintained that God only permitted the fall of Adam, were called Sublapsarians, their system of decrees concerning election and reprobation being, as it were, subsequent to that event. But if we admit the divine prescience, there is not, in fact, any difference between the two schemes; and accordingly that distinction is now seldom mentioned.

It is evident that, at present, the advocates for the doctrine of absolute and unconditional election, with the rest that are called Calvinistic, consist chiefly of persons of little learning or education; and were the creeds of the established Protestant churches to be revised, the articles in favour of those doctrines would, no doubt, be omitted. But while they continue there, and while the spirit of them is diffused through all the public offices of religion, the belief of them will be kept up among the vulgar, and there will always be men enow ready to accept of church preferment on the condition of subscribing to what they do not believe, and of reciting day after day such offices as they totally disapprove.

Pelagianos et Massilienses tribus tomis comprensa;" first printed at Louvain in 1640. On this work, which Leibnitz extolled as un ourrage profond, the author was employed twenty years, during which he had read Augustin throughout, ten times, and thirty times, that father's treatise against the Pelagians. See Nouv. Dict. Hist. III. pp. 432, 433.

Things have been so long in this situation, especially in England, where the minds of the clergy are more enlightened, and where few of them, in comparison, will even pretend that they really believe the articles of faith to which they have subscribed, according to the plain and obvious sense of them; and the legislature has been so often applied to in vain to relieve them in this matter, by removing those subscriptions, that we cannot now reasonably expect any reformation of this great evil, till it shall please Divine Providence to overturn all these corrupt establishments of what is called Christianity, but which have long been the secure retreat of doctrines disgraceful to Christianity. For they only serve to make hypocrites of those who live by them, and infidels of those who, without looking farther, either mistake these corruptions of Christianity for the genuine doctrines of it, or, being apprized of the insincerity of the clergy in subscribing them, think that all religion is a farce, and has no hold on the consciences of those who make the greatest profession of it. With all this within ourselves, how unfavourable is the aspect that these doctrines exhibit to the world at large, and what an obstruction must they be to the general propagation of Christianity in the world!

I cannot help making this general

&lt;sup>1</sup> Dr. Paley, who was generally better employed, has provided for these unbetieving subscribers some convenient excuses. See what Mr. Wakefield justly called "a shuffling chapter on subscription to articles of religion" in Paley's Moral Philosophy.

established Protestant churches. what follows, the Catholics, as they reflection at the close of these three are called, are more particularly conparts of my works, which relate to cerned; though, it will be seen, that, those gross corruptions of Christianity, even with respect to them, many Prowhich exist in their full force in all testant churches are far from being In blameless.

PART IV.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO SAINTS AND ANGELS.

THE INTRODUCTION.

THE idolatry of the Christian church began with the deification and proper worship of Jesus Christ, but it was far from ending with it. For, from similar causes, Christians were soon led to pay an undue respect to men of eminent worth and sanctity, which at length terminated in as proper worship of them, as that which the heathers had paid to their heroes and demigods. addressing prayer to them, in the same manner as to the Supreme Being himself. The same undue veneration led them also to a superstitious respect for their relics, the places where they had lived, their pictures and images, and indeed everything that had borne a near relation to them; so that at length, not only were those persons whom they termed saints, the objects of their worship, but also their relics and images; and neither with respect to the external forms, nor, as far as we can perceive, their internal sentiments, were Christians to be at respect that was paid to dead men by all distinguished from those who bowed Christians, is to be looked for in the down to wood and stone, in the times of Paganism.

ple that could lead to it, in the Scriptures; but it may be useful to trace the causes and the progress of it, from the earliest ages of the Christian church to the present time. And in order to do it as distinctly as possible, I shall divide the history of all the time preceding the Reformation into two periods; the former extending to the fall of the Western empire, or a little beyond the time of Austin, and the latter to the Reformation itself: and I shall also consider separately what relates to saints in general, to the Virgin Mary in particular, to relics, and to images.

SECTION I.

PART I.

OF THE RESPECT PAID TO SAINTS IN GENERAL, TILL THE FALL OF THE WESTERN EMPIRE.

THE foundation of all the superstitious principles of the heathen philosophy, and the customs of the pagan religion. That this is a most horrid corrup- It was from the principles of philo-tion of genuine Christianity I shall sophy, and especially that of Plato, take for granted, there being no trace that Christians learned that the soul of any such practice, or of any princi- was thing distinct from the body.

was paid to it.

Christians, entertaining these notions, began to consider their dead as still present with them, and members of their society, and consequently the objects of their prayers, as they had been before. We therefore soon find that they prayed for the dead, as well as for the living, and that they made oblations in their name, as if they had been alive, and had been capable of doing it themselves. And afterwards, looking upon some of them, and especially their martyrs, as having no want of their prayers, but as being in a state of peculiarly high favour with God, and having more immediate access to him, it was natural for them to pass in time, from praying for them, to praying to them, first as intercessors to God for them, and at length as capable of doing them important services, without any application to the Divine Being at all. The idolatrous respect paid to their remains, and to their images, was a thing that followed of course.

The first step in this business was a custom which cannot be said to have been unnatural, but it shows how much attention ought to be given to the beginnings of things. It was to meet at the tombs of the martyrs, not by way of devotion to them, but because they thought that their devotion to God was more sensibly excited n those places; and few persons, pernaps, would have been aware of any ill consequence that could have followed from it. Indeed, had it not been for Christians meeting for the purpose of devotion at those places, they would naturally bless God for such examples of piety and fortitude as the martyrs had exhibited, and excite one another to follow their examples. their very meeting together at those places for that purpose, was doing them so much honour, as could not fail, of itself, to make other persons ambitious of being distinguished in the same manner after their deaths.

It was also an early custom among Christians to make offerings annually in the name of the deceased, especially the martyrs, as an acknowledgment, that though they were dead, they considered them as still living, and members of their respective churches. These offerings were usually made on the anniversary of their death. Cyprian says, that "if any person appointed one of the clergy to be a tutor or curator of his will, these offerings should not be made for him."2 So that, as they considered the dead as still belonging to their communion, they had, as we here find, a method of excommunicating them even after death.

The beginning of this superstitious respect for the martyrs seems to have been at the death of Polycarp, and in forty years afterwards it had degenerated into this gross superstition. For Tertullian says, "We make oblations for the dead, and for their martyrdom, on certain days yearly."3

Afterwards, this respect paid to martyrs and confessors, or those who, having been doomed to death, happened to be released, exceeded all bounds, and in many respects did unspeakable mischief to the church. Nothing was and capable of existing in a separate the philosophical opinions above menconscious state when the body was tioned, which were brought into Chrislaid in the grave. They also thought tianity by those who before held them that it frequently hovered about the as philosophers, and which gradually place where the body had been interred, insinuated themselves into the body of and was sensible of any attention that Christians in general, it might have continued not only a harmless, but an useful custom.

&lt;sup>1</sup> To give my readers full satisfaction on this subject, I must refer them to my Disquisitions relating to Matter and Spirit, in which the doctrine of a soul is traced from the Oriental to the Grecian philosophy, and is shown to have been a principle most hostile to the system of revelation in every stage of its progress. (P.) See [Rutt's Priestley,] Vol. III. pp. 384-421.

Opera, Epis. p. 3. (P.)
 Pierce's Vindication, 1718, p. 515. (P.)

esteemed more glorious than what they it was impossible to fix the dates of called the crown of martyrdom; and them except by conjecture; and we preon the anniversary festivals, instituted memories were celebrated with panegyrical orations. In their prisons they were visited by Christians of all ranks, proud to minister to them in the very lowest offices, and to kiss their chains; life from their torture, their authority was ever after most highly respected in the decision of all controversies, in absolving persons from the ordinary discipline of the church, and restoring them to communion on whatever terms they thought fit.

others.

gradually extended, in some degree, to others, who also were considered after changing the Pagan festivals into Christheir deaths as those who had triumphed tian holidays, allowing the same carnal over the world, and were gone to receive indulgences, with a view to draw the the prize for which they had contended. Heathens to the religion of Christ, that In imitation of carrying in triumph the new religion might appear the less those who won the prizes in the Grecian strange to them.2 games, Christians interred their dead with singing of psalms and lighted meet, for the purpose of public worship, tapers. "Tell me," says Chrysostom, "what mean the lamps lighted at funerals? Is it not because we accompany the dead, as so many magnanimous champions? What mean the hymns? render thanks to him, that he has already crowned the deceased, delivering him from all his toil and labour?"1 the apostles and their contemporaries, particular saints, angels, &c. Thus we 1 In Heb. C. ii. Hom. iv. Opera, X. p. 1784. (P.)

sently find that advantage was taken to the honour of each martyr, their of this circumstance to appoint their celebration on those days which had been appropriated to pagan festivals. And as the Christians of that age introduced every mark of festivity on these occasions, that the Heathens had and if they happened to escape with been accustomed to in their former worship, there was no change but in the object of it; so that the common people, finding the same entertainment at the usual times and places, they were more easily induced to forsake their old religion, and to adopt the new one, which so much resembled it, and especially in As it happened that some of these the very things which had kept them confessors were not men of the best attached to the old one. This circummoral character, at least became cor- stance would have growing weight in rupted, in consequence, perhaps, of the time of the Christian emperors, superstitious respect with which they when the Christian festivals becoming were everywhere received, Cyprian more popular, would be attended by makes heavy complaints of the relaxa- greater numbers, which would add tion of church discipline by this means. considerably to the entertainment. They were often exceedingly dissolute This was, indeed, the avowed design of themselves, and screened the vices of placing the festivals as they did; and Gregory Thaumaturgus, who lived in The respect paid to martyrs was the third century, is particularly com-adually extended, in some degree, to mended by Gregory Nyssenus for thus

As the Christians had been used to at the tombs of the martyrs; when the empire became Christian they sometimes erected magnificent buildings on those places, and such churches were said to be built to their honour, and Is it not because we glorify God, and were distinguished by their names, as they continue to be to this day; and when they had not the martyrs themselves to bury there, at least they got As these festivals on the anniver- some of their relics. And when most saries of the martyrs were not in general of the churches were distinguished in use till long after the death of the most this manner, it was the custom to give eminent of them, and particularly of all names to others merely in honour of

2 Opera, II. p. 1006, (P.)

to Christ, and the Trinity. In this man- churches being once begun, (which was ner, by degrees, each remarkable saint about the end of the fourth or the behad his proper temple, just as the Hea- ginning of the fifth century, and genethen gods and heroes had theirs. This rally by converts from Paganism), the practice was approved by the greatest more wealthy among the Christians men of that age. Eusebius, in effect, seem to have vied with each other, says, "Why should we Christians not who should build and ornament their shew the same regard to our saints and churches in the most expensive manmartyrs that the Pagans paid to their ner, and nothing perhaps contributed heroes P"1

SECTION I. PART II.

OF PICTURES AND IMAGES IN CHURCHES.

TEMPLES being now built in honour of particular saints, and especially the martyrs, it was natural to ornament them with paintings and sculptures, representing the great exploits of such saints and martyrs; and this was a circumstance that made the Christian churches still more like the Heathen temples, which were also adorned with statues and pictures; and this also would tend to draw the ignorant multitude to the new worship, making the transition the easier.

"Paulinus, a convert from Paganism, of senatorial rank, celebrated for his parts and learning, and who died afterwards bishop of Nola," in Italy, distinguished himself in this way. He "rebuilt, in a splendid manner, his episcopal church, dedicated to Felix the Martyr; on whose porticoes were painted the miracles of Moses and of Christ, together with the acts of Felix one of his poems,...was done with a form of men.4 design to draw the rude multitude, habituated to the profane rites of Paganism, to a knowledge and good opinion of the Christian doctrine; by learning from these pictures what they were not capable of learning from books, the lives and acts of Christian saints."2 have churches dedicated to St. Michael. The custom of having pictures in more to it than the example of this Paulinus.

<sup>1</sup> Jortin, III. p. 14. (P.)

<sup>2</sup> Middleton's Letter from Rome, p. 242. (P.)

Works, 4to. III. pp. 128, 129.

It appears from Chrysostom, that pictures and images were to be seen in the principal churches of his time, but this was in the East. In Italy, they were but rare in the beginning of the fifth century; and a bishop of that country, who had got his church painted, thought proper to make an apology for it, by saying, that the people being amused with the pictures would have less time for regaling themselves.3 The origin of this custom was probably in Cappadocia, where Gregory Nyssenus was bishop, the same who commended Gregory Thaumaturgus for contriving to make the Christian festivals resemble the Pagan ones.

Though many churches in this age were adorned with the images of saints and martyrs, there do not appear to have been many of Christ. These are said to have been introduced by the Cappadocians; and the first of these were only symbolical ones, being made in the form of a lamb. One of this kind Epiphanius found in the year 389, and he was so provoked at it, that he tore it. It was not till the council of Constantinople, called In Trullo, held and the other martyrs, whose relics were so late as the year 707, that pictures of there deposited." This, he says, "in Christ were ordered to be drawn in the

SECTION I. PART III.

OF THE VENERATION FOR RELICS.

Considering the great veneration which Christians in very early ages entertained for martyrs, we are not surprised it was called, from Jerusalem, was much valued in the time of Austin.

3 Sueur, A. D. 401. (P.) 4 Ibid, A. D. 707. (P.)

This respect for relics was much forwarded by the eloquence of preachers, and by no person more than Chrysos-"I esteem the city of Rome," says he, "not because of the pillars of the first example of the translation of marble, but because of the pillars of the bodies of saints into churches; the church therein, the bodies of St. Peter and St. Paul. Who can now afford me the favour of being stretched out on the body of St. Paul, of being nailed to his sepulchre, of beholding the dust of that body which bore the marks of the Lord Jesus, and that mouth by which Christ himself spake? I long to see the sepulchre wherein is himself. These bones of St. Stephen. enclosed that armour of righteousness, that armour of light, those members for near four centuries, were said to which still live, and which were dead whilst living. I long to see those chains, those bonds," &c.1

It appears that about the year 386, the piety of many persons consisted chiefly in carrying and keeping bones and relics, and that many persons, who traded in them, abused the credulity of soon spread through the Christian the people. A law was made by Theodosius to prevent this, but it had little were brought away by pilgrims, to eneffect. Among other methods by which rich the churches of their own countries. they gained credit for their relics, it was usual in this age to pretend that reve- sited, an oratory or chapel was always lations were made to persons, to inform built over them, and this was called a them where they should discover the memorial of that martyr whose relics bones of particular martyrs.

In Eph, Hom. viii, Opera, X. p. 1078. (P.)

The bodies of many of the martyrs that they should pay a superstitious having been buried in obscure places. respect to their relics; but we do not and exposed, when the persecution find any account of their collecting ceased they were brought to light, and things of this kind in the first or second decently interred. Thus began the century. Neither Trypho, Celsus, nor translation of relics, which was afterany of those who wrote against Chris- wards performed with great ceremony tianity at first, make this objection to and devotion; the possession of them it; but Julian and Eunapius reproached being esteemed the most valuable of the Christians with it very severely. It treasures, not less than the bones of was, indeed, about the time that the some of the heroes of antiquity, or empire became Christian, that the re-particular images of some of their gods. spect for relics began to make much which had likewise been carried from progress. When Palestine was purged place to place with great solemnity, and from idols, many persons visited it, and probably afforded a pattern for this especially the tomb of our Saviour, out translation of Christian relics. In 359, of pious curiosity; and holy earth, as Constantius caused the bodies of St. Andrew and St. Luke to be taken out of their sepulchres, and carried with great pomp to Constantinople, to the temple of the twelve apostles, which was a church that had been built to their honour by Constantine. This is and the custom being once begun, was afterwards carried to the greatest excess.2

But the translation of the relics of the martyr Stephen, in the time of Austin, was one of the most remarkable things of this kind in that age, and the account of it is given by Austin after they had lain buried and unknown have been discovered by Gamaliel, under whom St. Paul had studied, to one Lucianus, a priest; and being found by his direction, they were removed with great solemnity, and, as was pretended, with many miracles, into Jerusalem. The fame of these relics was world, and many little portions of them And wherever any relics were depoit contained. Several relics of St.

■ Sueur, A. D. 359. (Pa

Stephen having been brought by different persons into Africa, as many memorials of him were erected in different places, of which three were particularly famous, and one of them was at Hippo, where Austin himself was bishop. In all these places, illustrious miracles were said to be wrought continually. For, long before this time, miracles had been said to be wrought by saints, living and dead.

These abuses did not advance to this height without opposition, though the only person that distinguished himself greatly by his remonstrances on this subject, in this age, was Vigilantius, a priest of Barcelona. He saw that this superstitious respect for the saints, as they were called, their images and their relics, was introducing Paganism into the Christian church, and he wrote against it with great earnestness. "We see," says he, "in effect, a Pagan rite introduced into our churches under the pretext of religion, when heaps of wax candles are lighted up in clear sunshine, and people everywhere kissing and adoring, I know not what, contemptible dust, preserved in a little vessel, and wrapt up in precious linen. These men do great honour truly to the blessed martyrs, by lighting up paltry candles to those whom the Lamb, in the midst of the throne, illuminates with all the lustre of his majesty." St. Jerome, who answers him, does not deny the practice, nor its being borrowed from the Pagans, but defends "That," says he, "was once done to idols, and was then to be detested, but this is done to the martyrs, and is therefore to be received."1

SECTION I.

PART IV.

OF WORSHIP PAID TO SAINTS AND ANGELS.

HAVING shown the general progress of the respect paid by Christians to their <sup>1</sup> Middletonis Letter from Rome, p. 240. (P.) Works, pp. 127, 128.

saints and martyrs, and also to their images and relics, I shall show by what steps these saints and martyrs became the objects of their proper devotion. But before Christians prayed to their dead saints, they used to pray for them; and the foundation of both these practices was the doctrine of a soul, as a substance distinct from the body, and capable of thinking and acting without it, which was borrowed from Pagan philosophy.

Most of the fathers were particularly addicted to the doctrine of Plato, who taught that the souls of the dead, after quitting their bodies, have influence in the affairs of men, and take care of them. Eusebius approved of the opinion, and endeavoured to confirm it. Theodoret also, in his sermon on the martyrs, tells the Pagans that it was the opinion of Plato, in order to show that Christians have reason to think the same thing of their mar-

 $tvrs.^{2}$

Till the middle of the fourth century it was the general belief that the abode of the souls of the faithful was in subterraneous places, or at least here below, near the earth; but towards the end of this century they were supposed by some to be above, but not in the place where they could enjoy the beatific vision of God. From the former opinion came the custom of praying for the dead, which began so early as the beginning of the third century; the objects of these prayers being their quiet repose in their present situation, and a speedy and happy resurrection. They even prayed for the Virgin Mary; and there are also instances of their praying for the damned, in order to lessen their torments.

It was not very soon a general or fixed opinion, that the souls of the dead were in places where they could hear and attend to what was passing among the living. But thinking more highly of martyrs than of other persons, it was soon imagined that their state after death might be better than that of others. For, while the rest of the them."3 In another place he supposes dead were supposed to be confined in that the martyrs may assist the living. Hades, which was a subterraneous because they attend where their monuplace, waiting for the resurrection of ments are. Basil, however, in his their bodies, they thought that the homily on the forty martyrs, supposes martyrs were admitted to the immethat they were present in the temples diate presence of God, and to a state and joined in the prayers of the faithof favour and power with him. In- ful, but he does not say that the faithdeed, so early as the middle of the third ful should pray to them.4 century, when many went to solicit One of the first instances of direct favour of the survivor.1

<sup>2</sup> Sueur, A. D. 407. (P.)

των γεννητων), not even to Christ him- till far in the fifth century. self, but to God the Father of all.2

martyrs, as well as prayers for the had long been the custom of Christians, fourth century, when it was imagined them, which began to gain ground in that they might hear those who in- his time. He says, that it injures terment. But it appears by the Con- and that when the church mentions stitutions, and several of the writings them in her prayers, it is not to pray of that time, that the public offices for them, but to be helped by their were yet preserved pure. In the fifth prayers. Yet, in all the genuine writthe intercessions of the saints and he ever directly invoked the saints, martyrs in their behalf; but there is except by way of apostrophe, as an a great difference between this and orator, or in a simple wish that the and when the custom of invoking them for the apostles and martyrs, continued, was introduced, many had doubts on and was not abolished but by the full the subject, and therefore to their in- establishment of the invocation of vocations of them added, "if they them. Gregory the First, who conwere present, and had any influence tributed most to it, in the beginning in things below," &c.

about this; and in one place says, of God, though most persons still be-"It is true the saints do not themselves lieved that not even the martyrs would hear what passes below, but they hear be admitted to that vision before the of it by others, who die and go to the prayers of those who were prisoners invocation of the dead is that of doomed to death, they would request Theodosius the Younger, who, casting that, after their death, they would be his eyes upon the coffin of Chrysostom, mindful of the living; and some are asked pardon of him for Arcadius his even said to have agreed with one father, and Eudoxia his mother, because another, that whichever of them should he considered that saint as more pardie first, he should use his interest in ticularly present there than elsewhere. But at that time they did not invoke So far, however, was it from being the saints in general, as the apostles, usual to pray to saints in the third &c., but only those at whose tombs century, that Origen says, they were they attended; and there are but few not to pray to any derived being (ουδενι examples of invoking the Virgin Mary

History of Ancient Ceremonies, p. 26. (P.) Whitby on John xvii. 2. (P.)

Austin is the first who takes notice Prayer to the dead began with the that praying for the martyrs, which dead, but not till near the end of the did not agree with the invocation of voked them near the place of their in- the martyrs to pray to God for them, century they prayed to God to hear ings of Austin, it does not appear that praying to the saints themselves, as saint would pray for him. Also prayif they could hear and help the living; ing for the dead in general, and even of the seventh century, supposed some Austin himself was much perplexed of the saints to enjoy the beatific vision resurrection; and Hugh de Victor, so into the image the propitious presence doubt whether the saints hear the prayers of those who invoke them. and that it is a question difficult to decide.1

<sup>3</sup> De Cura pro Mortuis, C. xiv. Opera, IV. p. 890. (P.) 4 Opera, I. p. 959. (P.)

It appears that Austin was very sensible of the growing superstition of his time, and said, with apparent disapprobation, "I know there are some who adore sepulchres and paintings." 2 But this does not imply a direct invocation of them. Paulinus of Nola, his contemporary, went every year to Rome, to show his respect to the tombs of the martyrs, because, as he said, he had great confidence in their intercession; and about the year 337, Constantine built a magnificent church in honour of the twelve apostles, intending to be buried there, that after his death he might partake of the prayers that would be made there in their honour. 3 But neither does this imply a direct invocation of them. In the ancient litanies all the invocations of our Saviour ended with these words, Lord have mercy upon us (Κυριε ελεισον), repeated many times; but the litanies of the saints consisted of nothing more than an enumeration of their titles, to which, but in later times, they added the words ora pro nobis. Examples of the former may be seen in Basil and Chrysostom.4

In the fifth century no opposition was made to the invocation of saints. The common opinion then was, that their souls were not so entirely confined to the celestial mansions, but that they visited mortals, and travelled through various countries; though it was still thought that they more especially frequented the places where their bodies ance of it: in sickness the removal of were interred. Also, the images of the saints were by this time honoured with particular worship in several places, and it was imagined by many, that this worship, or the forms of consecration, which were soon introduced, drew late as 1130, says, that many still of the saint, or celestial being, whom it represented; the very notion which had prevailed with respect to the statues of Jupiter and Mercury, &c.

This excessive veneration for the dead, and for their relics, was greatly promoted by the eloquent preachers or declaimers of those times. Athanasius, Gregory Nazianzen, and Chrysostom, distinguished themselves in this way. The last of these writers, celebrating the acts of the martyr Babylas, bishop of Antioch, says, "The Gentiles will laugh to hear me talk of the acts of persons dead and buried, and consumed to dust; but they are not to imagine that the bodies of martyrs, like to those of common men, are left destitute of all active force and energy; since a greater power than that of the human soul is superadded to them, the power of the Holy Spirit; which, by working miracles in them, demonstrates the truth of the resurrection." 5

To see to what excess this superstitious worship of the dead was carried. in the period of which I am now treating, I shall recite at length, from Dr. Middleton, a passage of Theodoret, one of the Greek fathers, which shows us. as he says, the state of Christianity in the fifth century: "The temples of our martyrs," says this father, "are shining and conspicuous, eminent for their grandeur and the variety of their ornaments, and displaying far and wide the splendour of their beauty. These we visit, not once, or twice, or five times in the year, but frequently offer up hymns, each day, to the Lord of them. In health we beg the continuit. The childless beg children; ... and when these blessings are obtained, we beg the secure enjoyment of them. When we undertake any journey, we beg them to be our companions and guides in it; and when we return safe, we pay them our thanks. And that those who pray with faith and sincerity

Sueur, A. D. 407. (P.)
 De Moribus Ecclesiæ, L. i. C. xxxiv. Opera, I.

p. 774.(P.)

3 Suenr, A. D. 337. (P.)

4 Ibid. A. D. 463. (P.)

&lt;sup>5</sup> Middleton's Inquiry, p. 152. (P.) Works, I. p. 123.

obtain what they ask, is manifestly testified by the number of offerings which are made to them, in consesome offer the figures of eyes, some of feet, some of hands, made either of gold or of silver, which the Lord accepts, though but of little value, measuring the gift by the faculties of the giver. But all these are the evident proofs of the cures of as many distempers; being placed there as monuments of the fact, by those who have been made whole. The same monuments likewise proclaim the power of the dead; whose power also demonstrates their God to be the true God."1

But we shall perhaps form a still clearer idea of the firm possession that these superstitions had obtained in the minds of the generality of Christians, himself to oppose the progress of these corrupt practices, procured him from Jerome, the most learned writer of his age. Unhappily we have nothing from Vigilantius, but what his opponent himself has given us from him, in his answer. But even this is abundantly sufficient to satisfy us with respect to the good sense of the one, and the bigoted violence of the other, together with the character of the age in which they lived.

Vigilantius maintained, as the articles are enumerated by Middleton, "that the honours paid to the rotten bones and dust of the saints and martyrs, by....lodging them in their churches, and lighting up wax candles before them, after the manner of the Heathens, were the ensigns of idolatry. That the celibacy of the clergy was a heresy, and their yows of chastity the seminary of lewdness. That to pray for the dead, or to desire the prayers of the dead, was superstitious; and that the souls of the departed saints and Col. ii. 18. martyrs were at rest in some particular place, whence they could not remove themselves at pleasure, so as to be present everywhere to the prayers of their votaries. That the sepulchres of quence of the benefits received. For the martyrs ought not to be worshipped, nor their fasts and vigils to be observed." And lastly, "that the signs and wonders said to be wrought by their relics, and at their sepulchres, served to no good end or purpose of religion."

"These were the sacrilegious tenets, as Jerome calls them, which he could not hear with patience, or without the utmost grief, and for which he declared Vigilantius to be 'a most detestable heretic, venting his foul-mouthed blasphemies against the relics of the martyrs, which were daily working signs and wonders.' He bids him 'go into the churches of those martyrs, and he would be cleansed from the evil spirit when we consider what little respect which possessed him, and feel himself the manly sense of Vigilantius, who set burnt, not by those wax candles, which so much offended him, but by invisible flames, which would force that demon who talked within him, to confess himself to be the same who had personated a Mercury, perhaps a Bacchus, or some other of their gods among the Heathens.' At which wild rate," says Dr. Middleton, "this good father raves on, through several pages, in a strain much more furious than the most bigoted Papist would use at this day in defence of the same rites." All the modern ecclesiastical historians give the same account of this Vigilantius.3

I must not conclude the history of this period without observing that some undue respect was paid to angels, who were believed to transact much of the business of this world, by commission from God. This arose from the opinions of the Gnostics, and is alluded to by the apostle Paul, who says, that some through a voluntary humility worshipped angels, being vainly puffed up in their fleshly minds.

It seems probable that some undue

Introductory Discourse, p. 69. (P.) Works, I. pp. xlvii, xlviii.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 131, &c. (P.) Works, I. pp. lxxxix.xc.

■ See Mosheim, I. pp. 392, 393. (P.) Cent. v.

Pt ii. Ch. iii. Seet. xiv.

respect was paid to angels, as well as satisfaction with respect to what he "him (God) and the Son that came deavouring to make their way through angels, who accompany and resemble him, together with the prophetic spirit, we adore and worship, in word and truth honouring them." With this writer, however, and the Christians of respect for angels amounted to praying to them. For we find that praying to angels, which had been practised in Phrygia and Pisidia, was forbidden as idolatrous by the Council of Laodicea. in 364.

SECTION I.

PART V.

OF THE RESPECT PAID TO THE VIRGIN MARY, IN THIS PERIOD.

As our Saviour became the object of worship before any other man, so his mother soon began to be considered with a singular respect, and at length she engrossed so much of the devotion of the Christian world, that I shall make a separate article of it, in each period of this part of my work.

It is remarkable that, excepting what was said to Mary by the angel, henceforth all generations shall call thee blessed, no particular compliment is paid to her in all the history of the evangelists. She is only mentioned as a pious woman, among several others, and was committed to the care of John by our Lord, as he hung upon the cross. Nay, several expressions of our Lord, though not really disrespectful, yet show that, in his character of a teacher sent from God, he considered her only as any other person or dis-

When she applied to him about the failure of wine, at the marriage feast in Cana, he replied, Woman, what hast thou to do with me? and gave her no to Christ and the Holy Spirit, in the intended to do. And again, when she time of Justin Martyr, for he says, and some others of his relations were enfrom him, and the host of other good a crowd, in order to speak to him, and he was told of it, he replied, Who is my mother, and who are my brethren? He that does the will of God, the same is my brother, and sister, and mother. In the book of Acts her name is but his time, it is not probable that this once mentioned, as one of those who were assembled with the apostles after the ascension of Jesus, Acts i. 14, so that where or how she lived, or died, we have no knowledge at all. On how narrow a foundation does the excessive veneration that was afterwards paid to the blessed Virgin, as she is now called, rest!

1 Apol. I. Edit. Thirlby, p. 11. (P.)

The first mention that we find of any particular respect paid to the Virgin Mary, was in the time of Epiphanius, when some women used to offer to her cakes called collyrides, from which they got the name of Collyridians; and as men had no concern in it, except by permitting their wives to do it, it is called by this writer a heresy of the women. He himself greatly disapproved of it, and wrote against it. This may be thought extraordinary, since oblations at the tombs of the dead were very common in this age. But as it was not known where the Virgin Mary was interred, the offering of cakes to her was a new step in the worship of the dead, and was therefore more par-ticularly noticed. It is plain, however, from his account of this affair, that prayers were then offered to the Virgin Mary, and by some of the orthodox, as they were called, though he himself rejected the thought of it with indignation.

In a piece of Athanasius, entitled De Sanctissima Deipara, we find a long address to the Virgin, but it seems to have been a piece of oratory, and we can hardly infer from it that it was his custom to address his devotions to her. In it he says, "Hear, O daughter of David, and of Abraham; incline thine ear to our prayers, and forget not thy people;" and again, "Intercede for us, lady, mistress, queen, and mother of God."

The first who was particularly noticed, as introducing this worship of the Virgin, is Peter Gnapheus, bishop appointed her name to be called upon devotion, however, seems to have taken we owe to our Saviour.3 its rise towards the end of the fourth maintaining, that, after she was de-livered of Jesus, she lived with her husband Joseph as his wife. This was violently opposed by others, who, running into the other extreme, worshipped her "as a goddess, and judged it necessary to appease her anger, and seek her favour by libations, sacrifices, the oblations of cakes (collyridæ), and such like services." as Epiphanius censured.2

kind will appear extraordinary. Other- Christ. wise we might be surprised how it This thing of any consequence, whether the mother of Christ had any commerce with her husband or not. The preever had any commerce with man; and therefore, without any proper evidence in the case, it was presumed that she must have continued a virgin; and to maintain the contrary was even deemed heretical. In the Council of Capua, in 389, Bonosus, a bishop in Macedonia, was condemned for maintaining that Mary, the mother Jesus, was not always a virgin; following, it is said, the heresy of Paulinus.

When the doctrine of original sin

 Opera, I. p. 1041. (P.)
 Hares. lxxviii. lxxix. pp. 1003, 1057. Mosneim, I. p. 851. (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. xxv.

was started, the veneration for the Virgin Mary was so great, that doubts were entertained whether she might not have been exempt from it, as well as her son. Austin maintained that no person ever lived without sin except of Antioch, in the fifth century, who the Virgin Mary, concerning whom he, however, only says he will not hold in the prayers of the church. This any controversy, for the honour that

After the deification and worship of century, and in Arabia, where we read Christ, it was natural that the rank of of a controversy respecting her; some his mother should rise in some proportion to it. Accordingly we find, that after Christ was considered as God, it became customary to give Mary the title of mother of God (θεοτοκος). however, was not done, at least generally, till after the Council of Chalcedon in 451. This title of mother of God happened to be a favourite term with Apollinaris and his followers, and in consequence of this, perhaps, it was, that Nestorius violently opposed this To persons much acquainted with innovation, thinking it sufficient that ecclesiastical history, nothing of this Mary should be called the mother of

This opposition, however, operated should ever have been considered as a as in many other cases, viz. to increase the evil; and in the third council of Ephesus, in which Nestorius was conwith her husband or not. The pre-demned, it was decreed that Mary sumption is, that, as they lived together, should be called the mother of God. at least after the birth of Jesus, she From this time she was honoured more had. However, the respect paid to than ever; but still she had not the virginity in that age was so great, that titles that were given her afterwards of it was thought to derogate from her queen of heaven, mistress of the world, virtue and honour, to suppose that she goddess, mediatrix, gate of paradise,

SECTION II.

PART I.

OF THE WORSHIP OF SAINTS, IN THE MIDDLE AGES, AND TILL THE REFORMATION.

TILL the beginning of the fifth century prayers to saints were only occasional, as at the place of their interment, or on the anniversary of their death. &c. because at that time it was generally supposed that their souls were hovering about that place, and there, also, was the scene of all the miracles that were done without disguise, and though originally ascribed to them. But when it came to be a general persuasion, that the souls of the martyrs, and other persons of eminent sanctity, were admitted to the immediate presence of God, and were capable of a general inspection of the affairs of the world. prayers to them were no longer confined to the place of their interment, or to the chapels and churches erected over them.

3 De Natura et Gratia, C. xxxvi. Op. VII. p. 747. (P.)

It was now imagined that the souls of these illustrious dead could hear the prayers that were addressed to them in all places and at all times. For, as for the great difficulty of a human being (whose faculties are of course limited) being capable of knowing what passes in more than one place at a time, they seem not to have considered it. they might suppose the power of an unembodied spirit, not now confined to any particular corporeal system, to be incapable of any limitation. Or they might suppose that God had endued them with faculties of which they were not naturally capable before. Certain, however, it is, that in the middle ages, the common people addressed their prayers to dead men with as little apprehension of their not being heard by them, as if they had been praying to the Divine Being himself.

In fact, the Christian saints succeeded. in all respects, to the honours which had been paid to the pagan deities; almost all of whom had been supposed to have been men whose extraordinary merit had exalted them to the rank and power of gods, after their death. This analogy between the two religions made the transition very easy to the bulk of the common people; and the leading men among the Christians perceiving this, and being themselves not averse to the ceremonies and pomp of the ancient idolatry, contrived to make the transition still easier, by preserving everything that they possibly could in the ancient forms of worship, changing only the objects of them.

About the eleventh century this was images were not common, and we read of no statues in Christian churches at that time, yet, in other respects, the worship of the saints was modelled according to the religious services which had been paid to the heathen gods. Some time afterwards we find that Christians had the same temples, the same altars, and often the same images with the Pagans, only giving them new names. Dr. Middleton was shown "an antique statue of a young Bacchus," which was "worshipped under the title of a female saint."

"The noblest heathen temple now remaining in the world is the Pantheon or Rotunda" at Rome, "which, as the inscription over the portico 2 informs us, having been impiously dedicated of old by Agrippa to Jove, and all the gods, was piously reconsecrated by Pope Boniface IV. (A.D. 607) to the blessed Virgin and all the saints. With this single alteration," says Dr. Middleton. "it serves as exactly for all the purposes of the popish, as it did for the pagan worship, for which it was built. For as in the old temple every one might find the god of his country, and address himself to that deity whose religion he was most devoted to, so it is the same thing now. Every one chooses the patron whom he likes best; and one may see here different services going on at the same time at different altars, with distinct congregations around them, just as the inclinations of the people lead them to the worship of this or that particular saint."3

As men are greatly influenced by names,

<sup>1</sup> Letter from Rome, p. 160. (P.) Works, III.

P. 84.

2 "Pantheon, &c. Ab Agrippa Augusti Genero
Impie Jovi, Cæterisque Mendacibus Diis a Bonifacio IIII. Pontifice Deiparæ et S. S. Christi Martyribus Pie Dicatum," &c. bid. See also Les Conformites, &c., 1667, p. 167.

3 Middleton's Letter p. 161. (P.) Works, III.

it was even contrived that the name of ing in the present churches as in the the new divinity should as much as the saint Apollinaris was made to suca similar character, and distinguished for the same virtues. Thus, there being a temple at Rome in which sickly infants had been usually presented for a Christian saint who had been famous consecrating the same temple to him, the very same practices are now continued as in the times of Heathenism.1 hang up in the heathen temples, particularly those of Æsculapius, pictures of scenes in which persons had supposed they had been relieved by the interposition of their gods, and especially of limbs that had been diseased, and were afterwards cured, &c., the same custom, as I have hinted already. was very early introduced into the Christian churches; and in later ages, I doubt not, these exhibitions were more numerous than they had ever been in the times of Heathenism.

Dr. Middleton, who observed the present popish worship with this view. mentions other points of resemblance, so numerous, and so little varied, that he says he could have imagined himself present in the ancient heathen temples; and he is confident that a considerable knowledge of the ancient heathen ritual might be learned from them.<sup>2</sup> Candles are continually burn-former temples, incense is always smokpossible resemble the old one. Thus ing, many of the images are daubed with red ochre, as those of the heathen ceed the god Apollo, and St. Martina gods often were, their faces are black the god Mars. It was farther con- with the smoke of candles and incense. trived that, in some cases, the same people are continually on their knees, business should continue to be done or prostrate before them; and, accordin the same place, by substituting for ing to the accounts of all travellers, the heathen god a Christian saint of the prayers that are addressed to them are of the same nature, and urged with the same indecent importunity. They are also followed by the same marks of resentment, if their requests the cure of their disorders, they found be not granted, as if they hoped to get by foul means what they could not for the same attention to children; and obtain by fair. Mr. Byron informs us that, being in danger of shipwreck, a Jesuit who was on board brought out an image of some saint, which he Farther, as it had been customary to desired might be hung up in the mizen shrouds; and this being done, he kept threatening it, that if they had not a breeze of wind soon he would throw it into the sea. A breeze springing up, he carried back the image with an air of great triumph.3

As the Heathers had gods of particular countries, so the Christians of these ages imagined that one saint gave particular attention to the affairs of one country, and another saint to those of another. Thus, St. George was considered as the patron of England, St. Denis of France, St. Januarius of Naples, &c.

In all countries different saints were supposed to attend to different things, each having his proper province. Thus, St. George is invoked in battle, St.

<sup>1</sup> Middleton's Letter, p. 167. (P.) Works, III.

<sup>2 &</sup>quot;Nothing, I found, concurred so much with my original intention of conversing with the ancients, or so much.helped my imagination, to fancy myself wandering about in old heathen Rome, as to observe and attend to their religious worship; all whose ceremonies appeared plainly to have been copied from the rituals of primitive Paganism; as if handed down, by an uninterrupted succession, from the priests of old, to the priests of new Rome; whilst each of them readily explained and called to my mind some passage of a classic author, where the same ceremony of a classic author, where the same ceremony was described, as transacted in the same form and manner, and in the same place, where I now saw it executed before my eyes: so that as oft as I was present at any religious exercise in their churches, it was more natural to fancy mysolf believe and a superpart of idealthy is of looking on, at some solemn act of idolatry in old looking on, at some solemn act of idolatry in old Rome, than assisting at a worship instituted on the principles and formed upon the plan of Christianity." Middleton's Letter. Works, III. Div. Leg. Pt. i. (Works, 8vo. IV. p. 126), and Middleton's Postscript, Works, III. p. 120. 3 Voyage, p. 207. (P.)

viève for rain, and St. Nicholas, or St.

Anthony, by seamen, &c.

Also, as with the Heathens, the same god was thought to be worshipped to more advantage in one place than another, this was imagined to be the case with respect to the new divinities. For, as there was a Jupiter Ammon, a Jupiter Olympius, and a Jupiter Capitolinus, so the Papists have one Virgin Mary of Loretto, another of Montserrat, &c. And though there be a church dedicated to the Virgin in a town where a person lives, yet he will often think it worth his while to make a pilgrimage of some hundreds of miles to worship the same virgin in some other place, which she is supposed to honour with more particular attention, and to have distinguished by more miracles, &c.

So many persons had acquired the reputation of saints in the ninth century, that the ecclesiastical councils found it necessary to decree that no person should be considered as a saint, till a bishop in the province had pronounced him worthy of that honour; and the consent of the Pope was likewise generally thought expedient, if not necessary. No saint, however, was created by the authority of any pope before Udalric, bishop of Augsburgh, received that honour from John XV. in the tenth century; though others say it was Savibert who was first canonized by Leo III. after his life and pretensions had been regularly examined. At length, Alexander III., in the twelfth century, asserted the sole right of canonization, to the Pope.

This business of canonization was also copied from Paganism, the senate of Rome having taken upon it to pronounce what persons should be deified, and having decreed that honour to several of their emperors, to whom temples were consequently erected, and worship regularly paid. Also the title of Divus, which had been given by the

1 Mosheim, II. p. 219. (P.) Cent. x. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. iv. Basnage, Histoire, II. p. 691.

Margaret in childbearing, St. Gene- decree of the senate to deified men. was now adopted by the Christians, and given to their canonized saints. The consequence of a regular canonization was, that the name of the saint was inserted in the calendar in red letters; he might then be publicly invoked and prayed to, churches and altars might be dedicated to him, masses might be said in his honour. holidays might be kept in his name, his image also might be set up and prayed to, and his relics might be reverently laid up and worshipped.

> Considering who they were that directed this business of canonization. and what kind of merit weighed most with them, it is no wonder that many of these canonized persons were such as had little title to the appellation of saints. They were generally miserable enthusiasts, some of them martyrs to their own austerities, and sometimes men who had distinguished themselves by nothing but their zeal for what was imagined to be the rights of the church, and their opposition to the temporal princes of their times; such as Thomas à Becket of this country.

As many of the persons to whom divine honours are paid in catholic countries began to be distinguished in this manner before there were any regular canonizations, and in times of great ignorance, we are not surprised. though we cannot help being amused, at the gross mistakes that were sometimes made in this serious business: several of the names, the most distinguished by the honours that are paid to them, being those of persons altogether imaginary, so that the object of their worship never had any existence. Such is St. Ursula and the eleven thousand virgins. This woman is said to have been a native of Cornwall, who with her virgins travelled to Rome, and in their return through Germany, accompanied by Pope Cyriacus, suffered martyrdom at Cologne. Baronius himself says, there never was any pope of that name.

In this class also we must put the seven sleepers, who are said to have Besides particular festivals for parinterval, and looked as fresh as ever. by Gregory IV. No better claim has St. George, the chief to have been given to her by our Saviour himself.

Several mistakes have been made by the Italian manner; and what is more extraordinary, from a fragment of an inscription, which, in all probability was originally prefectus viarum, the S only remaining of the word proefectus, and viar of the word following, they have made St. Viar; and the Spaniards, in whose country this inscription was found, fancying that this new saint had distinguished himself by many illustrious miracles, solicited Pope Urban to do something to his honour. In England particular honour was paid to St. Amphibolus, which appears to have been nothing but a cloke that had belonged to St. Alban.1

slept in a cave from the time of Decius ticular saints, the Papists have a to that of Theodosius, or, as they festival for the commemoration of all reckon it, 162 years; and who, to the saints in general, lest, as we may supconfutation of some who denied the pose, any should have been omitted in resurrection, awakened after that their calendar. This was introduced

These new objects of worship prepatron of this country, or St. Christo- sently engrossed almost all the devopher, who is said to have been twelve tion of the vulgar, who think they may feet, or twelve cubits high, and to have make more free with these inferior carried our Saviour over an arm of the divinities than they can with the sea upon his back. From the words Supreme Being; so that the name of Vera Icon, or the true image, meaning the true God the Father is seldom that of our Saviour, impressed upon a made use of by them.2 And those handkerchief, they have made Saint persons who have attached themselves Veronica, and supposed this handker- to any particular saint have become most passionately fond of them, and have been led to magnify their power to a degree which excites both our supposing that words beginning with pity and indignation.3 There is a book an S were intended to express the entitled The Conformity of St. Francis, name of some saint, and from the intended to show how nearly he ap-remainder of the word they have proached to Christ, in his birth, accordingly composed the name of an miracles, and all the particulars of his maginary person. Thus, in all pro- life. But nothing was ever so extra-bability, from Soracte, the name of a ordinary as the accounts of Ignatius, mountain, they have got the name of by his followers the Jesuits; and it is St. Oreste, softening the sound after the more so, as he lived in modern times.

> Some of the Jesuits have said, it was no wonder that Moses worked so many miracles, since he had the name of God writtenuponhisrod; or that the apostles worked miracles, since they spake in the name of Christ: whereas, St. Ignatius had performed as many miracles as the apostles, and more than Moses, in his own name. Others of them have said that only Christ, the apostle Peter.

> <sup>2</sup> Mr. Brydone says, he "remarked with how little respect the people of Sicily passed the chapels that were dedicated to God. They hardly deigned to give a little inclination of the head;

> but when they came near those of their favourite saints, they bowed down to the very ground." Travels, II. p. 127. (P.)
>
> Mr. Swinburne says, that from what he saw, he is "apt to suspect, that the people in Spain trouble themselves with few serious thoughts on the subject of religion; and that, provided they can bring themselves to believe that their favourite can oring unemselves to believe that their fravouries saint looks upon them with an eye of attention, they take it for granted that, under his influence, they are freed from all apprehension of damnation in a future state, and indeed," he adds, "from any great concern about the moral duties of this life." Travels, p. 174. (P.)

<sup>1</sup> Middleton's Letter, pp. 173, 174. (P.) On Soracte, Addison says, "In my way to Rome, seeing a high hill standing by itself in the Campania, I did not question but it had a classic name, and upon inquiry, found it to be Mount Soracte. (Hor. Carm. L. i. 9.) The Italians at present call it, because its name begins with an S, St. Oreste." Romarks on Italy, 1705, p. 164. On St. Viar, see Mabill. Her. Ital. p. 145, quoted in Middleton's Works, III. p. 91.

the blessed Virgin and God, could even contemplate the sanctity of St. Ignapassage of Scripture, God has in these last times spoken unto us by his Son1.

church has been improved in several respects by means of the Reformation, in consequence of which several abuses since been said in defence of them; yet, it was a long time before anything was done by authority to remedy this shocking abuse. The Council of Trent connived at all these things. They did nothing to check the invocation of saints, and indeed, by their decrees, the applying to them directly for help and assistance is encouraged.2 But not long ago a very considerable reformation of the calendar, in this respect, was made by Pope Benedict XIV.3

 Basnage, Histoire, II. p. 693. (P.)
 Et quamvis in honorem et memoriam sanctorum nonnullas interdum missas ecclesia celetorum nomullas interdum missas ecclesia cele-brare consueverit; non tamen illis sacrificum ofierri docet, sed Deo soli, qui illos coronavit. Undo nec sacerdos dicere solet, offero tibi sacrifi-cium, Petre, vel Paule, sed Deo, de illorum victoria gratias agens, corum patrocinia im-plorat; ut fipsi pro nobis intercedere dignentur in celis, quorum memoriam facimus in terris." Sess, xxii. C. iii. De Messis in Honorem Sanctorum, Con. Trid. Can. et Decret. pp. 151, 152. The autho-rities adduced for thus honouring the saints are Augustin and Curil.

rities adduced for thus honorang are Augustin and Cyril.

Prosper Lumbertini, who was Pope from 1740 to his death in 1758, at the age of 83. His biographer thus records his merits as a reformer, "Chaque année de son Pontificat a été marquée par quelque Bulle, pour réformer des abus, ou pour introduire des usages utiles." Of his works, intended volumes folio, the eight first were on in twelve volumes folio, the eight first were on the beatification and canonization of saints. This Pope received an extraordinary compliment from Mr. Horace Walpole, (Lord Orford,) on his return from Italy, by an inscription in Italian, of which the following is the sense according to the French version:

Prosper Lambertini, bishop of Rome, surnamed Benedict XIV., who, though an absolute prince, reigns with as much equity as a Doge of Venice. To restore the lustre of the Tawa, he employs only his virtues; the means by which he acquired it. Loved by Papists, esteemed by Protestants; a priest, humble and disinterested; a prince without a favourite; a Pope without a nephew; (sans nepotisme,) an author without vanity; in one word, a man whom neither power nor persuasion can draw aside. The son of a favourite minister, who never made his court to any prince, nor did homage to any ecclesiastic, presents, in a free Protestant country, this merited offering to the best of the Roman Pontiffs. See Nouv. Dict. Hist. I. p. 376. Dr. John de Launoy, in the

Together with the worship of saints, that of angels also gained much ground tius. They also applied to him this in this period. Pope Gregory IV. appointed a festival in honour of St. Michael, which, indeed, had long been Though the state of the Catholic observed both in the East and in Italy, and was then almost universal in the Latin church. So proper objects of worship are angels considered to be by were so fully exposed that little has the Papists, that they pray to them directly, for the pardon of sin and eternal life. Of all the saints, it is only the Virgin Mary that is addressed in such a high style of devotion as this.

SECTION II.

PART II.

OF THE WORSHIP OF THE VIRGIN MARY.

WITH such an astonishing increase of the veneration of saints and martyrs, (Christians having first prayed for them, then hoped and prayed for their intercession with God, till at last they made direct addresses to them,) it will naturally be expected that their devotion to the Virgin Mary would advance no less rapidly. Accordingly we find such particular attention paid to her, that both the Son and the Father are with many persons almost entirely overlooked. In words, indeed, they pretend that the devotion addressed to her falls short of that which is paid to God, as it exceeds that which is paid to other saints, calling the devotion that is paid to God by the name of Latria, that to the saints Dulia, and that to the Blessed Virgin Hyperdulia; but these distinctions are only nominal, and, in fact, if there be any difference, it seems to be rather in favour of the Virgin, as appears by their using ten Aves, or salutations of seventeenth century, attained, by his critical examination of their pretensions, the title of unrooster of saints, (le Dénicheur des Saints, ) Ibid. IV. p. 58. See also Bayle, Art. Launoy, in Middleton's Works, III. p. 33.

4 Basnage, I. p. 308. (P.)

the Virgin, for one Pater, or the Lord's at that time to make use of the interwith which they continually pay their her directly. devotion to her.

applied to the Virgin Mary by Cargreatest doctors declared, that "all things that are God's are the Virgin Mary's; because she is both the spouse and the mother of God."3

Let us now see by what steps this progress was made; for, strong as was the propensity to this kind of idolatry, times and proper circumstances were requisite to bring it to this height. It is said that Peter Fullo, a monk of Constantinople, introduced the name of the Virgin Mary into the public prayers about the year 480; but it is certain she was not generally invoked in public till a long time after that.4 Justinian in giving thanks for his victories, and praying, only says, "we ask this also by the prayers of the holy and glorified Mary, mother of God, and always a virgin;" it being the custom

Burnet on the Articles, p. 308. (P.) "Maria,

Burnet on the Artenia Burnet or die, the nos ab hoste protege, et hora mortis suscipe. . . . Solve vinela retaine, profer lumen execis . . . Jure matris impera Redemptori." Art. xxii. Ed. 4, pp. 226, 227.

2 "Ps. vii. 'O thou my good Lady, in thee have I put my trust.' ix. 'I will praise thee, O Lady, with all my heart.' xvi. 'Preserve me, O Lady, Rejoice in our Lady, O ye righteous, I will always give thanks unto our Lady, her braise shall be in my mouth continually.' And praise shall be in my mouth continually, so on, throughout the whole book," E so on, throughout the whole book." Hist. or Popery, 1735, I. p. 87.

3 Hist. of Popery, I. p. 164. (P.) "Omnia que Det sunt, Marie sunt, quia Mater et Sponsa Dei illa est. Chrysost. a Visit. I. De Verb. Dom. L. iv. C. viii. And Bernard de Busti, in Mariali. Pt. xii. avers, Tot creature serviunt gloriose Marie Virgini, guot serviunt Trinitati. As many creatures honour the Virgin, as do the Trinity." Hist. 1735, I. p. 87.

4 Sueur, Δ. D. 483. (P.)

Prayer, and by that humble prostration cession of the Virgin, but not to invoke

When it was thought proper to keep The prayers that are constantly ad- up the festivals and ceremonies of the dressed to her are such as these: Pagan religion, and only to change the "Mary, the mother of grace, the mother objects of them, the Virgin Mary was of mercy, do thou defend us from our sure to come in for her share of these enemies and receive us in the hour of new honours, together with other saints. death: pardon the guilty: give light to Accordingly we find that, whereas the the blind." Also "by the right of a Pagans had used, in the beginning of mother command our Redeemer, is an February, to celebrate the feast of Proallowed address to her." The psalms serpine with burning tapers; to divert which contain an address to God are them from this impiety, Christians instituted, on the same day, the feast of dinal Bonaventure, in his Psaiter of Purification, in honour of the Virgin the Blessed Virgin; 2 and one of their Mary, and called it Candlemas, from the lights that were used on the occasion.5 This institution is ascribed to Pope Vigilius, about the year 536, though others fix it to the year 543. But before this time there had been a feast on that day called imamavry, or the meeting, in commemoration of Simeon meeting Mary on the day of her purification, and taking Jesus in his arms, when he was presented in the temple. But there was not then any invoking of the Virgin, no crying Ave Maria stella, nor lighting wax candles in her honour.6 The feast of the immaculate conception was also added about the same time.7

Though we know few particulars of the life of the Virgin Mary, and nothing at all concerning her death; yet, it was so much taken for granted, that she went immediately into heaven (though other saints were obliged to wait for the beatific vision, till the resurrection,) that about the ninth century a festival was instituted in commemoration of her assumption.

"The worship of the Virgin Mary" also "received new accessions of solemnity and superstition" in the tenth century. Towards the conclusion of it, "a custom was introduced .... of celebrating masses and abstaining from flesh in her honour every Sabbath- the immaculate conception, and there day;" and after this, what was called the lesser office of the Virgin was question. John XXII. favoured the confirmed by Urban in the following Jacobines on account of the hatred he century. In this tenth century also, bore to the Cordeliers, who took the the rosary and crown of the blessed Virgin were first used. "The rosary whom he had excommunicated. Sixtus consists of fifteen repetitions of the IV., who was a Cordelier, favoured the Lord's Prayer, and a hundred and fifty opinion which had always been main-; salutations of the blessed Virgin; while the crown, according to the different opinions of the learned concerning the age of the Virgin, consists of six or seven repetitions of the Lord's Prayer, and six or seven times ten salutations or Ave Marias." 1 Peter Damiani speaks that conception. of the lesser office of the Virgin as a new form of devotion, instituted in his time, as also of Saturday being conse-crated to her honour; as Monday was to that of the angels.2

5 "On a remedié par ce changement à l'obstina-tion du Paganism que l'on eut plutôt irrité si on eut enterpris d'ôter entièrement la chose." Rhenanus on Tertullian, in "Les Conformitez des Cérémonies," 1667, p. 113.

6 Sueur, A. D. 542. (P.)

7 Mosheim, I. p. 466. (P.) Cent. vi. Pt. ii. Ch. iv. ad fin.

We have seen that some persons, in the former period, entertained a suspicion that the Virgin Mary might per-haps be born without original sin. In the progress of things, which I have been describing, these suspicions were not likely to lose ground. However, it was far from being the universal opinion, that she was born in any more favourable circumstances than other persons. The first controversy on this subject was about the year 1136, when the canons of Lyons started the opinion of the immaculate conception, as it now began to be called, and would have established an office for celebrating it, but Bernard opposed it. The Thomists, or the followers of Thomas Aquinas, opposed that opinion till the year 1300. when Scotus, a Dominican or Cordelier, first made it a probable opinion, and his followers afterwards made it an article of faith, whilst the Franciscans or Jacobines held a contrary opinion; and the controversy between them continued three hundred years, and indeed has not regularly been decided to this

The University of Paris declared for were several Popes on both sides of the part of the emperor Lewis, of Bavaria, tained by his order; and in the year 1474, he published a bull, in which he prohibited any censure of the opinion of the immaculate conception as heretical, and confirmed the new service that had been made for the festival of

This controversy continued till the Council of Trent, which confirmed the constitution of Sixtus IV., but without condemning the opinions of the Jacobines.3 This did not lessen the controversy; the Dominicans still maintaining the immaculate conception, and the Franciscans opposing it. Spain was perfectly in a flame about it, of which the very sign-posts of this day bear witness. For travellers say, that, in going from Barcelona to Granada, to the name of the Virgin Mary is always added "Sin peccado concebida," conceived without sin.4 At length Alexander V., unable to settle the controversy in any other manner, in 1667 ordered that there should be no more preaching on the subject.5

The devotion paid to the Virgin is 8 Hist. of the Council of Trent, p. 103. (P.) "Declarat tamen hæc ipsa sancta Synodus, non esse suæ intentionis comprehendere in hoc de-creto, ubi de peccato originali agitur, beatam et immaculatam Virginem Mariam Dei genetricem, immachatam viginem maram bet genetricem, sed observandas esse ii constitutiones felicis recordationis Sixti Papa IV. sub pœnis in eis constitutionibus contentis, quas innovat." Sess. v. Decretum de Peccalo originali, ad fin. Con. Trid.

Can. et Decret. p. 14.

Mr. Swinburne says, "I believe there is scarcely a house in Granada that has not over its door in large red characters, 'Ave Maria purissima, sin peccado concebida.' A military order in that country swear to defend by word and in that country swear to derend by word and deed the doctrine of the immaculate conception. The peasants near Alicant, instead of saluting strangers in any other way, bawl out 'Ave Maria purissima,' to which they expect to be answered, 'Sin peccado concebida,' or 'Doo gratias.'" Travels, pp. 190, 199, (P.)

6 Histoire des Papes, V. p. 342. (P.)

<sup>1</sup> Mosheim, II. pp. 224, 225. (P.) Cent. x. Pt. ii. Ch. iv. ad fin.
Fleury, A. D. 1062. (P.)

very little, if at all, lessened since the Reformation. At Einsilden, or Notre Dame des Erémites, in Switzerland, says Mr. Coxe, crowds of pilgrims from all quarters resort to adore the Virgin, and to present their offerings; and it is computed that, upon a moderate calculation, their number amounts yearly to a hundred thousand.1

The last circumstance that I shall relate, concerning the Virgin Mary, is, that in 1566, some Flemings began to wear medals in their hats in her honour, representing what was supposed to be a miraculous image of her at Hale, in Hainault, and which they wore, to distinguish them from the Protestants of that country. The Pope blessed and consecrated these medals, granting a remission of the punishment of sin to those that wore them; and this gave a beginning to the consecration of medals.<sup>2</sup>

SECTION II.

PART III.

OF THE WORSHIP OF IMAGES IN THIS PERIOD.

WE have seen how, in the preceding period, a fondness for pictures and images had made some progress among Christians, in consequence of an undue veneration for the persons whom they represented. In the natural progress of things, images were treated with more and more respect, till it was imagined that the homage paid to the saint required the same to be paid to his image. It was even imagined that he was so far present to the image, as to communicate to it the powers of which he himself was possessed; the image being a kind of body to the soul of the saint.

This was the very state of things

among the Heathens. For they imagined that, after the forms of consecration, the invisible power of the god, to whom any image was dedicated, was brought to reside in it, and to entitle it to the same respect as if it had been the god himself in person. At length, therefore, Christians came to be idolaters in the same gross sense in which the Heathens had ever been so; being equally worshippers both of dead men and of their images. But no great progress had been made in this business at the close of the last period.

At that time pictures and images in churches were chiefly used for the purpose of ornament, for the commemoration of the saints to which they were dedicated, and the instruction of the ignorant. Gregory the Great encouraged the use of them, so that the honour paid to them was much increased towards the end of the sixth century, and more in the following. And when Serenus, bishop of Marseilles, seeing the bad consequence of introducing these images, not only ordered that no person should fall down before them, or pay them any homage, but that they should be removed from the churches of his diocese. Gregory disapproved of his conduct, praising his zeal, but blaming him for breaking the images. He, therefore, only desired that they might not be worshipped, but would have them preserved in the churches, on the principle, that those who could not read might be instructed by them.3 But in little more than a century the see of Rome changed its doctrine on the subject, Gregory II. being strenuous for the worship of images.

The first who openly espoused the doctrine of images in the West was Pope Constantine, the predecessor of Gregory II.; and there seems to have been as much of policy as of religion in the measures which he took with respect to it. The emperor Philippicus had taken an active part in opposition to images, and had ordered them to be removed from churches, in order to put On this poor pretence was the a stop to the idolatrous veneration that authority of the second commandcasion of quarrelling with the emperor, of him, resented so highly, that, in a synod held on the occasion, he not only condemned his conduct in that respect. but excommunicated him as a heretic. and pronounced him unworthy of the empire, authorizing and exhorting his subjects to revolt from him. This new heresy was called that of the Iconoclasts, or the breakers of images. By picking this quarrel with the emperor. this Pope and his successors asserted not only their independence of the emperors of Constantinople, but their superiority to them.

Travels, p. 57. (P.)
Histoire des Papes, V. p. 10.

<sup>8</sup> Sueur, A. D. 599. (P.) [Basnage, I. p. 807.]

Gregory II., who succeeded Constantine, and the emperor Leo Isauricus. were at continual variance on this subject of images; the latter pulling them down from the churches, and the former excommunicating him for it, and also pronouncing his subjects absolved of their allegiance to him, and forbidding them to pay him tribute.

Something farther was done in favour of images by Stephen III., or rather IV., in opposition to Constantine II., whom he had deposed, and who had called a synod in which the worship of images had been condemned. This Stephen called another synod, in which, another innovation in Christian worship was made, or at least authorized, viz. the worshipping of God himself by an image. For they condemn the execrable and pernicious decree of the former synod, by which the condition of the immortal God was made worse than that of men. "Is it lawful," say they, "to set up statues of mortal men, both that we may not be ungrateful, and that we may be excited to imitate their virtuous actions; and shall it not then be lawful to set up the image of God, whom we ought always, if it were possible, to have before our eyes?"1 was beginning to be paid to them. ment, which expressly forbids the wor-This the Pope, who wished for an oc- shipping of the true God by images, entirely set aside. This is so palpable in order to make himself independent a contradiction of the doctrine of the Scriptures, that the second commandment is entirely left out in several of the copies of the ten commandments among the Papists, and one of the others is split into two, for the sake of preserving the number ten, and to hide this falsification from the common people.

1 Platina de Vita Stephani III.

The incensing of statues, which had been a constant heathen practice, is said to have been introduced into the Christian worship of images by Leo III.

The worship of images had many fluctuations in the East, some of the emperors favouring it and others discouraging it; but at length the proper adoration of them was fully established in the second Council of Nice, held in the year 787, under the emperor Constantine Porphyrogenita, or rather his mother Irene, a most ambitious and violent woman. This, which was denominated the second Nicene Council, decreed that images should be made according to the form of the venerable cross; meaning what we call crucifixes. or images of our Saviour upon the cross; that they might be made of any materials, that they should be dedicated, and put into churches, as well as upon walls, in private houses, and upon the public roads. It was appointed in this council, that, in the first place, images should be made of our Saviour, in the next place of the Virgin Mary (called by them the immaculate mother of God), then of the venerable angels, and lastly of all saints, that the honour of adoration may be rendered to them; not, however, that of Latria, which they say belongs only to the divine nature, but, "as we approach with reverence the type of the venerable and vivifying cross, and the holy evangelists, with oblations, perfumes and lights. For the honour that is done to the image is reflected upon the prototype, and Charlemagne. He called a council at he who adores the image, adores the subject of it." They add, as usual, "Let all who think otherwise be excommunicated." It is to be observed. that no statues, or even bas-reliefs, were permitted by this council. These were not yet admitted into churches, as they were afterwards.1 So passionately fond were the Greeks of this species of worship, that they esteemed this second Council of Nice "as a most signal blessing derived to them from the immediate interposition of heaven; and accordingly instituted, in commemoration thereof, an anniversary festival, which was called the feast of orthodoxu."

The fathers of this council "expressed a detestation of an image made to represent the Deity. Though they had the sanction of Pope Stephen's synod in the Latin church, and though this practice was not soon general, even in the West, at length pictures and images, even of God the Father and of the Trinity, became common. The Council of Trent favours them, "provided that they be decently made: directions are also given concerning the use of the image of the Trinity in public offices; ... and such as have held it unlawful to make such images were especially condemned at Rome in 1690."3

In the West, notwithstanding the favour shown to images by the Popes, the worship of them did not go down so well as it did in the East, owing to the opposition that was made to it by

Frankfort in 794, in which the second Council of Nice was condemned. Images, however, were allowed to be kept in churches, for the purpose of ornament and instruction, but worship was forbidden to be paid to them. The same disposition, so hostile to image worship, continued to influence the successors of Charlemagne. For we find that, in a synod held at Paris, by order of Lothaire, in 825, on the subject of images, it was ordered, as before, to keep them, but not to worship them. Another council was held at Paris by Louis the Meek, in 844, in which the same decrees were repeated.

But the greatest opposition to the worship of images in this age was made by Claudius, bishop of Turin, a man of distinguished abilities and zeal, and from whom the Waldenses, who continued to oppose this and almost every other corruption of the Church of Rome, seem to have had their origin. This eminent bishop not only wrote with great earnestness and force upon the subject, but perceiving how violently the common people went into the worship of images, and that he could not by any other means check the progress of it, he ordered all the images and crosses in his diocese to be demolished. For this conduct he was generally blamed, even in France and Germany, but not for opposing the worship which was then paid to images. About the same time, Agobard, bishop of Lyons, wrote excellently against the worship of images, and also against dedicating churches to any but God.4

The worship of images did not continue, without some interruption, after the second Council of Nice, even in the East. But as one woman, Irene, had procured their worship to be ordered at that time; so another woman, Theodora, governing her son Michael III., procured their final establishment in 842. But the Greeks never had any images besides those on plain surfaces, or pictures: they never approved of

<sup>1</sup> Sueur, A. D. 787. (P.)
2 Mosheim, IL pp. 149, 150. (P.) Cent. ix. Pt. ii.
Ch. iii. Sect. xv.
8 Burnet on the Articles, p. 293. (P.) Art.
xxii. Ed. 4, p. 216. On the authority of Roman Catholic writers, Burnet has described the Council of Tront as allowing images of "the Deity and the Trinity," but nothing appears of such allowance in the decree "De invocatione, veneratione, et reliquis sanctorum, et sacris imaginibus."
The images to be set up and retained in churches are three: "Christi, Deiparæ Virginis et allorum The images to be set up and retained in churches are three: "Christi, Deipare Virginis et aliorum Sanctorum." The use of them is thus described: "Per imagines, quas osculamur et coram quibus caput aperimus et procumbimus, Christum adoremus, et sauctos quorum illa similitudinem gerunt venerenur." This use of them is then described as sanctioned by the second Council of Nice, Sess. xxv. Con. Trid. Can, et Decret. p. 234.

Sueur, A. D. 827. (P.)

through the influence of the Roman homage to the saintly images," towards the end of the ninth century; and in the Germans and other nations." 2

It has been asserted that, properly speaking, worship never was paid to they bowed before them, they only addressed themselves to the saints whom they represent. But that their regards do terminate in the image itself, as much as they do in any living man, whom they should address, is evident, not only from a variety of considerations, suggested by the history of image worship, but from the acknowledgment of those who practise it; which puts it beyond all doubt, that they suppose a real power to reside in the image ita man to be in a man.

In the eleventh century it was de-

1 The following relations are by an intelligent 1 The following relations are by an intelligent observer, who was Chaplain to the British Embassy at Constantinople in 1669: "Before you enter the church, is a covered porch, usually arched, running out at each side the portal, with seats against the wall, upon which are painted several images, as of our blessed Saviour, the Virgin Mary, St. John, St. George and the like, and of that saint particularly to whose memory the church is consecrated; but very wretchedly, and without beauty or proportion." Account of the church is consecrated; but very wretchedity, and without beauty or proportion." Account of the Greek Church, by Tho. Smith, 1680, p. 63.

"The Greeks have so great prejudice to all engraven images, and especially if they are embossed and prominent, that they invegls according to the control of the con bossed and prominent, that they inveigh severely and fiercely against the Latins, as little less than idolaters, and symbolizing with the very heathen.

But as for the pictures, whether in colours or painted, of our Saviour and of the saints, they account them sacred and venerable. These they reverence and honour by bowing, and kissing them, and saying their prayers before them. With these the partition that separates the Bema, or chancel, from the body of the church, is adorned. At set times, the priest, before he enters into it, makes three low reverences (mporkurgars, meravous) before the image of Christ, and as many before that of the Virgin Mary: and he does the like in the time of celebration, and oftentimes perfumes them with his bration, and oftentimes perfumes them with his incense pot." Ibid. pp. 211, 212.

2 Mosheim, II. p. 151. (P.) Cent. ix. Pt. ii.

Ch. iii. Sect. xvi.

statues. Notwithstanding the oppo- bated in the Greek church, whether sition to the worship of images by the there was an inherent sanctity "in emperors of the West, yet at length, the images of Jesus Christ and of the saints;" and though it was deter portiffs, even "the Gallican clergy be- mined in a council," that the images gan to pay a certain kind of religious of Christ and of the saints . . . did in no sense partake of the nature of the divine Saviour, or of these holy men," this "their example was followed by yet it was maintained that "they were enriched with a certain communication of divine grace."3

The Latin church has by no means images by Christians, but that when been behind that of the Greeks in this respect. For, if we judge by the practice of the church of Rome, and even by some of their acknowledgments, it will be evident that a proper Latria, or such worship as they themselves think is due to God, is also to be given to images. Those who write in favour of it "frequently cite this hymn, Crux ave, spes unica, auge piis justitiam, reisque dona veniam; that is, Hail cross, our only hope, increase righteousness in the godly, and pardon a real power to reside in the image of the guilty." "It is expressly said in self, just as they suppose the spirit of the guilty." "It is expressly said in the Pontifical, Cruci debetur Latria," that Latria is due to the cross. This favours the opinions of those who say that Latria is "to be given to all those images, to the originals of which it is due," as to Christ; as the Dulia is to be given to the images of the saints, and the Hyper-dulia to those of the Virgin Mary.4 The Council of Trent only decreed that due worship should be given to images, but did not define what that due worship is.

Among acts of worship, they reckon the oblation of incense and lights; and the reason given by them for all this is, because the honour of the image or type passes to the original or prototype; so that direct worship was to terminate in the image itself. And Durandus passed for little less than a heretic, because he thought that images were worshipped only improperly; because at their presence we call to mind the object represented by them, which we worship by means of the image, as if the object itself was before us.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. II. p. 329. (P.) Cent. xi. Pt. ii. Ch. iii.

<sup>4</sup> Burnet on the Articles, p. 295. (P.) Art. xxii. Ed. 4, p. 217.

Thomas Aquinas, and many others after him, expressly teach "that the same acts and degrees of worship which are due to the original, are also due to the image. They think an image has such a relation to the original, that both ought to be worshipped by the same act; and that to worship the image with any other sort of acts, is to worship it on its own account, which they think is idolatry." On the other hand, those who adhere "to the Nicene doctrine think that the image is to be worshipped with an inferior degree" of homage; and "that otherwise idolatry must follow; so that, whichever of the two schemes be adopted, idolatry must be the consequence, with some or other of the advocates for this worship."1

SECTION II.

PART IV.

OF THE RESPECT PAID TO RELICS IN THIS PERIOD.

If so much respect was paid to the images of saints, we shall not wonder that even more account was made of their relics, which bear a still nearer relation to them; and if an invisible virtue, viz. all the power of the saint, could be supposed to accompany every separate image of any particular saint, they could not hesitate to ascribe the same to every relic of him, even the cloth or rags that had belonged to him, and the very earth on which he had trod.

A superstitious respect for relics, and especially for the true cross of Christ, is observed to have advanced much in the sixth century; and many persons then boasted of having in their possession the real wood of that cross. And when image-worship began, that of relics followed, as an accessary. The enshrining of relics (in his zeal for which Julian IV., about the year 620, distinguished himself) made the most excellent sort of images, and they were thought to be the best preservative possible, both for soul and body. No presents were considered as of more value than relics; and it was an easy thing for the popes to furnish the world plentifully with them, especially after the discovery of the catacombs, which was a subterraneous place where many of the Romans deposited their dead.

Burnet on the Articles, p. 294. (P.) Art. Ch. iii. Sect. vi.
 xxii. Ed. 4, p. 216.

It is observed by historians, that the demand for relics was exceedingly great in the ninth century, and that the clergy employed great dexterity in satisfying that demand. In general, some persons pretended to have been informed in a dream, where such and such relics were to be found, and the next day they never failed to find them. As the most valued relics came from the East, the Greeks made a gainful traffic with the Latins for legs, arms, skulls, jawbones, &c., many of them certainly of Pagans, and some of them not human; and recourse was sometimes had to violence and theft, in order to get possession of such valuable trea-

We may form some idea of the value that was put upon some relics in that superstitious and ignorant age, from the following circumstance, and this is only one instance of great numbers that might be collected from history. Boleslas, a king of Poland, willing to show his gratitude to Otho, the third emperor of Germany, who had erected his duchy into a kingdom, made him a present of an arm of St. Adalbert in a silver case. The emperor was far from slighting the present, but placed it in a new church which he had built at Rome in honour of this Adalbert. He also built a monument in honour of the same saint.8 2 Mosheim, II. p. 141. (P.) Cent. ix. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. vi.

Sueur. A. D. 1000. (P.)

and more wood of the true cross of Christ than, they say, would make a ship. In this the Greeks had the same advantage that the Romans had by means of the catacombs, which contained a sufficient quantity of bones. to which it was easy to give the names of celebrated Christian martyrs; and, at a distance from Rome, no inquiry could be made concerning them.

Besides all this, a happy method was thought of by Gregory I., or some other person of that age, to multiply the virtue of relics, without multiplying the relics themselves; for, instead of giving the relic of any saint, he contented himself with putting into a box a piece of cloth, which was called brandeum, which had only touched the relics. It is said, that, in the time of Pope Leo, some Greeks having doubted whether such relics as these were of any use, the Pope, in order to convince them, took a pair of scissors, and that on cutting one of these cloths, blood came out of it.1

We cannot wonder at the great demand for relics, when we consider the virtues that were ascribed to them by the priests and friars who were the vendors of them in that ignorant age. They pretended that they had power to fortify against temptations, to in-

The greatest traffic for relics was crease grace and merit, to fright away during the Crusades; and that many devils, to still winds and tempests, to impositions were practised in this busi- secure from thunder, lightning, blastness, was evident from the very pre- ing, and all sudden casualties and mistensions themselves; the same thing, fortunes; to stop all infectious disfor example, the skull of the same per- orders, and to cure as many others as son, being to be seen in different places, any mountebank ever pretended to do. Who that had money would choose to be without such powerful preservatives?

> The fathers of the Council of Trent appointed relics to be venerated, but, with their usual caution, they did not determine the degree of it. This great abuse was effectually removed in all Protestant churches at the Reformation, though many other things equally near to the first principles of Christianity were left to the sagacity and zeal of a later period.

Among the Catholics the respect for relics still continues, though, with the general decrease of superstition, this must have abated in some measure. The Holy Land is still a great mart for these commodities. Haselquist says, that the inhabitants of Bethlehem chiefly live by them, making models of the holy sepulchre, crosses, &c. Of these there was so large a stock in Jerusalem, that the procurator told him he had to the amount of fifteen thousand piastres in the magazine of the convent. An incredible quantity of them, he says, goes yearly to the Roman Catholic countries in Europe, but most to Spain and Portugal. Many are bought by the Turks, who come yearly for these commodities.2

<sup>2</sup> Travels, p. 149.

<sup>1</sup> Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 305. (P.)

PART V.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS CONCERNING THE STATE OF THE DEAD.

THE INTRODUCTION.

THINK that I have sufficiently proved, in my Disquisitions relating to Matter and Spirit, that, in the Scriptures, the state of death is represented as a state of absolute insensibility, being opposed to life. doctrine of the distinction between soul and body, as two different substances, the one material and the other immaterial, and so independent of one another, that the latter may even die and perish, and the former, instead of losing anything, be rather a gainer by the catastrophe, was originally a doctrine of the oriental philosophy, which afterwards spread into the Western part of the world. But it does not appear that it was ever adopted by the generality of the Jews, and perhaps not even by the more learned and philosophical of them, such as Josephus, till after the time of our Saviour; though Philo, and some others, who resided in Egypt, might have adopted that tenet in an earlier period.

Though a distinction is made in the Scriptures between the principle, or seat, of thought in man, and the parts which are destined to other functions; and in the New Testament that principle may sometimes be signified by the term soul; yet there is no instance, either in the Old or New Testament, of this soul being supposed to be in one place and the body in another. They are always conceived to go together, so that the perceptive and thinking power could not, in fact, be considered by the sacred writers as any other than a property of a living man, and therefore as what ceased of course when the man was dead, and could not be revived but with the revival of the body.

Accordingly, we have no promise of any reward, or any threatening of punishment, after death, but that which is represented as taking place at the general resurrection. And it is observable that this is never, in the Scriptures, called, as with us, the resurrection of the body (as if the soul, in the meantime, was in some other place), but always the resurrection of the dead, that is, of the man. therefore, there be any intermediate state, in which the soul alone exists, conscious of anything, there is an absolute silence concerning it in the Scriptures; death being always spoken of there as a state of rest, of silence, and of darkness, a place where the the righteous cannot praise God. This is the sum of the argument from the Scriptures, and comes in aid of the arguments from reason and the nature of things, which show the utter incapacity of any connection between substances so totally foreign to each other, as the material and immaterial principles are always described to be; things that have no common property whatever, and therefore must be incapable of all mutual action. I think I have shown that, let the immaterial principle be defined in whatever manner it is possible to define it, the supposition of it explains no one pheno-

wicked cease from troubling, but where

<sup>1</sup> See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. pp. 60, 354-364.

and a material principle; and for any- had been at the same time. thing that appears, our ignorance concerning the nature of this principle should lead us to suppose that it may, just as well as that it may not, be compatible with matter. All that can be said is, that we can see no relation between the principle of sensation and thought, and any system of matter; but neither do we bears to gravity, and various other Being, therefore, that has endued keep up some motion in the brain. matter with a variety of powers, with connection, may have endued the living except accompanying that state, there say that they necessarily inhere in, and belong to, the brain in that state, as that electricity is the necessary cases, alike,

There is not, in fact, any one phenomenon in favour of the opinion of the soul being a separate substance occasionally put. from the body. During life and health, the sentient powers always accompany the body, and in a temporary cessation of thought, as in a swoon, apparent drowning, &c., there never was an instance in which it was pretended that appearance, as much suspended as to invisible powers residing in them, or menon in nature; there being no more those of breathing and moving; and conceivable connection between the we might just as well inquire where powers of thought, and this imma- the latter had been in the interval of terial, than between the same powers apparent death, as where the former

There is, indeed, an imperfect mental process going on during sleep; but this seems to be in proportion to the imperfection of the sleep; for when it is perfectly sound, and the brain probably completely at rest, there is no more sensation or thought than during a swoon or apparent drowning. if there had been sufficient evidence perceive any relation which matter of uninterrupted thought during the soundest sleep, still it might be supproperties, with which we see that it posed to depend upon the powers of life, is, in fact, endued. The same great which were still in the body, and might

The only proof of the power of which it seems to have no natural thought not depending upon the body, in this case, would be the soul being human brain with this power of sen- afterwards conscious to itself, that it sation and thought, though we are not had been in one place, while the body able to perceive how this power should had been in another. Whereas, in result from matter so modified. And dreams we never have any idea but since, judging by experience, these that of our whole-selves having been powers always do accompany a certain in some different place, and in some state of the brain, and are never found very different state, from that in which we really are. Upon the whole, thereis just the same reason why we should fore, there can be no more reason to think that the principle of thought belongs to a substance distinct from the body, than that the principle of property of glass, and magnetism of breathing and of moving belongs to the load-stone. It is constant concomi- another distinct substance, or than tancy, and nothing else, that is the that the principle of sound in a bell foundation of our conclusions in both belongs to a substance distinct from the bell itself, and that it is not a power or property, depending upon the state into which the parts of it are

How men came to imagine that the case was otherwise, is not easy to say, any more than how they came to imagine that the sun, moon, and stars were animated, and the proper objects of adoration. But when once, in consethe soul had been in another place, and quence of any train of thinking, they came back again when the body was could suppose that the effects of the revived. In all these cases, the powers heavenly bodies, and of the other in-of sensation and thought are, to all animate parts of nature, were owing of a similar kind; and then it was easy and to suppose that this invisible principle was a thing independent of the body, and might subsist when that was laid in the grave. It was a long time, however, before men got quite clear of the idea of the necessary connection between the corporeal and the spiritual part of man. For it was long imagined that this invisible part of man accompanied the body in the place of its interment, whence came the idea of the descent of the soul, shade, or ghost, into some subterraneous place; though afterwards, by attending to the subject, and refining upon it, philosophers began to think that this invisible part of man, having nothing gross or heavy in its composition, might ascend rather than descend, and so hover in some higher region of the atmosphere. And Christians, having an idea of a local heaven, somewhere above the clouds, and of God and Christ residing there, they came in time to think that the souls of good men, and especially of martyrs, might be taken up thither, or into some place adjoining to it, and where they might remain till the resurrection.

SECTION I.

OF THE OPINIONS CONCERNING THE DEAD TILL THE TIME OF AUSTIN.

In the second and third centuries, those who believed that there was a soul distinct from the body, supposed that after death it went to some place under ground; but as this is not the doctrine of the Scriptures, it could not have been the general opinion of Christians at the first; and how long they kept to the genuine doctrine of revelation, and the dictates of reason and to something that was not the object common sense, in this respect, cannot of their external senses, they might be determined. It appears, however, easily imagine man to have a principle that there were some Christians who did so, and that in Arabia this doctrine enough to advance one step farther, was held by some so late as the third century. For we are informed that they maintained that the soul perishes with the body, but that it will be raised to life again, by the power of God, at the resurrection. It is said, however, that they were induced to abandon this opinion by the arguments and influence of Origen.1

It was in Arabia also that we find the opinion of Christ having no proper divinity of his own, but only that of the Father residing in him, and that he had no existence at all before his appearance in this world. This opinion is likewise said to have been confuted by Origen.2 Du Pin says, that Tatian also held the opinion of the Arabians with respect to the soul.3

It is to be regretted that we have no farther accounts concerning these Christians. Ecclesiastical historians call them philosophers; but the system which they held was fundamentally different from that of any other philosophy in those times. It cannot, however, be supposed that this opinion was peculiar to these people. The Jewish Christians, at least, must have retained it, and probably as long as they continued to subsist. But we have no distinct account of their opinions, or of anything relating to them. They were not writers themselves, and those that were had little intercourse with them, or value for them.

Whenever the Jews received the opinion of the separate existence of the soul, it was in the imperfect state above mentioned. For they held that there was a place below the earth, which they called paradise, where the souls of good men remained; and they distinguished this from the upper paradise, where they were to be after the resurrection. The Christians borrowed

Euseb, Hist. L. vi. C. xxxvii. I. p. 299. (P.)
 See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. p. 375.
 Ibid. L. vi. C. xxxxiii, p. 297. (P.)
 Bibliotheca Patrum, I. p. 55. (P.)

their opinion from the Jews, and sup- of a future judgment."3 This was posed that Hades, or the place of souls, was "divided into two mansions, in one whereof the souls of the wicked remained in grief and torment, and in the other those of the godly, in joy and happiness; both of them expecting the general resurrection-day."1

Into this general receptacle of souls, it was the opinion of the early fathers. that Christ descended, to preach; they supposing these to be the spirits in prison mentioned by the apostle Peter, 1 Pet. iii. 19. And as it is said in the gospel that he came not to call the righteous, but sinners to repentance, some of them supposed either that he did not give much attention to the good, or that they did not attend to him; for they say that, whereas he brought away many of the wicked, he left those of the good where they were. But perhaps the original tradition was, that in consequence of converting them, he removed them from the place where the wicked were confined, to this subterraneous paradise, where the souls of the righteous remain, in joyful expectation of a happy resurrection. Others, however, thought that our Saviour preached so effectually, as to empty the whole of this limbus patrum (for so also they called the precincts were to wait their doom in some interwithin which these ancient patriarchs were confined) and carried all the souls with him into heaven.2 But this must have been a late opinion, because it martyrs were admitted to the immewas not supposed in the time of the fathers, that the souls of good men in general would be with Christ, and enjoy what was then called the beatific vision of God, till the resurrection.

This opinion is clearly stated by Novatian, for he says, "Nor are the regions below the earth void of powers (potestatibus) regularly disposed and arranged; for there is a place whither the souls of the righteous and of the wicked are led, expecting the sentence evidently the uniform opinion of Christian writers for many centuries after this time.

The article concerning the descent of Christ into hell, in what we call the Apostles' Creed, is not mentioned by any writer before Rufinus, who found it in his own church at Aquileia; but it was not then known at Rome, or in the East. At first also, the expression was καταχθωνια, but "in the creed that carries Athanasius's name, though made in the sixth or seventh century. the word was changed into adns or hell. But yet it seems to have been understood to signify Christ's burial, there being no other word put for it in that creed." But in the declension of the Greek, and chiefly in the Latin tongue, the term hades, or hell, began to be applied to the mansion of wicked souls; some of the fathers imagining hades to be in the centre of the earth, others under the earth, and some being uncertain about its situation.

The high opinion that soon began to be entertained of the heroism and merits of the martyrs, led Christians to suppose that a preference would be given to their souls after death. For while the souls of ordinary Christians mediate state, or to pass to their final bliss through a purgation of fire, it came to be the general belief that diate presence of God and of Christ, the fire of martyrdom having purged away all their sins at once.

It was the opinion of most of the early fathers that the world was to be destroyed by fire, and also that all men were to pass through this fire, that the good would be purified by it, and the wicked consumed. The former part of this doctrine they might learn from the apostle Peter; but it does not clearly appear whence they derived the latter part of it. It is evident, how-

&lt;sup>1</sup> History of the Apostles' Creed, p. 198, &c. (P.) Ed. 5, pp. 190-192.

<sup>2</sup> Burnet on the Articles, p. 71. (P.) Art. iii.

Ed. 4, p. 57.

<sup>3</sup> De Trinitate, C. i. p. 5. (P.)

Burnet on the Articles, p. 69. (P.) Art. iii. Ed. 4, p. 56.

ever, that they had no proper idea of sumed in the fire that was to destroy the eternity of hell torments. And it the world. was the opinion of Origen, and after him of Gregory Nazianzen, and probably of others of the fathers, that the wicked, after being thus punished according to their deserts, would come out purified, and obtain mercy. Ambrose thought that the wicked would remain in this fire, which was to consume the world, but how long does not appear.2 Hilary maintained, that after the day of judgment all must pass through the fire, even the Virgin Mary herself, in order to purify them from their sins. This opinion was the first idea of a doctrine of Purgatory, which was so great a source of gain to the monks and priests in after ages.

Austin speaks very doubtfully with respect to the dead. He sometimes seems very positive for two states only; but as he asserted the last probatory fire, so he seems to have thought that good souls might suffer some grief in their sequestered state, before the last day, on account of some of their past sins, and that they might rise to their proper consummation by degrees. See his sentiments on this subject pretty much at large in his first question to Dulcidius; 3 where he inclines to think that they who have faith in Christ, but love the world too much, will be saved, but so as by fire; whereas they who, though they profess faith in Christ, yet neglect good works, will suffer eternally. In his treatise De Civitate Dei,4 he does not seem disposed to controvert the opinion of those who say that all will be saved at last, through the intercession of the saints.

The Gnostics are said to have maintained that the greatest part of mankind would be annihilated at the day of judgment, which was probably the same thing that was meant by those who said that they would be con-

SECTION II.

OF THE OPINIONS CONCERNING THE STATE OF THE DEAD, FROM THE TIME OF AUSTIN TILL THE REFORMATION.

In the last period we have seen something like the doctrine of Purgatory, but it is so exceedingly unlike the present doctrine of the Church of Rome on that subject, that we can hardly imagine that it could even serve as a foundation for it. The ancient fathers only thought that when this world would be destroyed by fire, that fire would purify the good, and destroy the wicked. Whereas, this purgatory is something that is sup-posed to take place immediately after death, to affect the soul only, and to terminate sooner or later, according to circumstances, especially the pains that are taken in favour of the dead, by the masses and other good offices of the living, as well as by their own benefactions and bequests for religious uses before their death.

On the whole, therefore, it looks as if this doctrine of purgatory had been built upon some other ground; and nothing is so likely to furnish a groundwork for it, as the notions of the Heathens concerning the state of souls in the regions below, which were always supposed capable of being brought back again. Also the popular opinions of the Northern nations concerning the state of souls after death were, in many cases, similar to those of the Greeks and Romans; and such opinions as these would not easily quit their hold of the common people on their conversion to Christianity; and being held, together with the opinion of the fathers above mentioned, the present doctrine of purgatory might, in time, be the produce of both.

It is generally said that the foundation of the present doctrine was laid

Sueur, A. D. 389. (P.)
 Ibid. A. D. 397. (P.)
 Op. IV. p. 658. (P.)
 Lib. xxi. C. xviii. (P.)

by Gregory the Great, who lived in the ished by demons, but by divine justice ject were very little different from pains of purgatory, he says, venial before him, of which an account has from the guilt of them, and that some been given in the former period; are delivered sooner than others.2 Gregory, however, did suppose that might be guilty; but he does not say that this punishment would always be place, but sometimes in the air, and

Narrow, however, as these foundations were, the monks were very indusit the most profitable business they were ever engaged in; and about the tenth century the present system seems to have been pretty well completed. For, then, not even the best of men were supposed to be exempted from the fire of purgatory; and it was generally represented as not less severe than that always be delivered from it by the prayers and masses of the living, which prayers and masses might always be had upon certain pecuniary considerations; and the fables and fictitious miracles that were propagated to secure the belief of this new kind of future state, were innumerable.

Thomas Aguinas says, that the place of purgatory is near to that in which the damned are punished; that the pains of purgatory exceed all the pains of this life; that souls are not pun-

1 Sucur, A. D. 594. (P.)

sixth century, about 160 years after only, though angels or demons might Austin. But his opinions on the sub-conduct them to the place. By the those of Austin himself, and of others sins are expiated even quod culpam, or

The present doctrine of the Church there was a purgatory to expiate the of Rome on the subject of purgatory, slight offences of which very good men is, "that every man is liable both to temporal and eternal punishment for his sins; that God, upon the account by means of fire, nor did he suppose of the death and intercession of Christ, this expiation to be made in the same does, indeed, pardon sin as to its eternal punishment; but the sinner is still sometimes in sinks, &c., or places full liable to temporal punishment, which of filth and nastiness. He also speaks he must expiate by acts of penance and of some good men whose souls went sorrow in this world, together with such immediately to heaven. But in one other sufferings as God shall think fit way he certainly did greatly promote to lay upon him.<sup>3</sup> But if he does not the doctrine, viz. by the many idle expiate these in this life, there is a stories which he propagated about state of suffering and misery in the what happened to particular souls next world, where the soul is to bear after they had left their bodies. as the temporal punishment of its sins, concerning the soul of King Theo- which may continue longer or shorter doric, which was boiled in the pot of till the day of judgment; and in order to the shortening this, the prayers and supererogations of men, here on earth, or the intercessions of the saints in trious in building upon them, finding heaven, but above all things, the sacrifice of the mass, are of great efficacy. This is the doctrine of the Church of Rome, as asserted in the Councils of Florence and Trent."4

Before this time, the opinions concerning purgatory were exceedingly various, with respect to the place of purgatory, the nature of the pains of of hell itself. But then souls might it, and indeed everything belonging to it. Eckius maintained that it was in the bottom of the sea. Others would have it to be in Mount Etna, Vesuvius, or some other burning mountain. Thomas More says, that the punishment will be only by fire, but Fisher. his fellow-sufferer, by fire and by water. Lorichius says, neither by fire nor water, but by the violent convulsions of hope and fear. Fisher maintained that the executioners would be the holy angels, but Sir Thomas More thought they would be the devils. Some again thought that only venial sins are expiated in purgatory, but others that they had superstitions similar to those mortal sins are expiated there likewise. Dennis the Carthusian thought that the pains of purgatory would continue to the end of the world; but Dominicus a Soto limited it to ten years, and others made the time to depend on the number of masses, &c., that should be said on their behalf, or on the will of the Pope. Thomas Aguinas, as has been seen above, makes the pains of purgatory to be as violent as those of hell; whereas, the Rhemists say that souls are not in a bad condition there; and Durandus, holding a middle opinion, gives them some intermission from their pains on Sundays and holidays. Bede tells a long story of a Northumberland man, who, after he died, returned to life again, and said that he had passed through the middle of a long and large valley, which had two lakes in it, in one of which souls were tormented with heat, and in the other with cold; and that when a soul had been so long in the hot lake that it could endure no longer, it would leap into the cold one; and when that became intolerable, it would leap back again. This uncertainty was so great, that the whole doctrine must have been discredited, if it had not been for the profits which the popes, the priests, and the friars, made of it.1

&lt;sup>2</sup> Summa III. p. 446, &c. (P.)
<sup>8</sup> Petrarch says, "I pray God every day to make my purgatory in this world." Mémoires pour la Vie de Petrarch, III. p. 277. (P.)
<sup>4</sup> Burnet on the Articles, p. 269. (P.) Art. xxii. Ed. 4, p. 197. See Sess. xxv. Deretum de Purgatorio. Con. Trid. Can. et Decret. p. 233.

The living, being, by means of this doctrine of purgatory, deeply interested in the fate of the dead, and having them very much at their mercy, the mistaken compassion and piety of many persons could not fail to be excited in their favour. Before the tenth century it had been customary, in many places, to put up prayers on certain days for the souls that were confined in purgatory, but these were made by each religious society for its own members and friends: but in this century a "yearly festival ... in remembrance of all departed souls, was instituted by ... Odilo, abbot of Cluni, and added to the Latin calendar towards the conclusion of the century."2

1 Staveley's Romish Horseleach, p. 205. (P.)

The Greeks, though in most respects of the Latins, yet they never adopted their notions concerning purgatory. At the time that this opinion was formed in the West, the two churches had very little intercourse with each other; and besides, the Greeks were so alienated from the Latins, that the reception of it by the latter would have rendered the former more averse to it.

According to the doctrine of purgatory, the moment that any soul is released from that place, it is admitted into heaven, to the presence of God and of Christ, and made as happy as it can be in an unembodied state, which was contrary to the opinion of the early fathers, viz. that all souls continued in hades until the resurrection, or, at most, that an exception was made in favour of the martyrs. However, this doctrine of purgatory, and the opinion of the efficacy of prayers, and of masses, to procure complete happiness for those who were exposed to it, at length obliterated the ancient doctrine, as appeared when an attempt was made to revive something like it by Pope John

Towards the conclusion of his life, this pope incurred the disapprobation of the whole Catholic church, by asserting, "in some public discourses, that the souls of the faithful, in their intermediate state, were permitted to behold Christ, as man, but not the face of God or the divine nature. . . . This doctrine highly offended Philip VI., king of France," who caused it to be examined and "condemned by the divines of Paris, in 1333." The pope, being alarmed at this opposition, softened his opinion in the year following, by saying, "that the unembodied souls of the righteous beheld the divine es-condition would permit;" and for fear been in doubt."3 of any ill consequences, from dying intermediate state, do fully and per- that church.

<sup>2</sup> Mosheim, II. p. 223. (P.) Cent. x. Pt. ii. Ch. iv. Sect, ii.

would be changed.2

SECTION III.

OF THE REVIVAL OF THE GENUINE DOC-TRINE OF REVELATION CONCERNING THE STATE OF THE DEAD.

So general was the belief of a purgatory in this Western part of the world, that Wickliffe could not entirely shake it off. But though he believed in a purgatory, "he saw the absurdity of supposing that God intrusted any man with a power to release sinners from such a state: but whether the souls of the dead might be profited by the ¹ Mosheim, III. pp. 157, 158. (P.) Cent. xiv. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. ix. See [Rutt's Priostley] Vol. III. p. 376. Dr. Maclaine, the translator of Mosheim, remarks, that "all this Pope's heretical fancies, about the beatific vision, were nothing, in comparison with a vile and most enormous practical heresy that was found in his coffers after his death, viz. twenty-five millions of florins, of which there were eighteen in specie, and the rest in plate, dec., squeezed out of the people and the inferior clergy during his pontificate." Ibid. Note, p. 158. ² Ibid. I. p. 473. (P.) Cent. vi. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. x.

Sect. x.

sence as far as their separate state and prayers of the living, he seems to have

The ancient Waldenses, however, who under the imputation of heresy, when separated from the Church of Rome behe "lay upon his death-bed, he sub- fore the doctrine of purgatory had got mitted his opinion to the judgment of established, never admitted it; and prethe church." His successor, Benedict sently after the Reformation by Luther, XII., after much controversy, estab- we find it abandoned by all who left lished the present doctrine, viz. "that the Church of Rome, without exception, the souls of the blessed, during their so that this doctrine is now peculiar to fectly contemplate the divine nature." The doctrine of a soul, however, and It may just deserve to be mentioned, of its existence in a separate conscious at the close of this period, that the doc- state, from the time of death to that of trine of the resurrection of the same the resurrection, which was the founbody, was questioned by Conon, bishop dation of the doctrine of purgatory, of Tarsus, in the sixth century; who, and of many other abuses of Popery, in opposition to Philoponus, a philoso- was still retained by most. But Mopher of Alexandria, (who had asserted sheim mentions some Anabaptists who that both the form and the matter of held that the soul sleeps till the resurthe body would be restored at the re- rection; 4 and the Helvetic confession surrection,) maintained that the form condemns all those who believed the would remain, but that the matter sleep of the soul,5 which shows that a considerable number must have maintained it. Luther himself was of this opinion; though whether he died in it has been doubted.6 It was, however, the firm belief of so many of the reformers of that age, that had it not been for the authority of Calvin, who wrote expressly against it, the doctrine of an intermediate conscious state would, in all probability, have been as effectually exploded as the doctrine of purgatory itself.

Several persons in this country have, in every period since the Reformation, appeared in favour of the sleep of the soul, and it always had a considerable number of followers. Of late this opinion has gained ground very much, especially since the writings of the present excellent bishop of Carlisle, and of archdeacon Blackburne on the subject. But I think the doctrine of an intermediate state can never be effectually extirpated, so long as the

&lt;sup>3</sup> Gilpin's Life of him, p. 70. (P.) See also Brit. Biog. I. p. 48.

4 Vol. IV. p. 163. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. iii.
Pt. ii. C. iii. Sect. xxiii.

5 Syntagma, p. 10. (P.)

6 See Blackburne's Hist. View, Appendix, Ed. 2,

belief of a separate soul is retained. For while that is supposed to exist independently of the body, it will not be easily imagined to sleep along with it, but will be thought to enjoy more or less of a consciousness of its existence.1

But when, agreeably to the dictates of reason, as well as the testimony of Scripture rightly understood, we shall acquiesce in the opinion that man is an homogeneous being, and that the powers of sensation and thought belong to the brain, as much as gravity and magnetism belong to other arrangements of matter, the whole fabric of superstition, which had been built upon the doctrine of a soul and of its separate conscious state, must fall at once. And this persuasion will give a value to the gospel, which it could not have before, as it will be found to supply the only satisfactory evidence of a future life. For though a future state of retribution might appear sufficiently consonant to some appearances in nature, yet when the means of it, or the only method by which it could be brought about, (viz. that of the resurrection of the very body that had putrefied in the grave, or had been reduced to ashes.) were so little visible. (since, to all appearance, men die exactly like plants and brute animals. and no analogy drawn from them can lead us to expect a revival,) we must eagerly embrace that gospel, in which alone this important truth is clearly brought to light. It is in the gospel alone that we have an express assurance of a future life, by a person fully authorized to give it, exemplified also in his own person; he having been actually put to death, and raised to life again, for the purpose of giving us that assurance.

1 See The State of the Dead, in [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. III. pp. 374-379.

To give this value to revelation, by proving the proper and complete mortality of man, on the principles of reason and scripture, is the object of my Disquisitions relating to Matter and Spirit, to which, and also to what I have added in support of it, in my discussion of the subject with Dr. Price, I beg leave to refer my readers.

<sup>2</sup> See ibid., Vol. IV. pp. 18-121; also Vol. II. pp. 354-364; and Vol. III. pp. 181, 182, 242-258.

PART VI.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO THE LORD'S SUPPER.

THE INTRODUCTION.

THERE is nothing in the whole history that I have undertaken to write, so extraordinary as the abuses that have been introduced into the rite of the Lord's Supper. Nothing can be imagined more simple in its original institution, or less liable to misapprehension or abuse; and yet, in no instance whatever, has the depravation of the original doctrine and custom proceeded to a greater height, or had more serious consequences.

■ Vol. II. Ed. 1782.

In allusion, perhaps, to the festival of the passover, our Lord appointed his disciples to eat bread and drink wine in remembrance of him; informing them that the bread represented his body, which was going to be broken, and the wine his blood, which was about to be shed for them; and we are informed by the apostle Paul, that this rite is to continue in the Christian THE HISTORY OF THE EUCHARIST TILL church till our Lord's second coming. Farther than this we are not informed in the New Testament. We only find that the custom was certainly kept up, and that the Christians of the primitive times probably concluded the public worship of every Lord's day with the celebration of it. As the rite was peculiar to Christians, the celebration of it was, of course, in common with joining habitually in the public worship of Christians, an open declaration of a man's being a Christian, and more so, indeed, than any other visible circumstance; because other persons might occasionally attend the public worship of Christians, without bearing any proper part in it themselves.

Let us now see what additions have been made to this simple institution, in several periods, from the primitive times to our own. And for this purpose it will be most convenient to divide the whole history into four parts; the first from the age of the apostles to that of Austin, including his time, and that of the great men who were his contemporaries; the second extending from that period to the time of Paschasius; the third, from him to the Reformation; and the fourth, from that time to the present.

In writing the history of this subject, in each of the periods, I shall first note the changes of opinion with respect to the Lord's supper itself, together with the change of language which took place in consequence of it. I shall then give an account of the superstitious practices that were grounded on those opinions; and lastly, I shall relate what particulars I have met with relating to the manner of celebration.

SECTION I.

AFTER THE TIME OF AUSTIN.

THE first new idea which was superadded to the original notion of the Lord's supper, was that of its being a sacrament, or an oath to be true to a leader. For the word sacrament is not to be found in the Scriptures, but was afterwards borrowed from the Latin tongue, in which it signified the oath which a Roman soldier took to his Thus, in the first century, general. Pliny reports, that the Christians were wont to meet together before it was light, and to bind themselves by a sacrament.1 This, I would observe, is but a small deviation from the original idea of the Lord's supper; and though it be not the same with the true idea of it, as before explained, yet it cannot be said to be contrary to it. Afterwards the word sacrament came to be used by Christian writers in a very loose manner, for everything that was looked upon to be solemn or mysterious, and, indeed, as Bishop Hoadly observes, for almost everything relating to religion.2

The next idea which was added to the primitive notion of the Lord's supper was of a much more alarming nature, and had a long train of the This was the worst consequences. considering of this institution as a mystery. And, indeed, the Christians affected very early to call this rite one of the mysteries of our holy re-By the term mystery was meant, originally, the more secret parts of the heathen worship, to which select persons only were admitted, and those under an oath of secrecy. Those mysteries were also called initiations: those who were initiated were supposed to be pure and holy, while those who were not initiated were considered as impure and profane; and by these might easily answer this purpose.

<sup>1 &</sup>quot;Essent soliti ante lucem convenire; seque macramento abstringere." L. x. Ep. xevii.
2 "Cyprian speaks of the many and great sacraments of the Lord's Prayer." Plain Account, App. Ed. 6, p. 178.

ordinance from being present at the upon the cross. celebration of it. Those who did not Samothrace; but as he is there debeing present, and they would hardly a sanctification of the elements, that do it themselves. Indeed, it is most there was a divine virtue in them. probable that this custom of concealgans; whereas "that which is holy," terrible to angels.4

mysteries the Heathens were more Another new idea annexed to the attached to their religion than by any eucharist was that of its being a sacri-other circumstance whatever. This fice; and this too was in compliance made the first Christians (many of with the prejudices of the Jews and whom were first converted from Hea-Heathens, who, in the early ages, used thenism, and who could not all at to reproach the Christians with havonce divest themselves of their fond- ing no sacrifices or oblations in their ness for pomp and mystery) wish to religion. We soon find, however, that have something of this nature, which this language was adopted by them, was so striking and captivating, in the and applied to the Lord's supper. Christian religion; and the rite of the This language is particularly used by Lord's supper soon struck them as what Cyprian, and in general the Lord's supper was called an eucharistical When this new idea was introduced, sacrifice, though, in fact, they only they, in consequence of it, began to considered it as a memorial of the exclude all who did not partake of the sacrifice of Christ, or of his death

It is evident, from the nature of the communicate were not even allowed thing, that neither baptism nor the to know the method and manner in Lord's supper operates as a charm, or which it was administered. Tertullian, produces any immediate effect upon who wrote at the end of the second the mind, besides impressing it with century, seems to allude to this prac- proper sentiments and affections, such tice. "Pious initiations," he says, as become Christians, and such as are "drive away the profane," and "it naturally excited by the use of these is of the very nature of mysteries to symbols. But we find, in very early be concealed," as those of Ceres in ages, that both baptism and the Lord's supper were imagined to operate in a fending the Christians from the charge different and more direct method, so of practising abominable rites in secret, that the use of them was supposed to he may only mean that, on the sup- depend upon the mere act of adminposition of such practices, no person istration. Both Justin Martyr and could reveal them, their enemies not Irenæus thought that there was such

This idea of there being a real virtue ing the mysteries did not take place in the elements of bread and wine, after till the middle of the third century.2 they were consecrated, or set apart After this time, the Council of Alex- for this particular purpose, opened a andria reproached the Arians with door to endless superstitions, and some displaying the holy mysteries before of a very dangerous kind; as Christhe Catechumens, and even the Pa- tians were led by it to put these merely external rites in the place of moral they say, "should not be cast to the virtue, which alone has the power of dogs, nor pearls before swine."3 In sanctifying the heart, and making men the fourth century it was usual to acceptable in the sight of God. After call the eucharist a most tremendous this we are not surprised to find (and mystery, a dreadful solemnity, and it appears as early as the second century) that both baptism and the Lord's supper were thought to be necessary to salvation.

Larrocke, p. 125. (P.)

3 Sueur, A. D. 333. (P.)

4 See Middleton, Introd. Dis. Works, I. p. xli. of the transmutation of the bread and

<sup>1</sup> Apol. C. vii. Opera, p. 8. (P.)

Christ; but we find even in this early but by faith.4 age language so highly figurative (calling the symbols by the name of the sanctity of the consecrated elements things represented by them) as very so far, as not to allow that they ever much centributed to produce this opinion in after ages. It was the custom with the early fathers to say that the bread and wine passed into the body and blood of Christ, and even that they are transelemented into them. They also use other expressions to the same purpose; meaning, however, by them, nothing more than that a divine virtue was communicated to them.1

Martyr, "this bread and wine as common bread and wine. For, as Jesus Christ was made flesh, and had flesh and blood to procure our salvation, so we learn that this aliment, over which prayers have been made, is changed, and that by which our flesh and blood are nourished is the body and blood of Jesus Christ. For the evangelists teach us that Jesus Christ took bread, and said this is my body: he also took the wine, and said this is my blood." 2 Tertullian, however, says, that by the words this is my body, we are to understand the figure of my body.3

The language of Cyril of Jerusalem, on this subject, is peculiarly strong, and might very well mislead his hearers, whatever ideas he himself might annex to it. He says to the young communicants, "Since Christ has said, this is my body, who can deny it? Since he has said, this is my blood, who can say it is not so? He formerly changed water into wine, and is he not worthy to be believed, when he says that he has changed the wine into his blood? Wherefore let us, with full assurance of faith, take the body and blood of Christ. For under the form of bread, the body is given to blood." He then tells his pupils they wine into the real body and blood of must not judge of this by their senses,

This writer carried his idea of the went into the excrements of the body: maintaining that they entered wholly into the substance of the communicants; and Chrysostom supported this opinion by the comparison of wax, which is consumed in the fire, without leaving ashes or soot.6 This was going very far indeed for so early an age.

About two hundred years after Christ, Christians applied their thoughts very "We do not consider," says Justin much to the giving of mystical significations to the sacraments, as they were also fond of mystical interpretations of scripture. Among other allusions, a happy one enough was this, that the sacramental bread, being composed of many grains of wheat, and the wine being made of many grapes, represented the body of the Christian church, which was composed of many believers, united into one society. Cyprian was the first who advanced that by the wine was meant the blood of Christ, and by the water (which they always at that time used to mix with the wine) the Christian people; and that by the mixture of them the union between Christ and his people was represented. This idea continued a long time in the church. But some supposed that this water and wine were a memorial of the water and blood which issued from the side of Christ, when he was pierced with the spear, as he hung on the cross.6

It was a natural consequence of this superstitious respect for the eucharistical elements, that many persons began to be afraid of communicating. Accordingly we find that, whereas originally, all Christians who were baptized, and not under sentence of exthem, and under the form of wine, his communication, received the Lord's supper, yet in the time of Chrysostom, so many abstained from this part

Larroche, p. 221. (P.)

2 Edit. Thirlby, p. 96. (P.)

Opera, p. 408. (P.)

<sup>Cat. 4ta. Op. p. 292. (P.)
Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 135. (P.)
Larroche, p. 5. (P.)</sup>

reprove them for it with great severity; and various methods were taken to engage them to attend it.

When the bread was called the body of Christ, the cloth which covered it was usually called the cloth of the body, and was considered as entitled to some particular respect. And we find that Optatus reproached the Donatists, that they had taken away these body-cloths, they had been dirty. Also, Victor of Vita complained that Proculus (the executioner of the cruelties of Genseric, king of the Vandals, against the Catholics) had made shirts and drawers of them. This body-cloth was to be of very fine linen, and not of silk, or of purple, nor of any coloured stuff, agreeable to an order made by Pope Silvester, or, as some say, Pope Eusebius. the "mystic table;" and Theophilus, genuine) writes, says, that the "very and void of sense, to have no sanctity, but to be worshipped with the same majesty as the body and blood of our

In the fourth century, the Lord's supper was celebrated sometimes at the tombs of the martyrs, and at funerals, which custom gave rise to the masses which were afterwards performed in honour of the saints, and for the dead. Also, in many places, about the same time, the bread and of the service, that he was obliged to wine were held up to the view of the people, before they were distributed, that they might be seen and contemplated with religious respect; from which the adoration of the symbols was afterwards derived.

Towards the end of the fourth century, it was thought wrong to commit the blood of Christ to so frail a thing as glass. Jerome reproaches a bishop of Toulouse with this, he being a rich and that they had washed them as if man, and able to afford a better vessel. and more proper for the purpose.2

As the primitive Christians considered their joint-partaking of the Lord's supper as a bond of union among themselves, it was natural to send part of the elements to those persons whose infirm state of health, or necessary avocations, would not allow them to be present. For the same reason consecrated bread was also sent In this age the table on which the to the neighbouring, and often to diseucharist was celebrated was called tant parishes, as a token of brotherly the "mystic table;" and Theophilus, communion. This they did, particuto whom Jerome (if the epistle be larly at the feast of Easter; and, provided no superstitious use had been utensils and sacred coverings were not made of it, there seems to have been to be considered, like things inanimate, little to complain of in the custom. However, the Council of Laodicea thought proper to forbid this sending out of the elements, as a custom borrowed from the Jews and the heretics. But Pope Innocent, who lived a century after, still continued to send the consecrated bread to the neighbouring parishes.3

But the greatest abuse that was made of this custom was in consequence of the consecrated elements being thought to be of use to the sick, in a medicinal way, and to be a means of preserving persons in journeys, and upon voyages; and as persons might not always have carried home with them enough for these uses, it was the custom for the priests to keep a quantity of the consecrated bread to distribute occasionally, as it might be wanted. Austin says, "If any one fall sick, let him receive the body and blood of Christ, and let him keep a part of clearly the case in the time of Cyaccomplishment of what St. James says, Let those who are sick go to the church to receive strength of body."1 This same father also mentions a woman who had made a plaister of the sacramental bread for a sore eve.2

<sup>1</sup> Middleton's Introd. Dis. p. 57. (P.) Dr. Priestley, in his edition of the Corruptions, had attributed this representation to Jerome, on the authority of the Latin original, given in a note by Dr. Middleton. But in his corrections, mentioned p. 12 [Rutt's Priestley, Vol. V.], he proposed the alteration of his text (which I have made) on the authority of "the writer of the Critical Review," who says that Dr. Middleton quoted the edition of Jerome's Works in 1706, while, in the Basil edition of 1553, which he describes as most authentic, the opinion is attributed by Jerome to Theophilus. The reviewer adds, that the whole passege is probably spurious. See Middleton's Works, I. p. xlii. Note, and Grit. Rev. IV. p. 193. p. xlii. Note, and Crit. Rev. IV. p. 193.

■ Larroche, p. 53. (P.) 8 Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 111. (P.)

Some of the ancient Christians used with the dead, thinking, no doubt, that it would be of as much use to so that custom which took its rise from one degree of superstition, was abolished by a greater degree of it; and of this we shall have other instances in the course of this history.

the doctrine of the eucharist, and the superstitious practices which in these early times were derived from the erroneous opinions of Christians on the subject, I shall now relate what I have been able to collect concerning the manner in which it was adminis-

In the first place, it cannot be denied that, in the primitive times, all those who were classed among the faithful, received the eucharist every Lord's day. After reading the Scriptures, and the exposition of them, or the sermon, at which others might attend, they proceeded to the public prayer, in which the audience bore their part, at least by saying occasionally Amen, and the service constantly closed with the celebration of the eucharist. We even find that young children, and indeed This was infants, communicated.

2 Larroche, p 6. (P.)

this little body, that he may find the prian.3 The custom continued in the Western church till near the time of the Reformation, and it is still the practice of the Eastern churches, and of every other part of the Christian world that war lever subject to the see of Rome.4

The different classes of Christians in to bury the sacramental bread together the primitive times, as they respected the Lord's supper, were as follows. There were four orders of the Catethem in that long journey as it had chumens. The first were instructed at been in other shorter ones. However, their own houses; the second heard the in a council held at Carthage in 419, exposition in the church; the third this practice was condemned; but it attended the public prayer; and the appears that the custom was not fourth were those who were completely wholly laid aside at the end of the ready for baptism; for till that time eighth century, though it had been they did not attend the celebration of prohibited again by the sixth general the eucharist, but were formally discouncil in 691. The reason was, that missed at what is called missa cateto bury these sacred elements was now chumenorum, as the final dismission thought to be a profanation of them; of the assembly was called missa fidelium.5

The primitive Christians communicated after supper, but the custom of celebrating it in the morning was frequent in the church in the time of Having thus noted the changes in Tertullian, in consequence, no doubt, of a superstitious reverence for the elements, which led them to think that it was wrong to eat anything before they partook of them; but it was still usual to communicate in the evening. on Holy Thursday. Chrysostom being charged with giving the eucharist to some perso as after a repast, said, "If I have done it, let my name be blotted from the catalogue of bishops, and let the tenderestage, before they were able to speak." Works, I. p. xli.

<sup>1</sup> Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 161. (P.)

<sup>3</sup> On whose authority (de lapsis, p. 175) Middleton says, "this sacrament was administered, in all their public communions, to infants, even of the tenderestage, before they were able to speak."

4 See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II, pp. 337, 338, and the Notes. I find on a farther examination of Smith's Account, that the catechuneni were only debarred from witnessing "the second or great procession," previous to the consecration. He says that "they give the eucharist, in both kinds, to little children of one or two years of age, sometimes to new-born infants, after they have been christened in case of impaired the second. have been christened, in case of imminent danger of death; grounding their belief of an absolute necessity of this sacrament upon John vi. 53. Smith's Greek Church in 1669, p. 161.

<sup>5</sup> Sueur, A. D. 216. (P.)

me not be reckoned among the ortho-

It having been customary with the Jews, whenever they made a solemn appearance before God, to bring some oblations, these Christians, whenever they assembled for public worship, (which they also considered as an appearing before God, and especially in the more solemn part of the service. the administration of the eucharist.) brought with them a quantity of bread and wine,2 and especially the firstfruits of their corn and grapes. Of these offerings, or oblations, as they then affected to call them, a part was took place; and in the early ages it reserved for the eucharist, and part also was eaten afterwards in common. in what they called their agapæ, or tration, and not by any particular love-feasts, but the remainder was form of words; and this is the idea appropriated to the maintenance of the that the Greek Church still retains ministers and of the poor. Besides concerning consecration. But afterbread and wine, it was the custom to wards, though it is not easy to deteroffer many things of value at the same mine when, the change was supposed time. But at length they limited the to take place as the priest was oblations which were made on this pronouncing the words, This is my particular occasion to bread and wine body, in Latin, hoc est corpus meum; only; and afterwards they usually as if there had been some peculiar virmade for this purpose one great loaf, or cake, which they said represented pronounced by a person duly qualified the unity of the church, and which to use them. Thus also the Heathens was broken in public, and distributed to as many as communicated. In the fourth century some churches substituted what they called eulogies, or holy bread, for the bread of the Lord's supper.<sup>3</sup>

The ancients in general believed that the water was mixed with the wine, in our Saviour's own administration of the eucharist, and therefore they did the same, This mixture of therefore that it ought to be prepared water with the wine is mentioned by

Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 132. (P.) "The Greeks communicate fasting, looking upon it as a thing very unlawful and scandalous to taste a drop of wine, or cat the least bit of bread, for several hours before they receive." Smith's Account, p. 158. 2 To prepare for "the sacrament of the holy eucharist, the priests and deacons...carry the gifts of bread and wine, presented by the people, to the altar of the Prolhesis; by this oblation, separating them from profane and common use."

Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 112. (P.)

Tertullian, and Cyprian pretends that it was of singular use. We find that some Christians communicated with water only, from which they were called Aquarians.4 These were not only Manicheans, who abborred wine, but also others who were in the scheme of mortifying the flesh by abstaining from marriage, and the use of flesh meat, as well as of wine.

When the elements began to be considered in a superstitious light, as something more than mere bread and wine, there must have been a time when they imagined that this change was supposed to be made by the prayer which preceded the administue in the sound of those words, when imagined that the presence of the invisible Divinity was made to dwell in an image, by the priest pronouncing some form of words, which was termed consecrating them.

The eucharistical elements being now considered as something holy, it was natural to suppose that a degree of holiness belonged also to the table on which the service was performed, and by some ceremony, for this holy purpose. Gregory Nyssen, the same whose eloquence on the subject of the eucharist has been recited already, is said to have been the first who performed any ceremony of this kind. It was about the fourth century, as is generally agreed, that places of worship began bidden to celebrate the Lord's supper except in consecrated places. When churches were built with more magnificence, under Constantine, there was a particular place called the sanctuary. where the table or altar stood.

4 Also called Encratacs [Hydroparastates]. Sec Mosheim. Vol. I. p. 180. Cent. ii. P. ii. Ch. v.

in many ceremonies in the heathen religion, whence an idea of cheerfulness. and of sacredness also, was annexed to them: and the Christians of those ages were but too ready to adopt the religious customs of the Heathens, partly from their own attachment to them, and also with a view to make their religion more inviting to the Pagans. The custom of using wax-lights at the eucharist, in particular, probably began in the time of Austin, in the fifth century. For, in the time of Gregory I. they were used at baptism; and Isidore of Seville, who was contemporary with Gregory, speaks of it as a thing established. "Those," says he, "who in Greek are called Acolytes, are in Latin called link-bearers, because they carry lights when the gospel is read; or, when the sacrifice is offered, not to dissipate darkness, but to express joy, to declare, under the type of corporeal light, the light spoken of in the gospel." In blessing these torches and flam-beaux, they said, "O Jesus Christ, bless this wax, we beseech thee, that it may receive of thee such a power and benediction, that, in all places where it shall be lighted and set, the devil may tremble and fly for fear, and may no more attempt to molest or seduce those who serve thee."1 It must be observed that this custom of using lights at the celebration of the eucharist began in the East, a little after the time of Gregory Nazianzen.

The blessing of the bread and wine used by our Saviour himself was proprayer, such as we commonly use before meat. But when the administration of the eucharist came to be a to be consecrated, though in some very principal part of solemn religious worsimple manner, and it was then for- ship, it is probable that the prayer which preceded it, and from which the whole service got the name of eucharist, was of some length, especially as we do not find that prayer was used in any other part of the service. In the third century it is particularly observed, Lights in the day-time were usual that the prayers which preceded the celebration of the eucharist were considerably lengthened, as well as that the solemnity and pomp with which it was administered were increased; and that at this time persons in a state of penitence, and others, were excluded from it, in imitation of the heathen mysteries.

It was the custom within this period to ask forgiveness of one another, as well as to give the kiss of peace, or charity, before communion, the men kissing the men, and the women the women. They also used to kiss the hand of the priest. This custom of asking pardon before communicating, was used in France in the eleventh century.2

At first the deacons generally administered the elements, but in the fourth Council of Carthage, they were only suffered to administer in cases of necessity. Afterwards they administered the cup only, while the priest who celebrated gave the bread. Sometimes women served on this occasion, and though it was forbidden by Pope Gelasius, the practice continued in many places till the tenth century.3

Cyril, of Jerusalem, at the end of the fourth century, exhorted his communicants to receive the bread by supporting the right hand with the left, also to receive it in the hollow of the hand, and to take care that no crumb of it fell to the ground; and that in receiving the wine, they should approach it with the body a little bowed, in token of veneration. The sixth general council bably nothing more than a very short ordered that the hands should be held in the form of a cross. It was the custom in the time of Jerome, to kiss the bread; and in the liturgy of Chrysostom, used by the Greeks, it is directed that he who receives the elements should kiss the hand of the deacon from whom he receives them.1 It is needless to note the progress of superstition in all these observances.

<sup>1</sup> Larroche, p. 537. (P.)

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 120. (P.) 3 Ibid. p. 123. (P.)

When the service was ended, the congregation was dismissed by the priest, saving Ite, Missa est: which Polidore Virgil acknowledges was also the form of dismissing the idolatrous services of the Pagans.2 There was, likewise, as was observed before, a formal dismission of the catechumens, before they proceeded to the celebration of the eucharist, in the same words, and from this term missa, the whole service came afterwards to be called by that name. which by corruption is in the English language mass.

The primitive Christians did frequently eat in common, before the celebration of the Lord's supper. To this kind of entertainment, to which every person brought what he thought proper, they gave the name of agapé or lovefeast; and it is thought to be alluded to in the epistles of Peter and Jude. 2 Pet. ii. 13; Jude 12. This custom. however, of eating in common having been abused, it was forbidden by the Council of Laodicea in 360. But before this time, when it began to be thought improper to eat anything before the eucharist, this feast was omitted till after the celebration.3

Such was the progress of superstition in this age of the church, which abounded with men of learning, and We are not to expect a reformation of these abuses, in the next period of gross darkness, and while the same causes of corruption, and especially a fondness for pagan customs, and a willingness to gain over the Pagans by adopting them, continued and increased. We have now seen how the pagan notion of mysteries, together with that of a sanctifying power in the elements themselves, contributed to introduce a train of superstitious practices into the Christian church; but we must go much deeper into this superstition in the two following periods, with less pleasing prospects We have seen the than in the last. shades of the evening close upon us; we must now prepare to pass through the darkness of the night, but with the hope that, as we come nearer to our own times, the daylight will visit us again.

SECTION II.

THE HISTORY OF THE EUCHARIST FROM THE TIME OF AUSTIN TO THAT OF PASCHASIUS.

In this period we find a very considerable advance towards the doctrine of transubstantiation, which was afterwards established in the Western church; but the first great step towards it, as well as almost all the abuses of which an account is given in the last Section, was made in the East, where Anastasius, a monk of Mount Sinai, (in a treatise against some heretics who asserted that the body of Christ was impassible,) said, that the elements of the Lord's supper were the true body and blood of Christ; for that when Christ instituted the eucharist, he did not say, this is the type or antitype of my body, but my body. This is evidently a language unknown to all the ancients, when they spoke not rhetorically but gravely on the subject; and yet, on the whole, it is certain that he did not mean so much as was afterwards understood by that mode of speaking.4

But John Damascenus, another monk, and a celebrated writer in the East, not only followed Anastasius in his language, but made a real change in the ideas annexed to it; saying that,

Larroche, p. 119. (P.)
 Sueur, A. D. 398. (P.)
 Mosheim, I. p. 104. (P.) Cent. i. Pt. ii. Ch. Iv. Sect. vil.

Sueur, A. D. 637. (P.)

"when some have called the bread and and sacred in the eucharistical elements wine figures or signs of the body and blood of Christ, as Basil, they spake of them not after consecration, but before the oblation was consecrated." "Jesus," he says, "has joined to the bread and wine his own divinity, and made them to be his body and blood." He illustrates this in the following manner:-" Isaiah saw a lighted coal; now a lighted coal is not mere wood, but wood joined to fire; so the bread of the sacrament is not mere bread, but bread joined to the divinity; and the body united to the divinity is not divinity united to it, another." In the second Council of Nice, when it was urged on one side that Christ had no other image than the sacrament, it was argued by the council, that the sacrament after consecration was no image, but properly his body and blood.2 Damascenus, who wrote in the beginning of the eighth century; and his together in a spoon.3 name is as great an authority in the the eucharistical elements as another with them when they went on a jourbody of Christ, to which his soul, or ney; but in the Council of Saragossa, his divinity, bears the same relation that it did to the body which he had when on earth, and with which he ascended to heaven. They must suppose that there is, as it were, a multiplication of bodies to the same soul. No real change, however, is by them supposed to be made in the substance of quantity of bread was kept up; and in mere bread and wine, it becomes a new tions were given for keeping it, in order body and blood to Christ.

Whether this new opinion spread into the West, does not distinctly appear, and the two churches had not, at that time, much communication with each other. But from the same general causes the idea of something mystical kept advancing in the West, as well as in the East; and they were considered as bearing some peculiar relation to Christ; who was, therefore, thought to be, in some extraordinary manner, present with them, but in what manner, they had not perhaps any distinct idea.

> 1 Larroche, p. 367. (P.) Taylor, Grand Apostacy, p. 160. (P.)

When the eucharistical elements were considered as so peculiarly sacred, we are not surprised to find that many methods were used to prevent the loss or waste of them. Among other methods, they began, pretty early in this one and the same nature, but the nature period, to take the bread dipped in the of the body is one, and that of the consecrated wine. This was particularly noticed in the eleventh Council of Toledo, in 675, and in another at Braga in Gallicia, in which a decree was made to put a stop to this practice; but still it was allowed that the eucharist might be administered to sick persons and young children in this This has been the faith of the Greek manner. The Armenians still receive Church ever since the time of this the eucharist in this way, and the Moscovites take the bread and wine

I have observed that, in the former Eastern church, as that of Thomas period, it was usual for the communi-Aguinas was afterwards in the Western. cants to carry some of the consecrated În reality, the Greeks must consider bread home with them, and to take it within the present period, they who did not eat the bread at the time of communicating were anathematized. Thus a greater degree of superstition put an end to a practice which had been introduced by a less degree of it. However, the practice of consecrating a great the bread and wine; only from being the time of Charlemagne, express direc-

&lt;sup>3</sup> Larroche, p. 146. (P.) "The priest takes m spoon, fills it full of red wine, puts into it a small piece of bread, and tempereth them both to-gether, delivers the spoon to the communi-cants...After this, he delivereth them bread by itself, and then wine mixed with a little warm water, to represent the blood and water which flowed from our Saviour's side." The Russian Catechism - Ceremonies of the Muscovites, 1725, Ed. 2, to communicate the sick. This con- ordained that no person should celebrate was ordered that the host (as it was without communion.4 then called) should be kept not in a chest, but under the title of the cross, the torrent of this abuse. It being to excite the devotion of the people.2

the condemnation and deposition of at the condemnation of Photius by the fathers of the Council of Constantinople, in 869; and Charles the Bald, and Bernard, count of Barcelona, also signed a treaty with the sacramental wine, in 844. It is evident, however, from this very abuse of the euchathat time supposed to be the real body and blood of Christ; for, since they have been thought to be so, it would be deemed a great profanation to make any such use of them.

It is not denied that, originally, the celebration of the Lord's supper was a part of the public worship in which all the congregation of the faithful joined; but in the Church of Rome at present the priest alone communicates in general, while the congregation are mere spectators of what he is doing, and only join in the prayers. This was occasioned by the superstitious veneration for the elements, from which was naturally derived an idea of some particular preparation being necessary for the receiving of them. The first notice that we find of this kind of mass was about the year 700; but we have seen that, even in the time of Chrysostom, the people in general began to decline communion; but in the time of Charlemagne, the priests were forbidden to celebrate mass alone; and Pope Soter secrated bread, it had been the custom mass, unless the priest made a third.3 to keep in a close chest in the church; Among other accusations of John XII., but at the Council of Tours, in 567, it he was charged with celebrating mass

No laws, however, could long check imagined that the celebration of the Among other superstitious customs mass was offering the most acceptable within this period, we find that some- sacrifice to God, which would avail for times the consecrated wine was mixed the pardon of sin, and for redeeming with ink, in order to sign writings of a souls out of purgatory, large sums of peculiarly solemn nature. Thus Pope money were given and bequeathed to Theodore, in the seventh century, signed the priests for this purpose, which proved a source of immense wealth to Pyrrhus, the Monothelite; it was used them. But this abuse was much increased when monks were allowed, by Pope Gregory, to do the office of priests. This order of men had much leisure for the purpose, and an idea of peculiar sanctity was annexed to their character in the minds of the common people.

To the monks may be attributed the ristical elements, that they were not at origin of private chapels, and the multiplication of altars in churches for celebrating several masses at the same time. For, according to ancient custom, it was not lawful to say more than one mass, at which all assisted; and it was a thing unheard of that any person should celebrate mass on the same day, upon the same altar, a custom which is still observed in the Eastern churches. For the Greeks have but one altar in one church, nor do we find the mention of any more in the Western church till the eighth century. But in the time of Adrian I., who lived towards the end of the eighth century. there is mention made of the great altar, to distinguish it from others in the same church. Whenever the phrase occurs in any period prior to this, by altars we are to understand the tombs of the martyrs, which are often so called.5 The first mention that we have of the eucharist being celebrated more than once in the course of the same day in any church, is in the fifth century, when Leo I. ordered it on great

<sup>1</sup> Larroche, p. 167. (P.) Smith found this custom in the Greek Church at Constantinople, in 1669. See his Account, p. 162.

Sucur, A. D. 567. (P.)

■ Larroche, p. 126. (P.)
■ Sueur, A. D. 963. (P.)
■ Larroche, p. 47. (P.)

great that the churches could not contain those that resorted to them.

To induce the common people to continue their offerings after they ceased to communicate, they were given to understand, that provided they kept up that custom, the service would still be useful to them; and instead of a real communion with bread and wine duly consecrated, the priests gave them a kind of substitute for it, and a thing of a much less awful nature, viz. bread, over which they prayed, and to which they gave the name of hallowed bread. This was about the year 700.1

It was in consequence of few persons offering themselves to communion, that the priests got a habit of speaking in a very low voice, a custom which was afterwards continued through superstition. This is said to have begun about the end of the tenth century; and some say that it proceeded from a report that God had punished with sudden death some shepherds who sang the words of consecration in the

Having noted these general abuses respecting the eucharist, I shall now consider the method in which it was administered, going over the different parts of the service for that purpose; and we shall find traces enow of superstition, every step that we take.

As there is nothing prescribed in the New Testament concerning the order of public worship, or the mode of celebrating the Lord's supper, different churches fell naturally into different methods with respect to them, as we see in what remains of several of the ancient liturgies. That of most churches had probably been gradually altered, especially as men's ideas with respect to the nature of the service itself had changed. The present canon of the mass, as it is now used in the Church of Rome, was, for the most is now requisite that there should be part, composed by Gregory the Great, festival days, when the crowds were so who made more alterations in it than any of his predecessors. He introduced into it many pompous ceremonies, but it was several centuries before this canon was adopted by all the members of the Latin church. In 699, Pope Sergius added to the canon of the mass, that while the priest is breaking the bread, he should sing three times, Lamb of God who taketh away the sin of the world, have mercy upon us; but that the third time, instead of the words have mercy upon us, he should say, grant us peace.3

2 Larroche, p. 79. (P.)

Since the celebration of the eucharist was now considered as a proper sacrifice, the table on which it was offered came of course to be an altar; and as altars in the Jewish church, and among the Pagans, were consecrated, the Christian altars must be so too. The first mention that is made of the consecration of altars, (more than was observed to have been done by Gregory Nyssenus,) is in the Council of Agde. in 506, when they were ordered to be consecrated both by chrism and by the benediction of the priest. In the ninth century they added water to the chrism, and incense, and other things. They also consecrated three table-cloths of several fashions, and a kind of veil of several colours, according to the different days, &c.4

In order to be better entitled to the name of altars, and to correspond to the altars in the Jewish and Pagan religions, all the wooden tables were removed, and all altars were ordered to be made of stone. And it was farther alleged in favour of this custom, that Jesus Christ is called the corner-stone and foundation of the church. This institution is ascribed to Silvester; but the decree is not found. It was a council of Epaone, in 517, that forbade the consecration of altars, unless they were made of stone.5

To the due consecration of altars it

<sup>1</sup> Hist. of Ancient Ceremonies, p. 88. (P.)

* Sueur, A. D. 699. (P.)

* Larroche, p. 49. (P.)

* Basnage, I. pp. 46, 47. (P.)

altars should not be consecrated in any place where a body had been interred.1 The last thing which I shall observe in respect to altars is, that Bede is the first who makes any mention of portable ones.

It was the custom in all this period not only to make use of lights, though in the day-time, during the celebration of the eucharist, but of incense also; and both these appendages were borrowed from the heathen sacrifices. and were first adopted by the Greeks. and so early as the middle of the fifth century; mention being then made of assembling the church by flambeaux and perfumes. But it is not said that this was for the celebration of the eucharist in particular.2

Originally, the bread that was used for the celebration of the Lord's supper was such as was presented among other offerings on the occasion. Afterwards it was the custom to make one great loaf or cake, to supply all the communicants; and this was broken at the time of the celebration, and distributed in small pieces to the communicants. But this custom being attended with some loss, some priests in Spain began, about the seventh century, to prepare the eucharistical bread in a different manner, baking small round pieces on purpose, that there might not be occasion to break it at all. But this innovation was not generally approved, and it was expressly forbidden by the Council of Toledo, in 693.3 In time, however, the increasing superstition of the age got the better of this regulation, and the custom of making small round wafers for the purpose of communion, at length became universal in the church.

It was the custom in the primitive church, as I have already observed, to give what is called the kiss of peace,

1 Basnage, I. p. 48. (P.)
2 Larroche, p. 526 (P.)
3 Ibid. p. 36. (P.)

relics in them; but this was far from or of charity, immediately before combeing the case originally. For a council munion. This, in time, was thought in the seventh century ordered, that to be an indecent practice, and therefore ought to have been laid aside altogether. However, Leo III., at the end of the ninth century, changed this custom for that of kissing a plate of silver or copper, with the figure of a cross upon it, or the relic of some saint after the consecration of the elements.4

> In the fifth century it was the custom for men to receive the bread with their naked hands, and the women (who perhaps did not expose their hands naked) in a clean cloth, which obtained the name of dominica. Afterwards, in the farther progress of superstition, it came to be the custom to receive it in vessels of gold, &c.: but this was forbidden in the sixth general council in 680, and they were again ordered to receive it with the hand.5 It has been already observed. that glass was thought to be too brittle a thing to receive the holy elements. Glass vessels, however, continued to be made use of, so that it was thought necessary to forbid the use of them in a council held at Rheims under Charlemagne; and in another council, held in the year 895, wooden vessels were forbidden to be used for that purpose; and at present the Latin church does not suffer the consecration to be made in anything but in a chalice of gold or silver, or at least of pewter; and a council held at Albi, in 1254, commands all churches. the yearly rent of which amounts to fifteen French livres, to have a silver chalice.6

> In the primitive times we find no mention of any particular position of the body, as more proper than any other for receiving the Lord's supper; but as superstition kept gaining ground, the East began to be held peculiarly sacred, as it always had been held by the Heathens, who worshipped with their faces turned that way; and about the year 536, Pope Vigilius ordered that those who celebrated mass should the eucharistical elements in this age

Larroche, p. 555. (P.)
 Ibid. p. 53. (P.)

Ancient Ceremonies, p. 90. (P.)

well in the method of disposing of what remained of the consecrated ele-This was mained after communion. the custom at Jerusalem, and it is so with the Greeks at present; at least, says Fleury,2 they are reproached with school for that purpose, as is related by Evagrius, who wrote at the end of the sixth century. The Council of Toledo, in 693, left it to the liberty of each particular church, either to keep what remained of the consecrated latter case, it was ordained that the quantity consecrated should be moderate, that it might not oppress the stomachs of those who were appointed to take it. But, in whatever manner they disposed of these sacred elements. it was the custom not to leave any of them till the next day.3

One would imagine that we had seen superstition enough in this one article of Christian faith and practice within this period; but we shall find much greater abuses in the next: and notwithstanding the greater light of the present age, they continue unreformed in the Church of Rome to this day.

SECTION III.

THE HISTORY OF THE EUCHARIST, FROM THE TIME OF PASCHASIUS TO THE REFORMATION.

WE are now arrived at the most distinguished æra in the history of the eucharist; after having seen how much always direct their faces towards the of darkness had gained in point of sacredness and solemnity, and how We see the effects of superstition as awful a thing the act of communicating was generally apprehended to be; so that commonly the priest alone comments, as in the use of them. Some municated, and the people very seldom, churches used to burn all that re- except at the time of the greater festivals, and especially at Easter.

This was in consequence of the people in general being impressed with a confused notion that the eucharistical it. At Constantinople it was formerly elements were, in some sense or other, eaten by young scholars, sent from the the body and blood of Christ, and therefore that Christ himself was present in them. But in what manner he was present they seem to have had no clear idea. This general notion, however, paved the way for the capital addition that was made to the doctrine of the elements, or to eat it; but, in the eucharist by Paschasius Radbert, a monk of Corbie, in France, who undertook to explain the manner in which the body of Christ is present in the eucharist.

This he did in a treatise published in the year 818, in which he maintained that not only the bread and wine were changed, by consecration, into the real body and blood of Christ; but that it was the same body that had been born of the Virgin Mary, and that had been crucified and raised from the dead. It was in support of this opinion that he wrote the two books On the Delivery of the Virgin Mary, which I had occasion to mention before; in which he maintained, that it was performed in a miraculous manner, without any opening of the womb.5

This opinion Paschasiushimself seems to have been sensible was bold and novel. For the first time that he mentions it, after calling the eucharistical elements the body of Christ in general, he adds, "and to say something more surprising and wonderful, (ut mirabilius loquar,) it is no other flesh than that which was born of the Virgin

I Ancient Ceremonies, p. 76. (P.)
 II A. D. 1054. (P.)
 II Larroche, p. 171. (P.)

<sup>4 &</sup>quot;Of the Body and Blood of Jesus Christ in the Eucharist." Radbert became abbot of Corbie, where he died in 865. Nouv. Dict. Hist. IV. pp. 879, 880.

Sueur, A. D. 818. (P. See p. 43, supra.

Mary, which suffered upon the cross, and which was raised from the grave."1

Not depending entirely upon the reasons which he was able to allege in favour of so extraordinary an opinion, he likewise produced in support of it, what was no uncommon thing with the monks, and what had no small weight with the common people, in that ignorant age, namely, an apparation, which for its singular curiosity, and as a specimen of the impositions of those times, I shall relate.

A priest, whose name was Plecgills, officiating at the tomb of St. Ninus. wished, out of love, and not infidelity. to see the body of Jesus Christ; and falling upon his knees, he asked of God the favour to see the nature of the body of Jesus Christ, in this mystery, and to hold in his hand the form of that little child which the Virgin had borne in her lap; when an angel cried to him, "Get up, quickly, and look at the infant, which that holy woman hath carried, for he is clothed in his corporeal habit." The priest declared, that being quite terrified he looked up, and saw upon the altar the child that Simeon had held in his arms, that the angel told him he might not only see but touch the child, and that accordingly he took him and pressed the breast of the child to his own, and after embracing him frequently, he kissed the God, joining his lips to the lips of Jesus Christ. After this he replaced the beautiful limbs of the god upon the altar, praying to God that he might resume his former figure, and that he had scarcely finished his prayer, when rising from the ground, he found that the body of Jesus Christ was restored to its former figure, as he had requested.2

Notwithstanding this miracle, and everything else that Paschasius could allege in favour of his doctrine, it excited great astonishment, and was opposed by many persons of learning and eminence. Among others, the emperor Charles the Bald was much offended at it, and by his particular order the famous Bertram, or Rattram, wrote against the new opinion of Paschasius, and at the same time against his peculiar notion concerning the delivery of the Virgin.

Sueur, A. D. 818. (P.)
 Ibid. A. D. 818. (P.)

In consequence of this, the doctrine of Paschasius, though published in the ninth century, does not appear to have gained many advocates till the eleventh, when it was opposed by Berenger, archdeacon of the church of Angers, in France, (whom I mentioned before as one of the most eminent scholars of his age,) and his writings on this subject made a great impression on the minds of many; so that no less than ten or twelve councils were held on this subject, in all of which the doctrine of Berenger was condemned. Matthew of Westminster says, that it had infected almost all France, Italy, and England; and though, when he was threatened, he was weak enough to sign a recantation of his opinion, he certainly died in the belief of it. Berenger was followed by Peter and Henry de Bruis, whose disciples were called Petrobrussians, and by the Albigenses in general; who in the twelfth century separated from the church of Rome. Arnold of Brescia also taught the same doctrine in Italy, and for this and his declaiming against the Church of Rome in general, he was burned at Rome, in 1155.4

It is remarkable that for two centuries the popes did not interfere in the controversy about Paschasius. Most probably they thought with his adversaries; and as very few joined him at <sup>8</sup> See p. 40. Note <sup>10</sup>, supra. Bertram's book was first translated into English in 1548, by Wm. Hugh, under this title, "A Boke of Bertram the Priest intreating of the Body and Blood of Christ, written to Charles the Great [Bald] 700 years ago." It was translated again by Sir H. Lynde, in 1636. Of this there was a 2nd Edition in 1688. See Wood, Athen. Own. I. pp. 62, 518.

See Wood, Athen. Ozon. I. pp. 62, 513.

4 Larroche, p. 473. (P.) Arnold, a disciple of Abelard, was crucified, burnt, and his ashes thrown into the Tiber, lest his followers should convert them into relies, says a French biographer. See Nouv. Dict. Hist, I. p. 212. Arnold suffered under Adrian IV., the only Pope who was an Englishman first, and he was openly opposed by the of that age, is likewise said to have learned men of the age, it seemed as if been a great promoter of it. But there his opinion would have died away of does not appear to have been any pubitself. As soon, however, as it was perceived that the doctrine went down with the common people, and that it promised to give a high idea of the dignity and power of the priesthood, the popes were ready enough to enforce it by their cumstance of all the known properties decrees, as we have seen in the case of of bread and wine remaining in the eu-Berenger. It was not, however, till the beginning of the thirteenth century that this doctrine was made an article of faith, viz. by a decree of Innocent flesh and blood. On this account, Inno-III, at the Council of Lateran, in 1215, the term transubstantiation having been first used by Stephen, bishop of Autun, in the beginning of the twelfth century.

Even notwithstanding this decree, several divines openly maintained a different opinion, thinking it sufficient to acknowledge the real presence, though they explained the manner of it differently from Innocent and the followers of Paschasius; and "John, surnamed Pungens Asinus, a subtile doctor of the university of Paris, . . . substituted consubstantiation in the place of transubstantiation towards the conclusion of this century." 1 Others say that he maintained the assumption of the consecrated bread by the divinity. However, he did not deny that the substance of the bread and wine remained in the elements; and yet the faculty at Paris did not condemn his opinion, but declared that both this, and the common doctrine of transubstantiation, were probable ways of making the body of Christ exist in the sacrament.

As the monks had contributed greatly to the establishment of almost every other corruption of Christianity, they were no less active in promoting this. Among others, the name of Odo, bishop of Clugni, in France, in the tenth century, is mentioned as having been of eminent use on this occasion. Indeed. another Odo, archbishop of Canterbury, lic act in favour of the doctrine of transubstantiation in England, before the Council of Oxford which condemned Wickliffe.2

We cannot be surprised, that the circharistical elements after consecration, should not a little embarrass the advocates for the change of them into real cent III. acknowledged that, after consecration, there did remain in the elements a certain paneity and vineity, as he called them, which satisfied hunger and thirst. But afterwards, they who maintained that the consecrated host retained the nature of bread, and nourished the body, and especially that any part of it was turned into excrement, were, in derision, called Stercorarists. This term of reproach shows in what abhorrence all those who did not assent to this new doctrine were then held. If ridicule and contempt were a proper test of truth, I doubt not but that those who defended the absurd doctrine of transubstantiation would have had the advantage of the argument. Protestants would now only laugh at being called Stercorarists, but at that time the laugh would probably not have been with us, but against us. That was not an age of experiment, or it might have been easily decided, viz. by giving a man nothing but consecrated bread, whether it turned to nourishment and excrement or not; but the very proposal would have been deemed impious, and might have been very hazardous to the proposer.

Considering the great difficulty of forming any conception concerning this conversion of the bread and wine into real flesh and blood, it is no wonder that many doubts should have been started, and different opinions should have been held concerning it; and, that they should even continue to be held, notwithstanding the most authorita- this question, but in their decrees made bard, contemporary with Stephen of Autun above mentioned, approved of this doctrine of transubstantiation, but could not determine of what kind the change was; whether it was only formal, or substantial, that is, whether it affected the sensible properties of the elements, or the real substance of

Mosheim, III. p. 106. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. iii, Sect. xiv.

<sup>2</sup> In 1385. See Brit. Biog. I. pp. 38-41.

It was also a question whether the water (which it was always the custom to mix with the wine before consecration) was changed immediately into the blood of Christ, or whether it was changed into wine first. Paschasius himself had asserted the former, but after long debates it was determined by Innocent III., and the schoolmen supported him in it, that the water is changed into wine before it is changed into the blood of Christ.2

In this, and several other respects. a considerable latitude of opinion was formerly allowed in the Church of Rome; and indeed the doctrine of transubstantiation did not properly become an article of faith before it was made to be so by the Council of Trent. The cardinal D'Ailli, at the Council of Constance, spoke of the doctrine of transubstantiation as an opinion only, and said that it could not be clearly inferred from the Scriptures, that the substance of bread did not remain in the sacrament.3

At the Council of Trent, the Franciscans maintained that the body of Christ descended from heaven, in order to be changed into the form of bread and wine, though it did not quit its former place; whereas, the Dominicans from any other place, but that he was formed in the host, the substance of the bread being changed into that of his body. The council did not decide of them. (P.)

3 Larroche, p. 492. (P.)

tive decisions respecting it. Peter Lom- use of such terms as both parties might adopt.4

When the great difficulty of one single conversion of any particular quantity of bread and wine into the body and blood of Christ was got over, one would imagine that another difficulty, no less insuperable, would have occurred, with respect to the multitude of consecrations performed in different places at the same time. But Guimond, who wrote against Berenger, in 1075, made nothing of these, or of still greater difficulties. Every separate part," says he, "of the eucharist is the whole body of Christ. It is given entire to all the faithful. They all receive it equally. Though it should be celebrated a thousand times at once, it is the same indivisible body of Christ. It is only to sense that a single part of the host appears less than the whole, but our senses often deceive us." It is acknowledged that there is a difficulty in comprehending this, but there is no difficulty in believing it. The only question is, whether God has been willing to make this change? "It is like the voice of a single man, which all the audience hears entire." He exhorts heretics to yield to the truth, because. says he, "we are not now contending for victory, as in the schools, or for any temporal interest, as in the secular courts. In this dispute nothing less is depending than eternal life."5

When it was objected to Guimond. that the rats sometimes eat the consecrated bread, he replied, that either the senses were deceived, or the body of Christ did not suffer any more in the rat, than in the sepulchre, or that the said, that Jesus Christ did not come devil put real bread into it, on which

men and rats might feed.6

4 Basnage, II. p. 669. (P.) Canon I. is in these words: "Si quis negaverit, in sanctissimæ eucharistiæ sacramento contineri vere, realiter et substantialiter corpus et sanguinem una cum anima et divinitate Domini nostri Jesu Christi, ac proinde totum Christum, sed dixerit tantumac proince totum Christum, sed dixerit tantum-modo esse in eo ut in signo, vel figura, aut vir-tute; anathema sit." Sess. xiii. C. viii. S. Con. Trid. Can. et Decret. p. 75. § Fleury. (P.) [A. D. 1075.] Basnage, I (b). p. 120. (P.)

&lt;sup>1</sup> Larroche, p. 183. (P.) 2 See Basnage's Histoire des Eglises Réformées, II. p. 681, where this and other difficulties on the same subject are particularly considered. It is sufficient for my purpose to give specimen

The language in which some of the teenth century the Greeks were much not hesitate one moment." Some priests boasted that they had even more power than the Blessed Virgin, because they could create their Creator whenever they pleased; whereas she had conceived him but once.2

So much is made to depend on the power and will of the priest, with respect to the eucharist, and the sacraments in general, in the Church of tacles which were formed for the resi-Rome, as, I should think, must occasion a good deal of anxiety on the part and the lamps and other precious of those who receive them. For they believe that the efficacy of all the sacraments depends upon the intention of hence the custom of carrying about him that administers them. This is expressly determined in a decree of Pope Eugenius; and at the Council of Trent an anathema was pronounced on those who denied it. This is even "carried so far, that, in one of the rubrics of the Missal, it is given as a rule, that if a priest who goes to consecrate twelve hosties, should have a general intention to leave out one of them," it will affect them all.3 Luther mentions some priests at Rome, who acknowledged that, instead of pronouncing the proper words of consecration, only said to themselves, Bread thou art, and bread thou shalt remain.4

All the disputes about the nature of the eucharistical elements were not confined to the Western church, in this period; for at the beginning of the thir-

Popish priests have boasted of the agitated about this subject; some afpower which this doctrine of transub-firming that the mysteries, as they stantiation gives them, would excite called them, were incorruptible, while the greatest ridicule, if there was not others maintained that they were not: a mixture of impiety with the absurd- when Zonaras, a Greek friar, happily of them, "Jesus Christ obeys all the no less ingenuity than had been disbe where he will, at every hour, at his the monks or schoolmen in the West. simple word. They carry him whither The consecrated bread, he said, was the they please. He goes into the mouth flesh of Christ, as dead, and therefore of the wicked as well as of the right- corruptible; but that after it was eaten, eous. He makes no resistance, he does and thereby gone, as it were, into the not hesitate one moment." Some sepulchre, it became incorruptible; because the body of our Lord did not remain long dead and buried, but rose again.5

The doctrine of transubstantiation was the cause of a great variety of new ceremonies and institutions in the Church of Rome. Hence, among other things, those rich and splendid recepdence of God, under this new shape. ornaments that were designed to beautify this habitation of the Deity; and this divine bread in solemn pomp, through the public streets, when it is to be administered to sick and dying persons, with many other ceremonies of like nature. But what crowns the whole was the festival of the holy sacrament.

This was an institution of Urban IV., in 1264, on the pretended revelation of one Juliana, a woman of Liege, who said that it was showed her from heaven, that this particular festival day of the holy eucharist had always been in the councils of the sovereign Trinity; but that now the time of revealing it to men was come. In the decree of Urban it is said, "this festival day properly belongs to the sacrament, because there is no saint but what has his proper festival; that this is intended to confound the unbelief and extravagance of heretics, and to repair all the faults that men might

Basnage, I. p. 26. (P.)
 Ibid. I (b). p. 423. (P.)
 Burnet on the Articles, p. 370. (P.) Art. xxvi. Ed. 4, p. 272.
 Basnage, II. p. 687. (P.)

<sup>5</sup> Larroche, p. 494. (P.)

be guilty of in other masses." 1 This the people should prostrate themselves festival is attended with a procession, in the church at the sound of a bell.3 in which the host is carried in great The ceremony of carrying the host of the other new superstitions mentioned above.

century that the elevation of the host ments should fall to the ground, or was first practised in the Eastern any fly or spider should fall into the church; but then it was intended to wine.5 represent the elevation of Christ upon the cross, and was made immediately business of communicating was made, before the communion; and there is in consequence of the doctrine of trancentury. But then it immediately that, how contrite soever a sinner followed the consecration, though no should feel himself, he should not apadoration is said to have been intended proach the holy eucharist without by this ceremony till the thirteenth having made his sacramental confescentury, when it was expressly ap- sion, nor at the solemnity which the pointed in the Constitutions of Hono- receiving of the communion gave to an rius III. and Gregory IX.; the latter of whom, in 1227, ordered the ringing gory VII. proposed to the emperor of a bell, to warn the people to fall Henry, who was charged with many down on their knees and adore the con- crimes, to exculpate himself, by taking secrated host.2 This, however, seems one part of a consecrated host, while to have been done before by Guy Paré, he himself should take the other. the Pope's legate, in Germany; who, This proposal staggered the emperor when he was at Cologne, in 1201, so much, that he desired the affair to ordered, that when the host was eleber referred to a general council. But vated in the celebration of the mass.

pomp and magnificence. No less a per- in procession to communicate the sick son than Thomas Aquinas composed seems to have been first used in this the office for this great solemnity. country. For, at the end of the twelfth Notwithstanding all this pomp and century, Hubert, archbishop of Cansplendour, which seldom fail to have terbury, and legate of Pope Celestine, charms for the bulk of mankind, this held a synod at York, in which, among decree of Urban was not universally other things, he commanded that when observed; and therefore it was con- any sick persons were to receive the firmed by another bull of Clement V. communion, the priest himself should But when the minds of men were a carry the host, clothed with his proper little enlightened after the Reformation habits, and with lights borne before it, by Luther, this solemnity became the suitable to so great a sacrament. We topic of much ridicule. On this ac- are also informed that, in the begincount Catharine of Medicis wrote to ning of the thirteenth century, Odo, the Pope in 1561, as Thuanus informs bishop of Paris, in one of his synods, us, to request the abolition of this made several Constitutions relating to festival, because it was the occasion of the sacrament; as, about the manner much scandal, and was not at all of carrying it to the sick, of the adoranecessary. It may not be amiss to tion of the persons who should meet it, give a more particular account of some of keeping it in the best part of the altar, of locking it up safe; with several precautions in case it should happen It was towards the end of the sixth that any part of the consecrated ele-

Considering how solemn a thing the no mention of this ceremony in the substantiation, we do not wonder that Western church before the eleventh it was ordered by the Council of Trent, oath. This appeared, when Pope Gre-

Larroche, p. 581. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Ibid p. 102. (P.)

<sup>3</sup> Histoire des Papes, III. p. 131. (P.)

&lt;sup>4</sup> Larroche, p. 483. (P.) <sup>5</sup> Ibid. p. 484. (P.) 6 Fleury, A. D. 1077. (P.)

be permitted to eat before he received the communion; and yet, application being made to the Pope on the part of the king of France, in 1722, that he he received the communion, on the day of his consecration, as it was thought that he would not be able to go through the fatigue of the ceremony without it, the request was granted. It must be presumed, however, that no other than the Pope himself could have given so great a dispensation.1

It was owing to the great awfulness of the real masses, and the many ceremonies that were necessary to be observed in the celebration of them, that, for four or five hundred years, what are called dry masses (or the ceremonies of the mass without the consecration of the elements) were much used in the Church of Rome. They were more especially used by gentlemen who went a hunting early in the morning, or returned late, or when a new-married couple wanted to receive benediction, &c. St. Louis often used this ceremony on board his vessel, and it served for a consolation to pilgrims, when they had no opportunity of having real masses in their return from the Holy Land. These dry masses were so common at one time, that there was a rubric in the Romish ritual prepared for them. But the Reformation opening men's eyes upon the subject, Eckius confessed that what had been practised so long was, in truth, an impiety and blasphemy against God. The Council of Trent did not, however, correct the abuse; but the bishops since that time have abolished it by degrees, and now it is only used on Good Fridays, and during storms at

We see the farther progress of superstition in the various methods that were devised in order to prevent the waste or abuse of the consecrated ele-

Hist. des Papes, V. p. 499. (P.)
 Basnage, II. p. 686. (P.)

we are more surprised that, upon any ments, which increased after the dococcasion whatever, any person should trine of transubstantiation. In the tenth century the priests began to put the bread into the mouths of the communicants, and in the eleventh they began, in some churches, to use little might take some nourishment before hosts, like wafers, made round, white, and very thin; but this was not till after the condemnation of Berenger. and was disliked by many at that time; and the former custom of breaking the bread into little pieces, and also that of giving the bread steeped in the wine, were still used in many places. till near the end of the twelfth century. after which the use of thin wafers became universal.

At length, in order to leave the least room for waste or abuse possible, the custom of communicating the laity with the bread only was introduced; and the doctrine of transubstantiation made this practice much easier than it could otherwise have been. For it being now agreed that the consecrated bread was the whole body of Christ, it contained the blood of course; and consequently the wine, which was the blood only, became superfluous.

Thomas Aguinas defended the custom of communicating with the bread only, but he says that it was not observed in all churches; and the laity, in many places, in order to prevent the spilling of the wine, or, as they called it, the blood of Christ (against which they were always most particularly cautioned) sucked it through quills, or silver pipes, which were fastened to their chalices for that purpose. But at length, and especially from the custom of giving the bread steeped in the wine, came, by degrees, the custom of communion in one kind only, without any express authority for the purpose, in almost all the Western churches, till it was established by the Council of Constance, in 1415.3 But the custom of communicating in both the altar, and to other persons of emi- the masses be deemed imperfect. nent piety, whom he thought worthy of so great a gift.

<sup>3</sup> See L'Enfant, "Histoire du Concile," 1714, L. iii. Sect.xxx p 253. By the same decree, the sacrament was to be received, fastiny, instead of after supper, unless in cases of necessity allowed by the church.

of Constance, but left it to the Pope whom he should think proper. Accordingly Pius IV. granted the communion in both kinds to those who should demand it, provided they professed to believe as the church did in other respects.1 The Bohemians also were allowed, with the Pope's consent, to make use of the cup.

The high reverence for the eucharist, which was produced by the doctrine of transubstantiation, made a change in the posture of receiving it. For, till the thirteenth century, all persons had communicated standing, but about that time the custom of receiving it kneeling came into use, and this is continued ever since in the Church of Rome, and from that in the Church of England. Frequent communion also was now no more to be expected; and, indeed, so early as the tenth century. Ratherius, bishop of Verona, was obliged to order his priests to warn believers to come four times a year to the communion; 2 and now the Catholics are not required to communicate more than once a year, and this is generally at Easter.

There are various other superstitious practices respecting the eucharist, in the Church of Rome, the origin of which it is not easy to trace. There are six several sorts of vestments belonging to the officiating priest, and eight or nine to the bishop, and there is not one of them but has some mysterious signification, and a corresponding separate consecration; not to mention the dif-

kinds was still practised in several ferent colours of them, and the diffeplaces, and the Pope himself is said rent occasions on which they are used; at one time to have administered the and they are all so necessary, that the wine to the deacons and ministers of smallest variation in the ritual makes

As I observed before, that two masses must not be celebrated on the same The Council of Trent confirmed that altar in the course of one day, and even a priest cannot officiate at any altar to grant the use of the cup to those when a bishop has done it before him. they are now multiplied exceedingly. The masses also are reckoned defective. unless the altar be covered with three cloths, consecrated by the bishop, the last of which must be longer than the other; and it must, after all, be covered with a stuff of some particular colour, according to the festival on which it is used. But the altar must be stripped of all its ornaments on Good Friday, for reasons which may be seen in Basnage (I. p. 48), together with many other superstitious observances relating to the eucharist, which I do not think it worth while to recite.

In the eleventh century there arose violent debates between the Greek and Latin Churches on account of the former using unleavened bread in the celebration of the eucharist. however, it is very evident, must have been the bread that our Saviour himmade use of in the institution, as there was no leaven to be had during the whole season of Passover; and at length the Latin Church conformed to this custom.

Considering the many gross abuses which prevailed with respect to the Lord's supper, after the time of Paschasius, it is no wonder that we meet with some persons who laid it aside altogether. This was the case with the Paulicians in the ninth century, who considered both baptism and the Lord's supper as something figurative and parabolical.3 This was also the case with some persons in France, in the beginning of the eleventh century, and they were condemned at the synods of Orleans, and again at Arras, in 1025.1 Also, in the twelfth century, that, in different parts of his writings, one Tanchelin 2 persuaded the people he contradicts himself on this subject.4 of Antwerp, and other persons in Flan- John Huss believed the doctrine of ders, that receiving the Lord's supper transubstantiation and the real prewas not necessary to salvation. But, sence; but in answer to a person who indeed, this he might do, without wish- had said that a priest, after his coning them to omit the celebration of it secration, was the Father of God, and altogether.

<sup>1</sup> Histoire des Papes, IV. p. 679. (P.) 2 Larroche, p. 137. (P.) In the Greek Church "the laics are obliged to receive the blessed sacrament four times a year." Smith's Account, p. 157.

<sup>3</sup> Mosheim, II. p. 176-178. (P.) Cent. ix. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. vi.

a doctrine as this, to treat the Christian and the priest only the minister of it.5 religion with contempt. Averroes, the what they ate.3

SECTION IV.

OF THE RECOVERY OF THE CHRISTIAN DOCTRINE CONCERNING THE LORD'S SUPPER.

As the corruption of this doctrine took place very early in the Christian church, and proceeded farther than any other, so it was with great difficulty rectified; and, indeed, it is in general but very imperfectly done to this day, especially in the established reformed churches. The minds of the reformers, in general, were impressed with an idea of something peculiarly mysterious and awful in the nature of the eucharist, as well as with a firm persuasion concerning the divinity of Christ.

Wickliffe was late in settling his notion about the Lord's supper; so

<sup>1</sup> Fleury. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Or Tanquelinus. If the accounts of his enormities are true, he must have been insane. He was assassinated in 1125. See Nouv. Dict. Hist. V. p. 497. Mosheim says he was a mystic but that probably "blasphemies were falsely charged upon him by a vindictive priesthood." Cent. xii, Pt ii. Ch. v. Sect. ix.
<sup>3</sup> Memoires pour la Vie de Petrarch, THI. p. 769.

(P.) Averness was a native of Carlong in Swiin.

(P.) Averroes was a native of Cordova in Spain, where he died in 1226. See Nouv. Dict. Hist. I.

the creator of God's body, he wrote a As little can we wonder that un- treatise to prove that Jesus Christ is believers should take advantage of such the author of the transubstantiation.

It is remarkable, that with respect great freethinker of his age, said that to most of the reformers from Poperv Judaism was the religion of children, in the sixteenth century, the article of and Mahometanism that of hogs; but the eucharist was the last in which he knew no sect so foolish and absurd they gained any clear light, the doctrine as that of the Christians, who adored of transubstantiation being that which they parted with, with peculiar reluctance, and in all public disputations their popish adversaries had more advantage with respect to this than to any other subject. They advanced to the conferences with the utmost boldness when this was to be the subject of their disputation, having the prejudices of their audience, and, in a great measure those that were their adversaries too, on their side.

Though Luther rejected transubstantiation, he nevertheless retained the doctrine of the real presence of the body of Christ in the eucharist: believing that even the body of Christ might be omnipresent, as well as his divinity; and in the Lutheran Form of Concord, which they made the terms of communion with them, this article was inserted. Luther, in his attempts to explain his doctrine on the subject of the eucharist, (which, to distinguish it from that of the Papists, he called

Gilpin's Life of him, p. 65. (P.) Brit. Biog.

I. pp. 38, 46.

6 L'Enfant's History of the Council of Constance, I. p. 432. (P). "Un certain prédicateur de Bohème avoit avancé, q'un prêtre avant sa premiere messe n'étoit qu'enfant de Dieu, mais qu'après avoir officié il étoit Père de Dieu et qu'après avoir officié il étoit Père de Dieu et Créateur du corps de Dieu. Jean Hus fit un Traité pour rétuter une proposition si étrange, quoiqu'elle ne fût pas nouvelle, et il soutunt que c'est J. C. qui est l'Auteur de la Transubstantiation, et quele prêtre n'en est que le ministre, en vortu des paroles sacramentales." Histoire L. iii. Sect. liii. See also Sect. v. and L. il. Sect. Ixxiii. Amst. 1714, pp. 169, 201, 280.

consubstantiation,) said, that "as in a red-hot iron, two distinct substances, iron and fire, are united, so is the body of Christ joined with the bread in the eucharist." Some Lutherans mainomnipresence, were communicated to city.9 the human nature of Christ by the self, and it is supposed that being convinced by the reasons of Melancthon. he would have entertained the opinion of the other reformers on this subject, if stadt. Luther's colleague, maintained "that the bread and wine were no more to excite in the minds of Christians the remembrance of the sufferings and death of the Divine Saviour, and of the benefits which arise from it."4 was much more rational than Luther on this subject. For he, like Carolstadt, considered the bread and wine as no more than signs and symbols of the body and blood of Christ, and that we derive no benefit from the eucharist, except what arises from the recollection of the merits of Christ.5 He "would not allow to the ministers of the church the power of excluding flagitious offenders from its communion," but left all punishment to the civil magistrate.6 Upon the whole, Zuinglius seems to have thought as rationally on the subject of the eucharist as Socinus, who also considered it merely as a commemoration of the death of Christ.7

Calvin was much less rational. For he supposed that a certain divine virtue or efficacy was communicated by Christ, together with the bread and wine.8 And he not only excluded vicious pertained, "that all the properties of the sons from communion, but likewise divine nature, and consequently its procured their banishment from the

We have a remarkable example of hypostatic union" between them. But the confidence of the Catholics on the these were more rigid than Luther him-subject of the eucharist, in the famous conference of Poissy, in 1561, held in the presence of Charles IX. and Catharine of Medicis, in the court of France, between a number of Popish and Prodeath had not prevented him.3 Carol- testant divines, of whom the cardinal of Lorraine was the principal on the side of the Catholics, and Beza on that than external signs or symbols, designed of the Protestants. The cardinal, in his speech on this subject, says, "We must always oppose these words, This is my body, to all argumentation, judgments, and speculation of understand-It is remarkable that Zuinglius was ing, or human spirit. They will be fire and thunder to all consciences. . . . Let us believe the Lord, and obey him in all things and places; let us not contradict him, because what he tells us seems absurd, improper, and contrary to our senses and thoughts. Let his word overcome everything, and be unto us, as it is, the most precious thing. That it befits us to do everywhere, but especially in the holy mysteries. Let us not look only to the things we Mosheim, III. p. 331. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. i.

 Ch. ii. Sect xxi. Note [z].
 Ibid. IV. p. 75. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. iii. Pt. ii.

Ch. ii. Sect. x

Ch. ii. Sect. x.

Basnage, II. p. 331. (P.)

Mosheim, III. p. 331. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect i.

Ch. ii. Sect. xxi.

I blid. IV p. 76. (P.) Nil esse in Cana, quan memoriam Christi. Cent. xvi. Sect. iii. Pt. ii.

Ch. ii. Sect. x. Note [n].

Blid. IV. p. 115. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. iii.

Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. xxxxiii.

7 Dr. Maclaine says, in a note to Mosheim, that "the seutliments of Zuingle... were the same with those maintained by Bishoo Hoadly, in his Platin those maintained by Bishop Hoadly, in his Plain Account" Vol. III. p. 331. Cent. xvi. Sect. i. Ch. ii. Sect. xxi. Note [a]. Yet Zuinglius, according to the writer of Ridley's Life, held the same opinion with that bishop, who "always believed and maintained a real presence by grace to faith, and not a mere figure only." (See supra, p. 40, Note 10.) He adds, "there were some English fanatics, such as John Webb, George Roper, and Gregory Paske, who believed that the sacrament was only a bare sign of Christ's body and nothing was only a bare sign of Christ's body, and nothing more than a remembrance of it." These three fanatics, who were burned at Canterbury, at the same time, in Mary's reign, appear to have been better scripturists than Ridley, and to have anticipated Hoadly's Plain Account. The opposite views pated Hoadly's Plain Account. The opposite views of these prelates of the same church discover how little the state can do to secure uniformity, when it quits its proper province and affects to establish religion. See the Life of Bishop Ridley, by Glocester Ridley, 1763, pp. 664, 665, and Clarke's Martyrologic, 1632, p. 159.

* Mosheim, p. 79. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. iii. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. xii.

* Ibid, p. 115. (P.)

9 Ibid. p. 115. (P.) Ibid. xxxiii.

see, but let us observe his word; for according to Christ's appointment, his our senses are easily imposed upon, and deceive us often. Since he said then, This is my body, let us not doubt of it, but believe, obey, and look upon him with the eyes of our understanding," &c.1

On most other subjects the Popish advocates rather declined the contest. but in this they thought they could This conference ended as all others in those days did, without giving any satisfaction to either party. The cardinal himself would have consented to an article on this subject sufficiently agreeable to the Lutheran doctrine, viz. That the substance of the body and blood of Christ is in the eucharist; but his brethren would not admit of it. thinking it captious and heretical.2

It is the doctrine both of the Church of England, and of the Establishment in Scotland, that some peculiar divine virtue is communicated with the eucharistical elements, when they are properly received, and therefore more preparation is enjoined for receiving this ordinance, than for attending public worship in general. In the twentyfifth article of the Church of England it is said, that "sacraments ordained of Christ, be not only badges or tokens of Christian men's professions, but rather they be certain sure witnesses, and effectual signs of grace and God's will towards us, by the which he doth work invisibly in us, and doth not only quicken, but also strengthen and confirm our faith in him."

In the Assembly's Shorter Catechism, "a sacrament" is defined to be "an holy ordinance, instituted by Christ; wherein, by sensible signs, Christ and the benefit of the new covenant, are represented, sealed, and applied to believers. The Lord's supper" in particular is said to be "a sacrament, wherein, by giving and receiving bread and wine,

1 Laval's History of the Reformation in France,

I. p. 536. (P.)

2 Ibid. p. 583. (P.)

his word is infallible, and cannot be death is shewed forth, and the worthy false nor deceive us. On the contrary, receivers are, not after a corporal and carnal manner, but by faith, made partakers of his body and blood, with all its benefits, to their spiritual nourishment, and growth in grace." Agreeably to these ideas, it is there said that, "it is required of them that would worthily partake of the Lord's supper. that they examine themselves, of their knowledge to discern the Lord's body, of their faith to feed upon him, of their repentance, love and new obedience, lest, coming unworthily, they eat and drink judgment to themselves."

This article of superstition has great hold on the minds of Dissenters in general, the Independents requiring before admission to communion, an account of what they call an experience in religion, or the evidence of a man's having had what they deem to be a miraculous work of grace upon his soul; so that they can have reason to think that he is one of the elect, and that he will not fall away. And on this account many Dissenters have days of preparation for receiving the Lord's supper,3 and they do not consider any person to be properly qualified to administer either this ordinance, or baptism, till he has been regularly ordained, though they have no objection to his preaching all his life, if he pleases, without that ceremony, or to attending upon his ministry in all other respects.

It can also be from nothing but the remains of superstition, that the number of communicants, even among the most liberal of the Dissenters, is very small, seldom exceeding one in ten of the congregation; and very few as yet bring their children to communion. this subject Mr. Pierce wrote a very valuable tract, which has led many persons to think favourably of the practice, as the only effectual method of securing the attendance of Christians in general, when they are grown up. 4 communion till the children be of a ments.1 proper age to be brought to attend other parts of public worship, and till they can be made to join in the celebration with decency, so as to give no offence to others. This being a part of public worship, there cannot. I think, be any reason for making them communicate at an earlier age; and to make them do it at any period before it be properly an act of their own, will equally secure their attendance afterwards, which is the object to be aimed at. It is having had no particular fixed time for beginning to communicate, that has been the reason of its being so generally neglected as it has been with us. I flatter myself, however that in due time, we shall think rationally on this, as well as on other subjects relating to Christianity, and that our proper age to be brought to attend relating to Christianity, and that our of requiring experience.

See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. p. 30.
Ibid. p. 337, and Notes, and p. 338.

I would only advise the deferring of practice will correspond with our senti-

In the "Address, on the Subject of giving of course, lay no stress on the Calvinistic custom

PART VII.

THE HISTORY OF OPINIONS RELATING TO BAPTISM.

THE INTRODUCTION.

THE rite of baptism was perhaps first his disciples.

performed, by dipping the whole body in the water.

As this rite is usually called the practised by John, whose commission baptism of repentance, it was probably from God, was to baptize unto repentance intended to represent the purity of all who should profess themselves to be heart and life which was required of Our Saviour himself was all who profess themselves to be Chrisbaptized, and probably all the apostles, tians; and therefore a declaration of who, by his directions, baptized others, faith in Christ, and also of repentance, even in his lifetime; and in his giving was always made by those who pre-his commission to them, he commanded sented themselves to be baptized, at them to baptize, as well as disciple, all least, if it was required of them. Nonations. Accordingly we find, in the thing more, therefore, seems to have book of Acts, that all who were con- been meant by baptism originally, than verted to Christianity, Jews as well as a solemn declaration of a man's being Gentiles, were received into the Chris- a Christian, and of his resolution to tian church by baptism; and at that live as becomes one; and very far was time this rite appears to have been it from being imagined, that there was generally, though probably not always any peculiar virtue in the rite itself.

It was considered as laying a man under brazen vessels, but also of couches. obligation to a virtuous and holy life, as the profession of Christianity neces-

It is certain that, in very early times, any person being baptized by sprinkling only, or a partial application of hand, the dipping of the whole body is not expressly prescribed, and the moral emblem is the same, viz. that of cleanwater, we seem to be at liberty to apply the water either to the whole body, or to part of it, as circumstances shall make it convenient.2 The Greek word βαπτιζω certainly does not always imply a dipping of the whole body in water. For it is applied to that kind of washing which the Pharisees required before

1 Doddridge inquires, in Lect. ccii. whether immersion. "be an essential circumstance in baptism?" and resolves, that, "on the whole, that mode of baptism is evidently favoured by scripture examples, though not required by express precept." Yet, how can we better understand a precept of the scripture than by observing the "scripture examples"? Selder approves "the baptizing of children" as a rito which "succeeds circumcision;" yet, referring to the disuse of immersion, he says, "In England, of late years, I ever thought the parson baptized his own fingers rather than the child." Table Talk, Baptism.

Talk, Baptism.

<sup>2</sup> May not such a liberty be pleaded for several practices among Christians, which my author, practices among Christians, which my author, in the preceding and following pages, has justly exposed; though they have not wanted very specious excuses of utility or convenience?

See a Note in loc. added to the 4th edition of the Improved Version. Yet Hammond ("Annot. in Mark vil. 4") says, as quoted by Gale, that "the word signifies the washing of any part, as the hands, here, by way of immersion in water, as that is opposed to affusion, or pouring water upon them." and that "the baptism of cups, is putting into water, all over, rinsing them." Redections on Well, 1711, pp. 159, 162. See also Wall's Defence, pp. 109-113. Le Clere's version is, "Its ne managent point non plus qu'ils n'aient plongé leurs mains dens l'eau." Nouv. Test. 1703. Mr. Wakefield says, "the Greek word $annión. Mr. Wakefield says, "the Greek word $annión. shr. Makened says, "the Greek word garnigos, which occurs not unfrequently in classic authors, universally signifies, as far as my observation has extended, to dip entirely under water." Plain and Short Account, p. 10. See a large enumeration of passages from the ancients, by Gale. Reflections, pp. 95-129.

Also, as in the Old Testament we often read of sprinkling with water, as Num. sarily does, but not as of itself making xix. 13, 18; Ezek. xxxvi. 25; and it any person holy. where we read, "And Moses sprinkled there is no particular mention made of both the book of the law, and all the people;" I think it most probable, that when great numbers were baptized at water to the body; but as, on the other the same time, the water was applied in this manner, the practice being sufficiently familiar to Jews.

In the three first centuries, it was ness or purity, produced by the use of not uncommon to baptize persons at the hour of death, and in this case they certainly did not dip the whole body. Epiphanius speaks of a Jewish patriarch being baptized by a Christian, who was introduced in the disguise of a physician, on account of his being unwilling that his relations should know it; and the water was brought eating. See Luke xi. 38; Mark vii. by a servant, as if it had been for some 4.3 We read in the same evangelist of other purpose. Whether the story be the baptism not only of cups, pots and true or false, it equally shows that the minds of Christians in that age, were not shocked at the idea of baptizing in a manner which must have been nearly as it is now used, and that such was deemed a sufficient baptism. It is said, indeed, by some, that the Eunomians made this change in the rite of baptism; thinking it indecent to plunge persons over-head in water, and especially naked; and that "they therefore only uncovered them to the breast, and then poured water upon their heads." But as the Eunomians were a branch of the Arians, it is not probable that the Catholics, as they were called, would adopt the custom from them. Besides, if the practice of immersion had always been thought absolutely necessary to baptism, it is not probable that the Christians of that age would have ever departed from it. As superstition increased, we shall have evidence enough, that they were more ready to add than to diminish, with respect to everything they did it in order to express, in a that was of a ceremonial nature.

Hær. xxx. Opera, I. p. 128. (P.)
 See Jortin's Remarks, 1752, II. p. 282. (P.)
 Ed. 1805, II. p. 128.

It has been much debated whether tion and contrition. Jonah iii. 7, 8. infants were considered as proper subinfants as well as adult persons.2

the power of a master of a family (the clude that circumcision, as such, could patria potestas) in the East, and par- not express any interest that the subticularly have not considered how far jects of it had in the things signified his own character and profession by it; for then Ishmael and the slaves usually affected his wife, his children, of Abraham would have had an equal and his servants, and indeed every- interest in them. thing that belonged to him. When the Ninevites repented, they made sackcloth, as well as themselves; not that they could consider their cattle as having any occasion to repent, but as naving any occasion to repent, but

1 See a "View of the Chief Arguments for and against Infant Baptism." Doddridge, Lect. cciii.-cev. Also Bishop Taylor's "Liberty of Prophesying," Sect. xviii. He there quotes the very extraordinary "testimony of a learned Predo-baptist, Ludoricus Vives, who, in his annotations upon St. Austin, De Civit. Dei, L. 1.
C. xxvii. affirms Neminem misi adultum antiquitus solere baptizuri," No. xxv. ad fm. Ed. 2, p. 321.
"Wall's History of Infant Baptism," (Ed. 3, 1720.)
Gale's Reflections on Wall, 1711, and Wall's Defence, 1720, appear to contain all that can now be discovered as to the mode and subject of apostolic baptism. The reader will find much information respecting the arguments and authorities for the immersion of Adults, as the only Christian baptism, in Wisowatius's Note to the Racovian Catechism, in Mr. Rees's translation, pp. 253-257.
Mr. Belsham, in his Plea for Infant Baptism, has given the argument from tradition all the force given the argument from tradition all the force of which it is capable.

<sup>2</sup> The author's early and latest opinion upon this subject appears to have been, that "the baptism of children is to be considered as one part of a man's own profession of Christianity." See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. p. 335, and Note.

stronger manner, their own humilia-

Agreeably to these prevailing ideas, jects for baptism in the primitive though circumcision was a religious church.1 Now, besides, that we are rite, instituted as a symbol of the not able to trace the origin of infant covenant between God and the debaptism, and therefore are necessarily scendants of Abraham by Isaac and carried back into the age of the apos-tles for it, a controversy arose pretty cumcised, but also all the slaves of early in the Christian church, which Abraham, who had no interest whatwould naturally have led some persons ever in the promises made to him. to deny the antiquity of the practice, The application of this rite, thereif they could; and considering the fore, to Ishmael, and to the slaves of state of opinions and practices with Abraham, was no more than a necesrespect to things of a similar nature, sary appendage to the circumcision of it is natural to suppose that the Abraham himself, as master of the primitive Christians would baptize family. It was his own act only, and therefore the consent of Ishmael or of With respect to this subject, I cannot the slaves cannot be supposed to have think that writers have attended so been in the least degree necessary. much as they ought to have done to From the same fact we must also con-

There can be no doubt but that when the Jews in future ages made even their cattle to fast, and wear converts to their religion, they obliged every master of a family both to submit to this rite himself, and likewise to see that all his household, or all that depended upon him, did the same. For the same reason, whatever other rite had been enjoined them, and whatever it had expressed, the same people would, no doubt, have applied it in the same indiscriminate manner. to the master of the family, and to all his household. It was natural, therefore, for the apostles, and other Jews, on the institution of baptism, to apply it to infants, as well as to adults, as a token of the profession of Christianity by the master of the family only; and this they would do without considering it as a substitute for circumcision, and succeeding in the place of it, which it is never said to do in the Scriptures, though some have been led by some circumstances of resemblance in the two rites to imagine that this was the tracted. Now, an argument derived directions.

was baptized and all her household. Jew these phrases would convey the for this in the New Testament. idea of the children, at least, if not of A Roman also could not have underpatria potestas.

It also appears to me to be very evident from ecclesiastical history, and the writings of the Christian fathers, that infant baptism was the uniform practice of the primitive Christians, and continued to be so till, along with other superstitious notions, they got the idea of the efficacy of baptism as such to wash away sins, and consequently of the peculiar safety of dying

¹ See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. p. 334. Yet it is thus argued, on the other side. "By whole families, in scripture, is meant all persons of reason and age within the family; for it is said of the Ruler at Capernaum, (John iv.) that he believed and all his house." Lib. of Proph. Sect. xviii. No. xxiv, p. 319. "It is certain the word house or household is often used where none are house or household is often used where none are meant but such as are come to years of understanding. For example, John iv. 53, Himself believed and his whole house; Acts xviii. 8, Crispus believed and his whole house; Acts xviii. 8, Crispus believed on the Lord with all his house. Of the three examples of households baptized, it is expressly said of the one (the jailor's), that Paul and Silas 'spake the word of the Lord to him, and to all that were in his house.' If all the families in Great Britain were obliged to take an oath of allegiance, any man who should hereafter read our history, would make a very wrong inference if he should, merely from the word families or households, conclude this oath was administered tochildren." Plain Account of Baptism, in Letters to Bishop Hoadly, 1758, Ed. 2, 1766, pp. 99, 100. See also Wakefield's "Plain and Short Account," p. 24.

case. According to the general ideas, from the uniform practice of the and the established custom of the primitive Christians cannot but be Jews and other Asiatics, in similar allowed to have considerable weight, cases, they would not have thought of as an evidence of its having been a adopting any other practice than that practice of the apostolical times, and of infant baptism, without particular having the sanction of apostolical authority. It is from the evidence of Accordingly, we find in the Scrip- tradition only, deduced from the untures, that the jailor, on professing his interrupted practice of the Christian faith in Christ, was baptized, he and churches, that we now set apart not all his, Acts xvi. 33; and that Lydia the seventh but the first day of the week, for the purpose of public worver. 15.1 Now it is certain that to a ship. There is no express authority

Tertullian, indeed, advises to defer the domestic slaves, having been bap-baptism till persons be of age to be tized, as well as the head of the family. Christians, lest it should bring their sponsors into danger; alleging also, stood them to imply less than all who that their innocent age had no need to were subject to what was called the hasten to the remission of sins.2 But he nowhere ir inuates that infant baptism was not even the universal custom of his time, or that it had been an innovation; which, in pleading against it, he might naturally have been expected to insist upon. He was only offended at the too great readiness with which all persons were admitted to baptism, when some of them were afterwards a disgrace to their profession. He therefore advises to defer it presently after they were baptized, in all cases, and in that of infants before any fresh guilt could be con- also.

If we trace the progress of this affair a little farther, we shall find that when. by the prevalence of the liberal sentiments of Christianity, more account was made of slaves, as being of the same species with their masters, and equally interested with them in the privileges and promises of the gospel, and especially when, in consequence of this, they acquired more civil rights. and were allowed to act for themselves more than they had done, they were considered as having religious interests of their own. 3 Indeed, in the time of the Romans, slaves, being of different nations, were allowed (agreeably to the genius of the pagan system) to practise such, I am under, to educate my chilsome of their peculiar religious rites: and a great many of the first Christian converts were slaves; their masters, at that time, not finding themselves or their interest affected by it, and therefore not taking any umbrage at it.

&lt;sup>2</sup> De Baptismo, Sect. xviii. Opera, p. 231. (P.)

■ See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. p. 334, and Note.

It happened, also, that the power of a father over his children was much less in these Northern nations of Europe. than it was in the East, or among the Romans, with whom, likewise, it sensibly declined. On this account, and also because, from the very first promulgation of Christianity, it could not but be manifest, that persons were interested in it, as individuals, and not as members of families, or societies. I make no doubt but that, in general, if there were adult children or slaves in a family, at the time that the master professed himself a Christian, they were not baptized without their own consent; but no consideration, that can be supposed to have occurred either to Jews or Romans, could have led them to make the same exception in favour of infants.

Considering how very different are directed to enjoin it. the ideas and customs of these times, and these parts of the world, from those which prevailed among the Jews, when baptism was instituted, the peculiar reasons for applying it to infants have, in a great measure, ceased. But still, as the practice is of apostolical authority, it appears to me that no innovation ought to be made in it by any power whatever; but that we ought rather to preserve those ideas which originally gave a propriety to it, especially when there is nothing unnatural in them. For my own part, I endeavour to adhere to the primitive ideas above mentioned, and therefore I consider the baptizing of my children, not as directly implying that they have any interest in it, or in the things signified by it, but as a part of my own profession of Christianity, and consequently as an obligation which, as dren, and also to instruct my servants. in the principles of the Christian reli-In this view of the ordinance of gion. baptism, infants are indirectly interested in it, whether they adhere to the professions of Christianity, and thereby secure the blessings of it when they become adults, so as to think and act for themselves, or not.

It is possible that, at this time, and in these parts of the world, we may not see so much reason for any positive institutions; but with the Jews, and indeed throughout all the East, nothing is more common than to express sentiments and purposes by appropriated actions. Now, washing with water so naturally expresses purity of heart, and is a thing so agreeable in itself, especially in hot countries, we cannot wonder it should be made choice of to denote the profession of a religion which brings men under the strictest obligations to repent and reform their lives; and particularly that John the Baptist, whose immediate business it was to preach repentance, should be

Whether baptism be of earlier antiquity than John the Baptist, I have not been able to satisfy myself. Maimonides and the earliest Jewish writers speak of solemn baptism as a necessary attendant on circumcision, whenever any new converts were made to their religion, and also as a practice that was immemorial among them. But whether it was tacitly implied in the original institution of circumcision, or whether it had been adopted afterwards, as naturally expressive of the new converts cleansing themselves from the impurities of their former state of Heathenism, it was probably the custom of the Jews in the time of our Saviour.

If this was the case, and the Jews did both circumcise and baptize all that were capable of it, when families were converted to their religion, there was both the less reason for explaining the nature and the use of the rite on the first mention of it, or for describing band is sanctified by the wife, ... else the principles of the religion that he holiness of a child."

<sup>1</sup> This question must, at least, be regarded as still sub judice.

If any controversy was ever calculated to bring a fact of this nature to light, it was that of Pelagius and Austin about original sin, in which the latter maintained, that baptism was necessary to wash it away, the second spiritual birth counteracting the effects of the first carnal birth. Now the utmost that Pelagius appears to have replied on this subject was, that infant baptism was not necessary. But he did not pretend to say that the practice was not then universal, or that it had not always the corruptions of the rite of baptism. been so. Nay, Austin says that it was agreed between him and his opponent, that infants ought to be baptized, and that they differed only about the reason why they were to be baptized.1

We also find no trace of its being thought that the baptism of either the master of a family, or of his household, on their first profession of Christianity, might suffice for their descendants; and though the Jews did not repeat that baptism which accompanied circumcision, yet the circumcision itself was repeated on every male, so that if the Christians in the primitive times had been influenced by any analogies between the Jewish religion and their own, they would rather have been led to repeat the rite of baptism with respect to their children, than to discontinue it.

Lastly, I am not able to interpret 1 Cor. vii. 14, "The unbelieving hus-

<sup>1</sup> De Verbis Apostoli Sermo, xiii. Opera, X. p. 318. (P,)

more particularly than has been done, were your children unclean, but now who were the proper subjects of bapare they holy," more naturally than by tism. And we may rather suppose supposing that, as by holy the Jews that our Lord would have expressly meant devoted to God, so by a child restricted the application of it to adult being holy, they meant that it had a persons, if he had intended that the prevailing custom should be altered. As therefore a child born of Consequently, when a master of a one Jewish parent had a right to cirfamily was converted to Christianity, cumcision, so a child born of one he would, of course, be required to Christian parent had a right to bapbantize all his household, and consider tism. Indeed, I do not see what other himself as bound to instruct them in rational meaning can be assigned to the

It is remarkable that the Christians in Abyssinia repeat their baptism annually, on the festival of Epiphany.3

SECTION I.

OF THE OPINIONS AND PRACTICES OF THE CHRISTIANS RELATING TO BAPTISM, TILL THE REFORMATION.

THERE is this difference with respect to <sup>2</sup> After a large exposition of this passage, Mr. Wakefield says, "If baptism made children holy, the fears of the Corinthians were needless because then, whoever their parents might be, they would soon become holy through baptism: so that we must not conclude the holiness of such that we must not conclude the holiness of such children to be the consequence of baptism, but of something else, and that is, if we may take St. Paul's word for it, the being born of Christian parents." Plain and Short Account, pp. 54-64.

Le Clerc says on the passage, "Ces expressions ont tirees de l'usage des Juifs, qui nommoient ceux de leur religion saints; c'est-à-dire consacrez à Dieu; et les autres impurs et soulles. Ceux qui étoient nez d'un Juif et d'une Greque, passaient, pour Juifs d'extraction, comme si leur soient pour Juifs d'extraction, comme si leur père et leur mère avoient été Juifs; et il en étoit de même de ceux qui étoient d'un père Grec et d'une femme Juive, comme Timothée; pourvût néanmoins que ces enfans embrassassent la religion neamons duces en 1318 amorassassent la religion Judatque." Nouv. Test. p. 143. See also Gales Reflections, pp. 513, 540. 3 Geddes's Church History of Ethiopia, 1696, p. 33. (P.) "They are said to have divers forms of baptism, viz. I baptize thee in the Holy Spirit; I baptize thee in the water of Jordan; Let God baptize thee; Come thou to baptism. They circumcise both males and females, and all are baptized every year, on the feast of Epiphany. They hold that men derive their souls, no less than their bodies, from their parents; and that the children of Christian parents, and especially of a Christian mother, are saved, notwithstand-ing they die without baptism."

and those of the Lord's supper, that that baptism washed away sin, a field though they both began about the was opened for much seducing eloquence same time, those relating to baptism on the subject, which could not fail to were perhaps the earlier of the two, and the progress of superstition, in consequence of this corruption, was rather baptism, says, "When you are come more rapid in the first century of Chris- to the bed of the Holy Spirit, to the tianity, it was by no mean so afterwards. portico of grace, to the dreadful and For after the time of those who are more desirable bath, throw yourselves upon properly called fathers, we find no the ground, as prisoners before a material alteration in the rite of bap- king."3 tism itself (though the business of confirmation grew out of it) whereas, we have seen that the most material additions were made to the doctrine of the eucharist, so late as the ninth century.

In the age immediately following that of the apostles, we find that baptism and regeneration were used as synonymous terms; and whereas, originally, the pardon of sin was supposed to be the consequence of that reformation of life which was only promised at baptism, it was now imagined that there was something in the rite itself, to which that grace was annexed; and in general it seems to have been imagined that this sanctifying virtue was in the water, and in no other part of the ordinance as administered by the priest.

Tertullian says, that the Holy Spirit was always given in baptism; and yet he expressly denied that it was bestowed by the laying on of hands. This writer says farther, that the Spirit of God descends upon the water of baptism, like a dove. Cyprian adds, that the adorable Trinity is ineffably in baptism. Paulinus says, that the water conceives and contains God; Chrysostom, that the water ceases to be what it was before, and is not fit for drinking, but is proper for sanctifying. He says that the Christian baptism is superior to that of John, in that his was the baptism of repentance, but had not the power of forgiving sin. 1 And Austin adds, that it touches the body and purifies the heart.2

Christians having now got the idea confirm and increase the prevailing superstition. Chrysostom, speaking of Superstitious practices, similar to those which followed the corruption of the doctrine of the eucharist, did not fail to accompany this undue reverence for the water of baptism. We find that in the third century the noviciates returned from baptism adorned with crowns, and clothed with white garments, in token of their victory over sin and the world. If they scrupled eating before they received the eucharist, they made a great scruple of washing after baptism. They would not do it till the end of the week; and immediately after baptism they wiped the bodies of the catechumens lest a drop of the sacramental water should fall to the ground. They went to church on the Sunday to put off their white garments, and to receive what was called the ablution.

It was even believed that a miracle was wrought on the water that was drawn on the day of Epiphany, because Jesus Christ had been baptized at that time. They carried it with respect, to their houses, after it had been consecrated; it was kept with care, and Chrysostom said that it would keep sweet many years.4 This water was even given instead of the eucharist, to penitents who were not entirely reconciled to the church; and Austin says, the catechumens among other means are sanctified by it. "The water," he says, "is holy, though it be not the body of Christ. It is more holy than the other aliments, because it is a sacrament." He says, at the same time, that the catechumens are

Hom. xxiv. Opera, I. p. 312. (P.)
 Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 138. (P.)

Ibid. p. 139. (P.)
 Hom. xxiv. Opera, I. p. 311. (P.)

by the imposition of hands, which had also been made appendages of baptism at that time.1 It appears by a passage in Austin, that the African Christians usually called baptism salvation, and the eucharist life, preferring the former to the latter.

When once it was imagined that a person newly baptized was cleansed from all sin, it is no wonder that many persons deferred this sanctifying rite as long as possible, even till they apprehended that they were at the point of death. We find cases of this kind at the beginning of the third century. Constantine the Great was not baptized till he was at the last gasp, and in this he was followed by his son Constantius; and two of his other sons, Constantine and Constans, were killed before they were baptized.

When baptism was administered to persons near the point of death, the patient must generally have been in bed, and consequently the ceremony could not have been performed by immersion; and it appears in the history of Novatian, that this was actually the case. On these occasions, the unction, and other ceremonies which had been added to the simple rite of baptism, were omitted; but they were performed afterwards, if the sick person recovered. We even find that, rather than omit baptism entirely, it was usual to baptize persons who were actually dead. Epiphanius, Chrysostom, and Theodoret, observe, that this custom prevailed in some places in their time.2

After the age of Justin Martyr, we nd many additions made to the rite of baptism. It was then the custom to give the person baptized milk and honey, and to abstain from washing, all the remainder of the day, for which Tertullian says they had no authority from the Scripture, but only from tradition. They also added unc-

1 De Peccatorum Meritis. I. iv. C. xxvi. Opera, VII. p. 711. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Busnage, Histoire, I. p. 137. (P.)

sanctified by the sign of the cross, and tion, and the imposition of hands; the unction, probably, referring, in a symbolical manner, to their prepara-tion for a spiritual combat; and in applying the oil the priest touched the head or the forehead in the form of a cross. Tertullian is the first who mentions the signing with the sign of the cross, but only as used in private, and not in public worship; and he particularly describes the custom of baptizing, without mentioning it. Indeed, it does not appear to have been used in baptism till the latter end of the fourth or fifth century; but then we find great virtue ascribed to it. Lactantius, who lived in the beginning of the fourth century, says, the devil cannot approach those who have the heavenly mark of the cross upon them, as an impregnable fortress to defend them; 3 but he does not say it was used in baptism.

After the Council of Nice, Christians added to baptism the ceremonies of exorcism, and adjurations, to make evil spirits depart from the persons to be baptized. They made several signings with the cross, they used to light candles, they gave salt to the baptized person to taste, and the priest touched his mouth and ears with spittle, and also blew and spit upon his face.4 At that time also baptized persons were made to wear white garments till the Sunday following, as was mentioned above. They had also various other ceremonies, some of which are now abolished, though others of them remain in the Church of Rome to this day. Blowing in the face, putting salt in the mouth, giving milk and honey, and also kissing the baptized persons, and making them abstain for some time from wine, are now no longer in use. The reason of these ceremonies may be pretty easily conceived.

Bee Hist. of Pop. 1735, I. p. 114.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Inst. L. iv. C. xxvii. p. 439. (P.) "Quanto terrori sit dæmonibus hoc signum soiet, qui viderit quatenus adjurati per Christum de cor-poribus, quæ obsederint, fugiant." De Mirandis per Crucis Virtutem effectis, ac de Dæmonibus. Op. I. 345.

shall, therefore, only observe, that the tics, not having the same God, or the seducing them to sin.

of the cross, was for the seal of the about the power of administering it. covenant. This latter unction we Having given this account of the shall find was afterwards reserved for corruption of the doctrine of baptism. the bishops, and became the subject and the principal abuses and supersti-of Rome, called confirmation.

Originally the bishop only, or the the subject, according to the order of priests by his permission, administered administration. baptism, as, with his leave, they also firmed afterwards.

Great doubts were raised in early as administered by heretics. Tertullian, before he became a Montanist,

I Sucur, A. D. 364. (P.)

salt was used as a symbol of purity same Christ, with the orthodox, their and wisdom; and that exorcism took baptism was not valid. Cyprian called its rise from the Platonic notion that a synod at Carthage, in which it was evil demons hovered over human souls, determined, that no baptism was valid out of the Catholic church, and there-In a decree of the Council of Lao- fore, that those who had been heretics dicea, held in the year 364, mention should be re-baptized. But Stephen, is made of two anointings, one with the bishop of Rome, did not approve simple oil before baptism, and the other of this decision, and by degrees his with ointment (μυρφ) after baptism; opinion, which continued to be that and it is there expressed that the first of the Church of Rome, became everyunction was for the participation of where prevalent. Indeed, when so the Holy Spirit, that the water was a much stress was laid on baptism itsymbol of death, and that the oint- self, it would have introduced endless ment, which was applied with the sign anxiety if much doubt had remained

Having given this account of the of a distinct sacrament in the Church tions with respect to the practice of it, I shall go over what farther relates to

When Christians, from a fondness performed any other of his functions; for the rites and ceremonies of Paganbut it appears from Tertullian that, in ism, and a desire to engage the respect his time, laymen had, in some cases, of their heathen acquaintance for the the power of baptizing. This baptism, religion which they had embraced, however, we may be assured, required began to adopt some of the maxims the confirmation of the bishop, and and rites of their old religion, they would not be allowed but in case of seem to have been more particularly necessity, as at the seeming approach struck with what related to the mysof death, &c. At a synod at Elvira, teries, or the more secret rites of the in 306, it was allowed that a layman, pagan religion, to which only few per-provided he had not been married a sons were admitted, and those under second time, might baptize catechu- a solemn oath of secrecy. In consemens in case of necessity; but it was quence of this disposition, both the ordered that, if they survived, they positive institutions of Christianity, should be brought to the bishop for baptism and the Lord's supper, were the imposition of hands. Afterwards, converted into mysteries, Christians when the bounds of the church were affecting great secrecy with respect to much enlarged, the business of baptiz- the mode of administering them, and ing was left almost entirely to the no person could then be admitted to priests, or the country bishops, and attend the whole of the public worship the bishops of great sees only con- before he was baptized; but all who were classed with the catechumens were dismissed before the celebration times about the validity of baptism of the eucharist, which closed the service.

Farther, those who were admitted wrote treatise to prove that here- to the heathen mysteries had certain signs or symbols delivered to them, by which they might know each other, so that by declaring them they might be admitted into any temple, and to the secret worship and rites of that god whose symbols they had received. the Apostles' Creed, or that short declaration of faith which it had been a symbol by which they were to know one another.

cites two texts of scripture, the one, administration of baptism itself. Proverbs xxiii. 9, "Speak not in the ears of a fool, for he will despise the baptism, from the time of those who wisdom of thy words;" and the other, Matt. vii. 6, "Give not that which is from the age of Austin to the Reforholy unto the dogs, neither cast ye your mation. Indeed I have hardly met pearls before swine," &c. Ambrose most with anything on the subject worth pathetically exhorts to the utmost vigilancy, to conceal the Christian mysteries, and in particular to be very "careful not by incautiousness to reveal the secrets of the Creed, or the Lord's Prayer." This last appears very extraordinary, as the Lord's Prayer is that Pope Boniface hit upon to prevent contained in the gospels, where it might this in dubious cases. In his statutes admitted also in the baptism of infants." 2 This, Mr. Daillé says, was not done till the fourth century.

1 History of the Apostles' Creed, Ed. 5, p. 20.

(P.)

Mosheim, I. p. 172. (P.) Cent. ii. Pt. ii. Ch. iv. Sect. xiv.

It should seem, from the Acts of the Apostles, that it was sufficient to the ceremony of baptism to say, I baptize into the name of Jesus Christ. But we soon find that the form of words used. In imitation of this, it occurred to the Matt. xxviii. 19, was strictly adhered Christians to make a similar use of to, at least in the third century, viz. I baptize thee in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost. It apusual to require of persons before they pears, however, that at the time of were baptized. This creed, therefore, Justin Martyr, they did not always (which does not appear to have been confine themselves to these particular published, and indeed was altered from words, but sometimes added others by time to time, as particular heresies way of explanation. For though these arose in the church,) they now began precise words occur in one account of to call a symbol, affecting to conceal baptism by this writer, in another he it from the Pagans, and not revealing speaks of baptism, "Into the name of it even to the catechumens themselves, Jesus Christ, who was crucified by except just before they were baptized; Pontius Pilate, and into the name of and then it was delivered to them as the Holy Spirit, who foretold by the holy prophets everything relating to Christ." But perhaps this explana-Cyprian says, "that the sacrament tion might be only intended for the use of faith, that is the creed, was not to of his readers, and not given by him as be profaned or divulged," for which he a form of words that was used in the

> We find very little mention made of were generally called fathers, that is, reciting.

It soon became a maxim, that as baptism was a sacrament that was to be used only once, it was exceedingly wrong to re-baptize any person; and it is pleasant to observe the precaution be seen by any person. or instructions he says, "They whose In the second century, baptism was baptism is dubious, ought without performed publicly only twice in the scruple to be baptized, with this proyear, viz. on Easter and Whit-Sunday. testation, I do not re-baptize thee, but In the same age, sponsors or godfathers if thou art not baptized, I baptize were introduced to answer for adult thee," &c. This is the first example persons, "though they were afterwards that I have found of conditional baptism.4

> From the earliest account of the ordinance, we find that children received the Lord's supper, and that baptism

Bdit. Thirlby, pp. 89, 91. (P.)
 Jortin's Remarks, IV. p. 462. (P.)

always preceded communion. In a book of divine offices, written, as some think, in the eleventh century, it is ordained that care be taken that young children receive no food after baptism, and that they do not even give them suck without necessity, till after they have participated of the body of Christ.1

SECTION II.

THE STATE OF OPINIONS CONCERNING BAPTISM, SINCE THE REFORMATION.

It is remarkable that, though the Waldenses always practised infant baptism,2 many of the Albigenses, if not all of them, held that baptism ought to be confined to adults.3 This was the opinion of the Petrobrussians,4 and also of Berenger.5

Wickliffe thought baptism to be necessary to salvation. "The priest," he says, "in baptism administers only the token or sign; but God, who is the priest and bishop of our souls, administers the spiritual grace."6 And Luther not only retained the rite of baptism, but even the ceremony of exorcism. At

<sup>1</sup> Larroche, p. 129. (P.) Smith says that in the Greek Church "they give the eucharist...to new-borninfants, after they have been christened, in case of imminent danger of death." Account, in case of imminent danger of death." Account, p. 161.

2 Leger, Histoire, p. 65. (P.)

3 They said, according to Limborch, "that the baptism of water, made by the church, was of no avail to children; because they were so far from consenting to it, that they wept." Hist. of Inquis. I. p. 44. Mr. Wall says of the Albigenses, that "as France was the first country in Christendom where dipping of children in baptism was left off, so there, first anti-psedobaptism began." Hist. of Inf. Bap. Ed. 3, II. p. 220.

4 Basnage, Histoire, I [b]. p. 140. (P.) The Petrobrussians were named from Peter de Bruys, a native of Dauphiny, who was burnt in 1147.

a native of Dauphiny, who was burnt in 1147.

Nouv. Dict. Hist. I. p. 524. According to Mr.
Wall, he held that the Lord's supper "is no more to be administered since Christ's time." Hist. II.

25 de administered since Circuis value. 1763, 12. 5 Fleury, A. D. 1050. (P.)

6 Gilpin's Life of him, p. 64. (P.) "He opposed the superstition of three immersions; and, in case of necessity, he thought any one present might baptize." Brit. Biog. I. p. 46.

least, this was retained in the greatest part of the Lutheran churches.

It appeared, however, presently after the Reformation by Luther, that great numbers had been well prepared to follow him, and even to go farther than he did. Very many had been so much scandalized with the abuses of baptism, and the Lord's supper especially, as to reject them, either in whole, or in part. The baptism of infants was very generally thought to be irrational, and therefore it was administered only to adults. Most of those who rejected the doctrine of the divinity of Christ were of this persuasion, as was Socinus himself. Indeed, he and some others thought that the rite of baptism was only to be used when persons were converted to Christianity from some other religion, and was not to be applied to any who were born of Christian parents.8 It does not appear, however, that those who held this opinion ever formed a separate sect, or that their numbers were considerable; 9 but those who rejected infant baptism were then, and still are, very numerous.

It happened that many of those who held this opinion entertained some very wild notions, especially that of the reign of Christ, or of the saints, upon earth, independent of any secular power; and they made an attempt to set up a monarchy of this kind at Munster in Westphalia, which they seized upon for that phasia, which they selzed upon for that 7 Mosheim, IV, p. 53. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. iii. Pt. ii. Ch. i. Sect. xliii. Note [I].

8 "De aquæ baptismo ego ita sentio, eum ecclesiæ in perpetuum præscriptum non fuisse, nec unquam, ut illum acciperent, iis præsceptum neque a Christo, neque ab Apostolis fuisse, qui jam ipsi Christo alia quaeunque ratione publice nomen dedissent, vel a primis annis in christiana disciplina educati atque instituti essent." De Ecclesia, Socini Opera, I. pp. 350, 351. See also De Baptismo Aquæ Disputatio, ibid. p. 709, and Toulminis Socinus, pp. 251, 325. Emlyn and Wakefield have adopted the same opinion. Sel Rutt's Priestley! Vol. II. p. 355, Note ad fin.

9 There is, probably, an increasing number, at least among Unitarians, who consider baptism as having no place among professing Christians, such as have already made the profession for which alone the rite of baptism appears to have been instituted. Of the different opinions obaptism now maintained by Unitarians in Great Britain, Mr. Rees has given m succinct and accurate account, in Racov. Cat. p. 257, Note.

was soon put to this delusion, and an odium very unjustly remained upon all those who retained nothing but their doctrine concerning baptism. At preas peaceable as any other Christians. In Holland they are called Mennonites. from Menno, a very considerable person among them; and these have adopted England. In this country the Baptists are very numerous. The greatest part of them are called Particular Baptists, from their holding the doctrine of particular election; but there are a few societies of them who are called General Baptists, from their holding the doctrine of general redemption.

The Church of England retains the baptism of infants, and also the use of the sign of the cross, and of godfathers. It also admits of baptism by women, a practice derived "from the opinion of the indispensable necessity of baptism to salvation. We have that regard to such a common practice," says Bishop Burnet, "as not to annul it, though we condemn it." And indeed it is the language of the public forms of the Church of England, that baptism is necessary to salvation. In the Thirtynine Articles we find the doctrine of an invisible work of God accompanying baptism, as well as the Lord's supper;2 and in the Church Catechism it is said, that by baptism a person becomes a saild of God, and an inheritor of the kingdom of heaven.

The doctrine of the Church of Scotland is of a piece with this. For baptism is said, in their Confession of Faith, rite, or of the Lord's supper.4

purpose, in the year 1534. But an end (C. xxviii.) to be "a sign and seal of the covenant of grace," of a person's "ingrafting into Christ, of regeneration, of remission of sins," &c. But "the efficacy of baptism" is there said sent, those who are called Baptists are not to be "tied to that moment of time wherein it is administered; yet notwithstanding, by the right use of this ordinance, the grace promised is not only offered, but really exhibited and the pacific principles of the Quakers in conferred, by the Holy Ghost, to such, whether of age or infants, as that grace belongeth unto, according to the counsel of God's own will, in his appointed time."

The Dissenters of the Calvinistic persuasion in England may possibly retain the opinion of some spiritual grace accompanying baptism, though I rather think it is not at present held by them. Nothing, however, of it is retained by those who are called rational Dissenters. They consider the baptism of adult persons as the mode of taking upon them the Christian profession; and that when it is applied to infants, an obligation is acknowledged by the parents to educate their children in the principles of the Christian religion. Many of them lay so little stress upon it, that I imagine they would make no great difficulty of deferring it to adult age, or indeed of omitting it entirely in Christian families; but they do not think it of importance enough to make any new sect in the Christian church on account of it, or to act otherwise than their ancestors have done before them, in a matter of so great indifference.3 The Quakers make no use either of this

<sup>1</sup> Expos. Art. xxiii. ad fin. Ed. 4, p. 238.
2 "Sacraments... be certain sure witnesses and effectual signs of grace and God's will towards us, by the which he doth work invisibly in us." Art. XXV

&lt;sup>2</sup> Such indifferents, following the practice of their ancestors without their convictions of duty, deserved my author's censure, which no Christian had a better right to inflict. " See Barclay's Apology, Prop. xii. xiii.

AN

APPENDIX TO PARTS VI. AND VII.

CONTAINING

THE HISTORY OF THE OTHER SACRAMENTS BESIDES BAPTISM AND THE LORD'S SUPPER.

AFTER it was imagined that there was the expression of the seven spirits of proper words accompanying the ad-God, in the book of the Revelation, ministration of them. seven sacraments, in preference to any more fully in other places of this work. other number, or whether it was used already formed, I have not found; nor baptism, another distinct sacrament indeed is the matter of importance was made, and called confirmation. enough to make much inquiry about it. Eugenius is the first pope who Pope Sylvester, had two unctions of mentions these seven sacraments, in his Instructions to the Armenians, which is published along with the de- by the priest, and the other on the crees of the Council of Florence; and Burnet on the Articles, p. 335. (P.) Art. xxv. et proprie se Ed. 4, p. 246. The following is the decision given vii. De Sacre at Trent in 1547: "Si quis dixerit sacramenta Decret. p. 46.

The five additional sacraments are. some divine virtue accompanying the confirmation, penance, holy orders, administration of baptism and the matrimony, and extreme unction. It Lord's supper, and these two rites had is, however, with great difficulty that obtained the name of sacraments, which the Papists bring all these things within only priests regularly ordained had the the description of a sacrament; as they power of administering with effect; say that, in order to constitute one. other things, by degrees, obtained the there must be some matter, correspondsame name, some spiritual grace being ing to water in baptism, and bread and supposed to accompany them; and wine in the Lord's supper (which were this contributed to extend the power a pattern for the rest), and also a set and enlarge the province of the priest- form of words, corresponding to I bap-hood. At length five other ceremonies, tize thee in the name of the Father, &c. besides baptism and the Lord's supper, for baptism, and to the words, This is came to be ranked in the same class my body, for the Lord's supper. The with them. Peter Lombard, in the twelfth cen- divine influence which they supposed tury, is the first who mentions seven to follow the due application of this sacraments. It is supposed that, from matter of the sacraments, and the

there came to be a notion of the seven- I shall give a general account of all fold operation of the Spirit. But these different sacraments, though the whether this was the true origin of subjects of some of them will be treated

From the second unction, which was as an argument in support of an opinion originally an appendage to the rite of

The Church of Rome, in the time of chrism (a composition of olive oil and balm, opobalsamum), one on the breast, crees of the Council of Florence; and the whole doctrine concerning them was finally settled by the Council of Treut.¹

Treut.¹

Treut.¹

Treut.¹

Treut.¹

Treut.¹ aut etiam aliquod horum septem non esse vere et proprie sacramentum; anathema sit." Sess. vii. De Sacramentis. Can. i. Con. Trid. Can. et the time of Gregory I., the priests had been allowed to anoint on the forehead; and Honoré, of Autun, a writer of the twelfth century, informs us, that after the priest had anointed the head, it was covered with a mitre, which was worn eight days, at the end of which it was taken off, and then the bishop anointed the forehead with the chrism. From this time the Church of Rome, seeing that the unction of the bishop was different from that of the priest, and performed at a different time, made of it a sacrament distinct from baptism, and called it confirmation, which can only be administered by the bishop. The first express institution of this sacrament is in the decree of Pope Eugenius, in 1439, in which he says, "the second sacrament is confirmation, the matter of which is chrism blessed by the bishop; .... and though the priest may give the other unction, the bishop only can confer this."1

In administering confirmation in the Church of Rome, the bishop applies the chrism to the forehead, pronouncing these words: "I sign thee with the sign of the cross, and confirm thee with the chrism of salvation, in the name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost."2

In the Church of England the rite of confirmation is preserved, though it is not held to be a sacrament. Also the use of chrism is omitted, but the ceremony can only be performed by the bishop, who puts his hand upon the head of the persons to be confirmed, and prays for the influence of the Holy Spirit upon them, saying, "We have now laid on our hands to certify them, by this sign, of thy favour and gracious goodness.

This is evidently a remainder of the popish sacrament of confirmation. But there is no more authority for this remainder, than for anything that is forehead, by the bishop. But, from omitted in the ceremony. Bishop Burnet, and other advocates for the doctrine and discipline of the Church of England, allege in favour of it the conduct of the apostles, who put their hands upon the heads of those who had been converted and baptized, and thereby imparted to them the gift of the Holy Spirit, or a power of working miracles. But, besides that no such power is now pretended to be conferred, this imposition of hands was the province of the apostles only, and not that of a bishop. This custom of reserving the imposition of hands, after baptism. to be performed by the bishop alone, seems to have been begun in the time of Jerome, but he himself did not think that the Holy Spirit was given by the imposition of the hands of the bishop only; and he says, they are not to be lamented, who, being baptized by presbyters or deacons, in little villages and castles, have died before they were visited by bishops. Hilary says that "presbyters confirmed in Egypt, if the bishop was not present." The same also was determined by the Council of Orange.3

The origin of penance, which is a second additional sacrament now enjoined by the Church of Rome, will be examined in its proper place. It is now considered as a sacrament, in consequence of the confession and the penance that is enjoined, being together the matter of the sacrament; and the words of the priest, I absolve thee from thy sins, in the name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost, is the form of it. After this, the spiritual grace, or the remission of sins, is held to be conferred. The mention of these things, at this day, is a sufficient exposing of them.

The Church of England retains something of this sacrament also, though without the name of one. For. in the rules of confessing the sick, the priest is directed in certain cases to pronounce an absolution; and in the daily prayers of the church, after the

<sup>1</sup> Sueur, A. D. 417. (P.)
2 Burnet on the Articles, p. 336. (P.) "Signo te signo crucis, et confirmo te chrismate salutis, in nomine Patris, Filli et Spiritus Sancti."

Art. xxv. Ed. 4, p. 247.

B Pierce's Vindication, p. 474. (P.)

confession, which begins the service, priest, giving him a power "to offer communions.1

The next sacrament is holy orders, the matter of which is the delivery of the vessels, used in the celebration of the eucharist, from the bishop to the 1 Such was the representation made, on the part of Edward VI., in 1549, to the Devonshire rebels: "As for the service in the English tongue, it perchance seems to you a new service; and yet indeed it is no other but the old, the self-same words in English," &c. Fox's Acts and Mon. II. p. 1189, in Delaune's Plea, 1720, Pt. i.

and yet indeed it is no other but the old, the self-same words in English," &c. Fox's Acts and Mon. II. p. 1189, in Delaune's Plea, 1720, Pt. i. p. 47.

The following passage from "The Life of Archbishop Whitgift," will serve to show how the highest style of Protestant and Papal establishments have been found to assimilate:—"At his first journey into Kent (July, 1589), he rode to Dover, being attended with a hundred of his own servants, at least, in livery, whereof there were forty gentlemen in chains of gold. The train of clergy and gentlemen in the country, and their followers, was above five hundred horse. At his entrance into the town, there happily landed an intelligencer from Rome, of good parts and account, who wondered to see an archbishop, or clergyman, in England, so reverenced and attended: but seeing him upon the next sabbathday after, in the cathedral church of Canterbury, attended upon by his gentlemen and servants (as is aforesaid), also by the dean, prebendaries and preachers, in their surplices and searlet hoods, and heard the solemn music, with the voices and organs, cornets and sackbuts, he was overtaken with admiration, and told an English gentleman of very good quality (Sir Edward Hobby), who then accompanied him, that 'they were led in great blindness at Rome by our own nation, who made the people there believe, that there was not in England either archbishop or bishop, or cathedral, or any church or cedesiastical government; but that all was pulled down to the ground, and that the people heard their ministers in woods and fields, amongst trees and brute beasts: but, for his own part, he protested, that (unless it were in the Pope's chapel) he never saw a more solemn sight, or heard a more heavenly sound.' Well's said the English gentleman, 'I am glad of this your so heard a more heavenly sound.' Well's aid the English gentleman, 'I am glad of this your so heard a more heavenly sound.' Well's aid the English gentleman, 'I am glad of this your so heard a more heavenly sound.' Well's aid the .1699, pp. 105, 106.

something like absolution is pronounced. sacrifices to God, and to celebrate In this the compilers of the English masses for the living and the dead," liturgy followed the method of the adding, as in all the sacraments, in the Popish service; and at the time of the name of the Father, and of the Son, Reformation it might serve to make and of the Holy Ghost. This ceremony the more ignorant of the people believe was not used until after the twelfth that, notwithstanding a change in century, but then this sacrament of other respects, the same things in sub- orders was held to be a thing distinct stance were to be had in both the from the office of priesthood in general, which is said to be conferred by the bishop pronouncing these words, Receive the Holy Ghost. Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted, and whose sins ye retain, they are retained. The imposition of hands by the bishops and presbyters is also kept up among the Catholics; but it is not performed. as formerly, during the pronouncing of any prayer, so that it is become a mere dumb show. The prayer which accompanied the ceremony of imposition of hands is, indeed, still used, but not during the imposition.

In consequence of this new sacrament, the Catholics now say, "that a priest has two powers, of consecrating and of absolving; and that he is ordained to the one by the delivery of the vessels. and to the other by the bishop's laying on of hands, with the words, Receive the Holy Ghost; and they make the bishop's and the priest's laying on hands jointly, to be only their declaring. as by a suffrage, that such a person

ought to be ordained." 2

The third sacrament peculiar to the Church of Rome is matrimony, the inward consent of the parties being supposed to be the matter of it, and the form is, the priest solemnly declaring them to be man and wife, in the name of the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost. But if the inward consent of the parties be necessary to marriage, as a sacrament, there must be great uncertainty in it. One considerable inconvenience that resulted from making marriage a sacrament was, that the bond was held to be indissoluble. In consequence of this, a sentence of only what is called with us, a divorce a mensa et thoro, but does not empower the parties to marry again, which is a kind of divorce unknown in any age or country before. The innocent person, however, was allowed to marry again by the popes Gregory and Zachary, and even "in a synod held at Rome in the tenth century. . . . This doctrine of the absolute indissolubleness of marriage, even for adultery, was never finally settled in any council before that of Trent."1

&lt;sup>2</sup> Burnet on the Articles, p. 354, &c. P.) Art. xxv. Ed. 4, p. 201

The last additional sacrament of the Church of Rome is extreme unction, 2 so called from its being used only on the near approach of death. The form of this sacrament, they say, is the application of olive oil, blessed by the bishop, to all the five senses, using these words, "By this sacred unction may God grant thee his mercy, in whatsoever thou hast offended, by sight, hearing, smelling, tasting, and touching; "3 the priest applying the oil to each of the senses, as he pronounces the name of

The first mention that is made of this ceremony is by Pope Innocent. Sacred oil, indeed, was held in great veneration so early as the fourth century, and esteemed as an universal remedy; for which purpose it was either prepared and dispensed by priests and monks, or was taken from the lamps which were kept burning before the relics of the martyrs. But "in none of the lives of the saints before the ninth century, is there any mention made of their having extreme unction, though their deaths are sometimes very particularly related, and their receiving the eucharist is often mentioned." But "from the seventh century, on to the twelfth, they began to divorce in the ecclesiastical court, is use an anointing of the sick, ... and a peculiar office was made for it; but the prayers that were used in it show plainly that it was all intended only in order to their recovery, and so . . . it is still used in the Greek Church;"4 and "no doubt they support the credit of this with many reports, of which some might be true, of persons that had been recovered upon using it."5

1 Turnet on the Articles, p.360. (P.) Art. xxv. Ed. 4, p. 265.

2 See Doctrina de Sacramento extremæ unctionis.

"But because that failed so often. that the credit of this rite might suffer much in the esteem of the world, they began, in the tenth century, to say that it did good to the soul, even when the body was not healed by it, and they applied it to the several parts of the body," after having originally applied it "to the diseased parts" only. In this manner was the rite performed "in the eleventh century. In the twelfth those prayers that had been formerly made for the souls of the sick, though only as a part of the office (the pardon of sin being considered as preparatory to their recovery) came to be considered as the main and most essential part of it. Then the schoolmen brought it into shape, and so it was decreed to be a sacrament by Pope

"The office requires, that they be no less than "The office requires, that they be no less than seven, and assigns to every one of them their particul, 'employment at that time. But this number is not rigidly exacted, and three oftentimes serve. They only anoint the forehead, ears and hands of sick persons. Several prayers are used at the time of unction, and this particularly among the rest: 'O Holy Father, physician of soul and body, who hast sent thy only begotten Son, our Lord Jesus Christ, to cure all diseases, and to redeem from death; heal thy servant of his infirmity both of body and soul and quicken and to redeem from death; heal thy servant of his infirmity both of body and soul, and quicken him by the grace of thy Christ, for the intercession of our Lady the Mother of God, the ever Virgin Mary, dc., and here they recite the names of several saints... for Thou, O Christ, our God, art the fountain of all healing; and we give the glory of it to thee and to the Father, and to the Holy Spirit, now and for ever. 'After this they give the sick person the holy sacrament, as the last viaticum. The houses of the sick persons are also anointed with the same oil, the figure of a cross being made with it upon the walls and posts: at which ceremony the priest sings the 91st Psalm. This oil is not only used upon persons lying in extremis: for the people, believing that there is great virtue in it to heal the distempers of the body, in case of any sickness or indisposition, that does not bring in danger of death, use it almost in the nature of a remedy or medicine." Smith's Account, pp. 193-195. 5 Burnet, Art. xxv. Ed. 4. pp. 268, 269.

Sess. xiv. Con. Trid, pp. 98-107.

3 "Per hane sacram unctionem, et suam plissin an miser cordiam indulgeat tibi Deus quicquid receasti per visum, auditum, olfactum, gustum et tactum." Rituale Rom. Con. Trid Sess. xiv. Burnet, Exp. Art. xxv. Ed. 4, p. 267.

Eugenius, and finally established at these five additional sacraments are

Trent."1

Notwithstanding the novelty and apparent absurdity of these five additional sacraments, Wickliffe acknowledged all the seven; defining a sacrament to be a visible token of something invisible. He even saw nothing unscriptural in extreme unction.2

It is much to be wished, that as Burnet on the Articles, p. 365. (P.) Art. xxv.

Ed. 4, p. 269,
<sup>2</sup> Gilpin's Life of him, p. 66. (P.) He "only blamed the exorbitant fees which the avarice of the priests of those times exacted for the performance of it." Brit. Biog. I. pp. 46, 47.

now universally abandoned in all the reformed churches, Christians would rectify their notions concerning the remaining two, and not consider them, as they did in the times of popish darkness, to be outward and visible signs of inward and spiritual grace. For that will always encourage the laying an improper stress upon them, to the undervaluing of that good disposition of mind, and those good works, which alone can recommend us to the favour of God, and to which only his especial grace and favour is annexed.

PART VIII.

A HISTORY OF THE CHANGES THAT HAVE BEEN MADE IN THE METHOD OF CONDUCTING PUBLIC WORSHIP.

THE INTRODUCTION.

THE subject of this part of my work nances, &c. is no very important article in the history of the Corruptions of Christianity, because mere forms are but of little consequence in religion, except when they are put in the place of something more substantial; and indeed too much of this will be found to have been the case in this business. It will, however, be a matter of curiosity to many persons, to see what changes have been made from time to time in the forms of Christian worship; and therefore I did not omit to note such particulars concerning it, as happened to fall in my way, but without giving myself much trouble to look for them. It will seem that, in general, tions that led to other things of more for that purpose. importance to the essentials of religion.

on the buildings in which Christian assemblies were held, their appurte-

SECTION I.

OF CHURCHES, AND SOME THINGS BE-LONGING TO THEM.

AT first, Christians could have no places to assemble in but large rooms in private houses; and when they began to erect buildings for the purpose. it is most probable they were such as the Jews made use of for their synagogues; their manner of conducting public worship, as well as their regulations for the government of churches, being copied from the Jews; and, as far as appears, nothing more simple the same spirit dictated these varia- or more proper could have been adopted

Of the buildings themselves we know I shall begin with few observations but little. The names that were originally given to these places of assembly, were the same as those of the Jewish synagogues, viz. Ευκτηρια or Προσευχαι, that is, houses of prayer; but afterwards they were called Kupiaka, and in Latin Dominica, whence came the German word Thom (Dom), and the Flemish and English words Church and Kirk. These buildings were not called temples till the time of Constantine. But about that time, in imitation of the Pagans, they called the magnificent buildings which were then erected for the purpose of public worship by that name. And these being generally made to enclose the tombs of martyrs, these tombs were called altars, on account of their bearing some resemblance to the altars of the heathen temples. And from this came the custom, at the end of the fourth century, of putting bones and other relics of martyrs in all those places which were used for the celebration of the Lord's supper, instead of the wooden tables, which were at first used for that purpose.1

When Constantine ordered the Christian churches to be rebuilt, it was done with great pomp; and before they were used for the purpose of public worship, some ceremony of consecration began to be used. But at first nothing more was done for that purpose, besides singing of psalms, preaching and receiving the Lord's supper, that is, nothing more, in fact, than going through the usual forms of public worship, but probably with greater solemnity and devotion, followed by feasting and other marks of festivity; and it soon became the custom to repeat this festivity on the same day annually.

In 538, it appears, that the dedications of churches were sometimes made by sprinkling of holy water. For in that year Pope Vigilius says that this ceremony was not necessary; it being sufficient for the consecration of churches to celebrate the eucharist, and deposit relics in them. But in 601, Pope Gregory expressly ordered every evil spirit. During the service, that holy water should be added. In 816, a synod was held at Canterbury, in which, besides these things, it was ordered, that the images of the saints, whose names the churches bore, should be painted upon the wall. From the year 1150 they added the signature of the cross, and other figures, on the pavement and walls; and afterwards they traced on the pavement the Greek and Latin alphabet, in the form of a cross; and lastly, they added the litany of the Virgin Mary and other saints.2

That some ceremony, or some peculiar solemnity, should be used on the first making use of any building destined for the purpose of public worship, is natural, and certainly not improper, provided nothing more be implied in it, besides solemnly setting it apart for that particular and valuable purpose; and we find that solemn consecrations were made of the temple of Jerusalem, and of everything belonging to the Jewish religion. But the ceremonies above mentioned show that some peculiar virtue was ascribed to them, and that it was supposed they imparted a character of peculiar sanctity to the building itself. And that the bells in them (which served no other purpose originally, besides that of calling the people together,) should have any form of consecration in churches, is a little extraordinary. This, however, was done with much solemnity by John XIII. in 968.

There having been cast at that time a larger bell than had ever been made before, for the church of Lateran, at Rome, this pope sprinkled it with holy water, "blessed it, and consecrated it to God with holy ceremonies," from which is come the custom of consecrating all bells used in churches, and which the common people call baptizing them. Upon this occasion they pray that when the bell shall sound they may be delivered from the ambushes of their enemies, from apparitions, tempests, thunder, wounds, and many aspersions of holy water, and several unctions on the bells, both within and without; and at each unction they pray that the bell may be "sanctified and consecrated, in the name of the Father, of the Son, and of the Holy Spirit, to the honour of Emanuel, and under the patronage of such or such a saint."1

<sup>1</sup> Sueur, A. D. 211. (P.)

■ Ibid. A. D. 335. (P.)

The idea of this ceremony, as almost of every other that was used by Christians, was adopted from the Pagan ritual, in which there was a solemn consecration of every instrument used in their worship. And indeed there were consecrations for the same purpose of everything that was made use of in the worship of the Jews. But nothing in the heathen ritual can equal the absurdity of this consecration of bells. For besides what is observed before, in order to make this ceremony a more proper baptism, (a name that was first most probably given to it by the vulgar, from the sprinkling of the bell with holy water,) godfathers and godmothers were appointed on this occasion, to answer questions instead of the bell; and they pray that God would give the bell his holy spirit, that it may be sanctified for the purposes above mentioned, and especially for driving away witches and evil spirits, and preventing tempests in the air, which were supposed to be caused by those spirits. The bell had also a name given to it, as in baptism.2 I shall proceed to mention other things which superstition has introduced into Christian churches, and especially such as were borrowed from the Pagan worship.

In Popish churches the first thing

Mosheim, H. p. 350. (P.) [7] "So real a baptism they make of it, that they have godfathers and godmothers, forsooth, which hold the rope of the bell in their hands, who give the bell a name, and are to answer on the bell's behalf, to a name, and are to answer on the Bell's Cenary, to such questions as the bishop or suffragans shall demand of it." See Culdarinus in Tract. de Inter-dict. I. par. No. 79, and Albericas de Rosatis, in Dictionar. in the word Campana. Hist. of Popery, 1735, II. pp. 22, 23.

which is a very long one, they make that we are struck with is a vessel of what is called holy water, into which those who enter dip their finger, and then mark their foreheads with the sign of the cross. This holy water. there can be no doubt, came from the lustral water of the Pagans, as indeed learned Catholics allow. This water was also placed at the entrance of the heathen temples, and those who entered were sprinkled with it. The first express mention made of holy water among Christians, is an epistle of Vigilius, bishop of Rome, written in 538, in speaking of the consecration of churches, as was mentioned above: though some have thought that to have been holy water which Synesius mentions, as placed at the entrance of the churches, for the purpose of washing their hands before prayer.3 Middleton farther observes, that the composition of this holy water is the same with that of the Heathens, viz. "a mixture of salt with common water; and the form of the sprinkling-brush. called by the ancients aspersorium or aspergillum, is much the same with what the priests now make use of."4

A fondness for the sign of the cross was one of the first superstitions of Christians. It was probably first used by way of distinguishing themselves from the Heathens, or to show the Heathens that they were not ashamed of that with which they were most reproached, viz. the crucifixion of their Master. From this constant use of it they began to imagine that there was some peculiar virtue in the thing itself. They also imagined it to be alluded to in many passages of the Old Testament. and various rites of the Jewish religion, and they were also pleased to find the traces of it everywhere else. Hence came the custom of marking themselves with it, which is said to have been first done by the Valentinians. and then by the Montanists, of whom was Tertullian, who makes great boast

Sueur, A. D. 457. (P.)
 Letter from Rome, p. 138. (P.) Works, III.

326.1

Burning wax lights in the day-time was used in many heathen ceremonies, for which they are ridiculed by Lactantius. "The Heathens," says he, "light up candles to God, as if he lived in the dark; and do not they deserve to pass for madmen, who offer lamps to the author and giver of light?" But not long after this, these very wax lights were introduced into Christian worship.2

Another thing that was noted by the early Christians, as peculiar to the Pagans, was incense. But so early as the third century, we find this also made use of in Christian churches. And Middleton says, that "we find not only the incense sellers, but the incense itself, and the thuribulum, taken into the service of the Christian altars, and mentioned by St. Ambrose and St. Chrysostom, as of common use, both in the Eastern and Western empire." 3 But both wax lights and incense were first introduced into the Eastern churches, and from them were adopted in the West.

1 Larroche, p. 538. (P.) Hist. of Popery, I. pp. 31, 32. M. Repes. III. p. 483.
2 "Bn Piglise Romaine, on allume des lampes et des cierges devant les images; et quand les Dévots se trouvent en quelque peril ils vouënt une chandelle à un et familie, si par son moien ils une chandelle à un tel Saint, si par son moien ils en peuvent échapper; témoin cet Irlandois dont parle Pogge Florentin, (in Facetiis,) qui étant sur mer durant la tempeste voua à la Vierge Marie une chandelle de la grosseur du mast du navire, mais quelcun lui aiant dit, Qu'il promettoit plus qu'il ne pourroit effectuer, l'Irlandois lui répondit tout bas, Ne t'én mets pas en peine, si je puis échapper, la bonne Vierge se contentera bien d'une bougie d'un liard." Les Conformites des Chrémonies, p. 195. Erasmus, Collog. Naufrag. tells such a story of a Zealander.

§ Middleton s Letter, Postseript, p. 237. (P.) Middleton introduces this account with the remark, that these ceremonies occurred "after the mark, that these ceremonies occurred "after the establishment of Christianity, when the church, as St. Jerome says, 'declined as much in its virtue as it increased in its power.'" Works, III.

p. 126.

of it. But it does not appear to have Lastly, processions, which are conbeen used in the public offices of re- ducted with great solemnity by the ligion in the three first centuries, or Papists, were also copied from the that crosses, made of wood or metal, heathen worship. Among the Romans were ever used till it was imagined they were instituted by Numa, and that Helena, the mother of Constanboth in the Pagan and Popish procestine, had discovered the true cross in cions the chief magistrates often assisted.4

SECTION II.

OF CEREMONIES IN GENERAL, AND OTHER THINGS RELATING TO PUBLIC WORSHIP.

HAVING made the preceding observa-tions on the places in which the public worship of Christians was performed, and some other things and circumstances belonging to them, I proceed to give an account of what was transacted within the place; but first I shall make a few general remarks on modes and forms in Christian worship.

We may take it for granted, that originally Christians had no proper ceremonies in their worship. But after the sign of the cross, wax lights, and incense were introduced, the ceremonial of Christian worship came to be as complex as that of the Pagan worship had been. So much progress had been made in these things in the time of Austin, that he complained of it, saying that the church was so full of ceremonial observances, that the condition of the Jews under the law was much more supportable. But the church, he says, amidst much straw and tares bears many things. But so much were

4 Ibid. p. 189. (P.) Works, III. pp. 99, 100. "La procession du sacrament est une des plus solemnelles cérémonies de l'Eglise Romaine et qui se fait toutes les années avec une pompe extraordinaire. Elle a été introduite parmi les Chrétiens à l'imitation du Paganisme, comme les Chrétiens à l'imitation du Paganisme, comme Guillaume Du Choul (De la Religion des Anciens Romains) l'a recomu disant, que 'quand les sacrificateurs de la Mère des Dieux faisoient leurs supplications parmi les rues, ils portoient le simulacre de Jupiter; et que par les carrefours étoient dressez des reposoirs pour y mettre son simulacre, ce que l'on fait encore en France,' dit.il, 'à la solemnité de la Fête Dieu.'" Les Conformites, pp. 86, 87.

§ Epist. exix. C. xix. Opera, II. p. 577. (P.) ceremonies multiplied before the ninth was the method of determining most written to explain them.

force uniformity in the methods of in the result of it. worship, it happened unavoidably, that depended upon it; and those of the Rome, leaving out what was most East differed very considerably from offensive. those of the West.

ceremonies chiefly by Gregory the Great, in the sixth century. He had great fertility of invention in this respect, and eloquence to recommend his invenupon others, though perhaps for want rally, if not universally used. of power. Almost every pope in the next century added something new to the ancient rites and institutions; and in the time of Charlemagne, they were propagated through all the Latin churches.

No person urged this business so much as Gregory VII., especially with respect to Spain, where he met with the greatest opposition from the attachment of the people to their ancient Gothic or Mosarabic liturgy. But the Pope carried his point at last, notwithstanding two very remarkable decisions in favour of the Gothic liturgy, at the appointment of the nobles at Castile. They first ordered two champions to fight, one for each of them, when he that was for the Gothic ritual proved to be victorious. They then threw both the missals into the fire, when the Roman was consumed, and the Gothic, they say, was taken out unhurt. Such century, that large treatises were then disputes in those days, viz. by an apritten to explain them. peal, as they thought, to God, either There not being in the early ages of by the sword, or some kind of ordeal, the church any power that could en- depending upon a divine interposition

At length, however, the Roman ritual different customs got established in was universally used in the Western different places. Hence every church church. And the English Reformers, of note had its peculiar ritual, which instead of framing a new liturgy, had was adopted by all the churches that recourse to the offices of the Church of

There can be no doubt but that, ori-The Western church was loaded with ginally, all the parts of public worship were performed in the language that was best understood by the assembly: and as the Latin tongue was best understood by the generality of Christians tions; but he did not impose them in the West, this, of course, was geneafter the irruption of the Northern nations, the knowledge of this language was much less general, and in the tenth or eleventh century it was hardly understood at all. But from this time the use of the Latin tongue was continued for other reasons.

In those dark ages the clergy affected to keep the people in ignorance, and in a state of dependence upon themselves, and wished to make them think that the whole business of reconciling men to God was in their hands. The Scriptures were likewise kept from the people, and the whole service was so loaded with ceremonies, that it had the appearance of a charm, the whole secret and virtue of which was in the breast of the priest; and to continue the service in an unknown tongue contributed greatly to the impression which they wished to make. The Latin tongue still continues to be used in all the Roman Catholic churches, notwithstanding several attempts have been made to remedy this great and glaring evil.

they did. But in case the fire should destroy both the books, then neither of the contending parties should be in the right. We replied, that we ought not to put the Great God to such trifling trials, contrived by the itch of a vain and wanton curiosity, and no ways grounded on any revelation of God's will." Propagation of the Gospel in the East, Pt. i. 1718, Ed. 3, p. 34.

&lt;sup>1</sup> The Danish Missionaries at Tranquebar, in 1706, relate the following circumstances concerning the Malabar Heathens: "Some had the confidence to desire us to-day, that we would thrust a book, containing the principles of our religion, into the fire; and they would do the same with another, containing the rites of their worship. If theirs should happen to be consumed by the fire, they would all turn Christians; but if ours chould undergo that fate, and theirs remain should undergo that fate, and theirs remain unhurt, we should then all come over to them, and entertain the same belief and fancies which

It is not, however, peculiar to the Church of Reme. For it is said that a veneration for antiquity induces the Egyptian Christians to use the Coptic language in their churches. Also the Jacobites and Nestorians use the Syriac language, and the Abyssinians "the old Ethiopic, though all these languages have been long siace obsolete, and.... unintelligible to the multitude." The Greeks also celebrate the Lord's supper in ancient Greek; but this is sufficiently understood by the common people, the modern Greek not being very different from it.

The habits of the elergy could not, originally, have been anything but the usual dress of their respective countries. But it not being thought decent for persons of such grave characters as the clergy to follow new customs and fashions, they retained their old flowing garments, after the Northern nations had introduced the use of short ones. But besides this, the habits of the Pagan priests, which had always been different from those of other persons, at the time of their officiating, were probably imitated by the Christian clergy, though I cannot say that I have met with any particular account of it.

We find, however, that the clergy were distinguished by their habits, while they were officiating, in the time of Sylvester, when mention is made of dalmatics for the deacons, and of a certain cloth with which their left hand was to be covered. The fourth canon of the Council of Carthage prescribed the use of the cope in reading the gospel, and at the time of the oblation only. And Gregory the Great invented newfashioned habits, like those described in the ceremonial law of the Jews.<sup>2</sup>

SECTION III.

OF THE PROPER PARTS OF PUBLIC WORSHIP.

ORIGINALLY Christians met to read the Scriptures, to explain them, or to preach, to sing psalms, to pray, and to administer the Lord's supper. The creed was made use of only at baptism, when it was taught to all the catechumens, who were probably made to recite it after the person who administered the ordinance. Afterwards, when articles of faith were more attended to, and it behoved all the bishops to take care to prevent the growth of heresy, creeds began to be recited by the whole assembly. That this was the true reason of the present practice, is evident from its being the Nicene Creed, and not that of the Apostles, as it is called, that was first used for this purpose. It was also first introduced by Timothy, bishop of Constantinople, who did it in order to make Macedonius, who rejected that creed, more odious to the people. This was in the reign of the emperor Anastasius, who died in 521. About this time this creed was also repeated in the church of Antioch every time the Lord's supper was administered.

Before this time it had been the custom to repeat the creed only the day preceding Good Friday, when catechizing was more solemnly performed, in order to the celebration of baptism on the Easter Sunday following. The repetition of it on that day was first appointed by the Council of Laodicea. But the constant reading of the creed did not take place in the West till about 590, when it was ordered by the Council of Toledo, in imitation of the Eastern churches. At this time it was the Nicene Creed only that was made use of, and for some time it seemed to eclipse that of the Apostles; but afterwards this latter creed recovered its credit.3

<sup>1</sup> Mosheim, H. p. 343. (P.) Cent. xl. Pt. il. Ch. v. Sect. ii. 2 Larroche, p. 539. History of Ancient Ceremonics, p. 32. (P.)

History of the Apostles' Creed, p. 44, &c. (P.)

It will be just worth while to mention a few particulars concerning the posture of the priest and people, during the celebration of the particular parts of public worship.

The usual posture of praying had been standing or kneeling, or, to express great self-abasement and humility, prostration; but a canon had been made (for what reason I have not inquired) to forbid the practice of kneeling on Sundays from Easter to Whitsuntide, which gave rise to the term stations. This, however, was not approved by the Church of Rome.1 When the Scriptures were read, it is probable that the people sat; but in time it became a custom for the people to stand while the gospel was reading. And it is said that Anastasius, bishop of Rome, who died in 402, ordered the priests to stand up, and incline their heads a little. while they read the gospel.2

All the Heathens contrived their temples so that they should pray with their faces towards the East. was introduced into Christian worship about the time of Jerome, though it was not then generally approved of. Pope Leo the Great condemned this custom, because it was much used by the Manicheans.3 By degrees, however, the custom of looking towards the East, during the repetition of the creed, because universal, and likewise the bowing at the name of Jesus, in the repetition of it. This practice was countenanced by the literal interpretation of Phil. ii. 10: At the name of Jesus every knee shall bow. This, however, was thought to be so very idle a superstition, that it was almost universally laid aside at the Reformation. But it is generally practised in the Church of England; and Bishop Laud severely punished those who did not conform to this ceremony in his time.

Singing seems always to have been a part of the public worship of Christians, and followed the reading of the Scriptures. They sung either the psalms of David, or hymns of their own composing. But the former. Mosheim says, were only received among Christian hymns in the fourth century. The singing of these psalms or hymns was also very common with them in their own houses, in the course of the week. But the method of singing by antiphony or anthem, that is, one part of the congregation, as the clergy, singing one verse, and the rest, or the people, singing another, is said to have been introduced about the middle of the fourth century, into the church of Antioch, by Flavianus and Diodorus, and into the church of Constantinople by Chrysostom.4

This method of singing was introduced into the Church of Rome by Celestine, in 418. Afterwards, Gregory the Great composed an antiphoniary for the whole year, with versicles, or responses for every day of it. then appointed the college or choir of singing men, to chant the office. In the fifth century it was the custom in some places to keep up the exercises of singing both day and night, different sets of persons continually relieving

each other.6

Musical instruments were not introduced into churches till the thirteenth or fourteenth century. Thomas Aquinas says, "the church does not use musical instruments to praise God, lest she should seem to judaize." But in 1312, Marinus Sanutus introduced organs into churches:8 and they have been much used ever since, though there have always been persons in all establishments, as well as in particular sects, who preferred a more simple mode of worship; and even, admitting that music might assist in exciting

History of Ancient Ceremonies, p. 17. (P.)
 Sueur, A. D. 402. (P.)
 Ibid. A. D. 443. (P.)

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. A. D. 398. Pierce's Vindication, p. 390.

Filters of Ancient Ceremonies, p. 81. (P.)

5 History of Ancient Ceremonies, p. 81. (P.)

6 Mosheim, I. p. 397. (P.) Cent. v. Pt. ii.

Ch. iv. Sect. ii.

7 Pierce's Vindication, pp. 385, 395. (P.)

8 Jortin's Remarks, V. p. 469. (P.)

that mechanical assistance.

was always read in the course of the mons as they had done before.2 service. Origen is said to have been Scripture in an allegorical way; and by

than had been usual.1

are the sermons of Chrysostom, conpopulace, or pleaded at the bar.

those times depart from the simplicity of the gospel, and so little were they persons to clap their hands, and express their applause by other gestures and vociferations at proper intervals, on signals previously concerted between them and the preacher, or his particular friends.

These set harangues were only occasional, and were by no means delivered every Lord's day, in every Christian church; and in the dark ages, few for the holy catholic church,' &c.; persons being qualified to preach, after which all the people said their sermons became very scarce. At this beads in a general silence," and the day the Roman Catholics meet only, in general, to hear prayers, and to They would besides say a Pater noster, celebrate mass. They have no ser-devotional feelings, did not choose that, mons, except in Lent, on certain festiin general, they should depend upon vals, and on some other particular occasions. It is more particularly In the primitive churches preaching observed, that it was in the ninth was nothing more than the exposition century that the bishops and priests of the Scriptures, a portion of which ceased to instruct the people by ser-service. Origen is said to have been Charlemagne, finding the clergy the first who did this in a more copious absolutely incapable of instructing and diffusive manner, explaining the the people by sermons of their own, or "of explaining, with perspicuity this means introduced longer sermons and judgment, the portions of scripture which are distinguished in the When heathen philosophers and ritual by the name of epistle and gospel, rhetoricians were converted to Chris- ordered Paulus Diaconus and Alcuin tianity, they introduced their custom to compile, from the ancient doctors of haranguing on particular subjects, of the church, homilies, or discourses and particular occasions, and carefully upon the epistles and gospels, which a premeditated or precomposed their stupid and ignorant set of priests sermons; sometimes prefixing to their were to commit to memory, and recite discourses short texts of scripture, to the people. "This gave rise to that probably that they might not pass too famous collection, which went by the suddenly from the old method of inter- title of the Homilianium of Charlepreting the sacred writings, and some- magne, and which, being followed as a times omitting them. In this style model by many productions of the same kind, composed by private persisting of such kind of eloquence as sons, .... contributed much to nourish the Greeks and Romans were fond of the indolence," says Mosheim, "and displaying, when they harangued the to perpetuate the ignorance of a worthless clergy."3 In this, however, as So far did Christian preachers in well as in his other regulations respecting the church, he certainly had the best intentions; and in those influenced by the spirit of Christianity, times it is probable that nothing better that, in imitation of the Grecian could have been done. A scheme of orators, some of them even hired this kind was adopted in England when the present book of homilies was compiled, and appointed to be read in churches.

> "Before the Reformation, after the preacher had named and opened his text, he called on the people to go to their prayers, telling them what they were to pray for. 'Ye shall pray,' says he, 'for the king, for the pope, for the holy catholic church,' &c.; minister, kneeling down, did the same.

<sup>1</sup> Mosheim, I. p. 235. (P.) Cent. iii. Pt. ii. Ch. iv. Sect. ii.

Sueur, A. D. 853. (P.)
 Eccl. Hist. II. p. 84. (P.) Cent. vili. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. v.

Ave Maria, Deus misereatur nostri, Domine salvum fac regem, Gloria Patri, Şc., "and then the sermon proceeded." The manner in which most of the English clergy pray in the pulpit before sermon is still the same, and is what they call bidding prayers, or an exhortation to pray for such and such things. But then no time is allowed for the prayers that are so ordered.

In the primitive church the public prayers followed the sermon, and preceded the celebration of the Lord's supper; and it is evident, from many circumstances, that at first all these prayers were delivered without book, and were such as the bishop, or the priest who officiated, could prepare himself. Justin Martyr says, that the president of the assembly offered prayers and thanksgivings, as he was able, (όση δυναμις αυτφ). Origen also says, "We pray according to our abilities;" and Tertullian, "We pray to God without a monitor, because our prayers flow from our own minds." Basil gives an instance of a variation in his prayer, for which he was blamed by some, as being inconsistent with himself.2

In time, however, partly in order to avoid diversity of opinions, and in part, also, that the congregation might not be offended by prayers prepared by persons who were not capable of doing it with propriety, it came to be the custom to compose the prayers beforehand, and to submit them to the approbation of the principal persons in the church. This was particularly ordered at the third Council of Carthage.<sup>3</sup>

At the Council of Laodicea, held in 364, the same prayers were ordered to be used morning and evening; but, in general, every bishop ordered what prayers he thought proper, till about the time of Austin, when it was ordered that, to prevent heresy, no prayers should be used but by common advice. Thus in time a great variety of liturgies, or forms of celebrating public worship, were in use in different provinces and different sees. The first mention we find of these liturgies is towards the end of the fourth century.

In early times, though the officiating minister delivered the prayers, the people were not entirely silent; for they made small interlocutions or responses, as Lift up your hearts. We lift them up unto the Lord, mentioned by Cyprian: The Lord be with you, and with thy spirit, in the time of

Chrysostom.5

The last circumstance that I shall notice, relating to the forms of public worship, is, that in the primitive church, where the service always ended with communion, there was recited a roll, in which the names of the more eminent saints of the catholic church, and of the holy bishops, martyrs, or confessors, of every particular church, were registered. This was an honourable remembrance of such as had died in the Christian faith. But when the soundness of any person's faith was questioned, his name was not read till that difficulty was removed. Chrysostom having been expelled from the church of Constantinople, it was a long time before his name was inserted in this roll. This was the custom by which, as I have observed before, provision was made for excommunicating persons even after their death.

SECTION IV.

OF FESTIVALS, ETC. IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH.

THE primitive Christians had no festivals besides Sunday, on which they always met for public worship, as may be inferred from Justin Martyr. This Neal's Hist, I. p. 33. (P.) Toulmin's Ed. I. p. 44.

 Pierce's Viadication, pp. 429, 430. (P.)

Sueur, A. D. 397. (P.)
 Neal's Hist. I. p. 37. (P.) 1793, p. 49.
 Pierce's Vindication, p. 426. (P.)

day Constantine ordered to be observed fasted on a Saturday or Sunday, and came to have as many annual festivals was taken from them. as the Heathens themselves. Of the

The first that was observed by Chris-Jewish passover, being the anniversary fixion; but it was a long time before more solemnity, on that day. this fast was extended, as it now is, to before Easter.

was Montanus, who was remarkable Good Friday, is of very great antidegree of fasting, was originally very various, depending upon each person's particular fancy. Irenæus says, that day, some two, and some more; but that the unity of the faith was maintained notwithstanding that variety.

By fasting, the ancients always meant abstaining from meat and drink, from morning till evening; and what Tertullian and others call stations, or half fasts, were those days on which they assembled for prayer in the morning, and continued that exercise till three in the afternoon, when they received the Lord's supper. They never

1 Sueur, A. D. 320. (P.)

as a day of rest from labour; but hus- even thought it a crime to do so, exbandmen were allowed to cultivate the cept on the Saturday before Easterearth on that day.' By degrees, how-day, on which they celebrated the reever, in imitation of the Jews or Hea- surrection of Christ, because, during thens, but chiefly the latter, Christians that time, they said, the bridegroom

Because the time that our Saviour principal of these I shall give a general lay in the grave was about forty hours, this fast was called Quarantana or Quadragesima, and by contraction tians was Easter, on the time of the Quaresme, and Caresme or Carême, which is the French term for Lent. of our Saviour's sufferings, death and Another reason for fasting at this parresurrection. Originally, however, this ticular time was, that many persons was probably a festival, and respected were then preparing for baptism, and the resurrection of our Saviour only; others for communion, which, as superbut afterwards they began to keep a stition prevailed, was frequented more fast, on the anniversary of the cruci- generally, and attended upon with

Even the Montanists only fasted two the whole season of Lent, or forty days weeks in the year, and in these they excepted Saturdays and Sundays.2 The primitive Christians used, in- Lent was first confined to a certain deed, to join fasting to prayer upon number of days in the fourth century. extraordinary occasions; but this was At this time, however, "abstinence always voluntary, and those who en- from flesh and wine was by many tirely omitted it were not censured, judged sufficient for the purposes of The first person who is said to have fasting, and this . . . . opinion prelaid down any express rules for fasting vailed from this time" in the Western church.3 Soon after the time of Terfor his rigour in other respects. How- tullian, Christians began to observe ever, a fast on the anniversary of Wednesdays and Fridays for the pur-Christ's crucifixion, or what we call pose of fasting; and they kept these fasts all the year, except between quity; but both the time, and the Easter and Pentecost, in which time they neither fasted nor kneeled in churches. In 416, Innocent I. ordered that the people should fast on Satursome persons fasted before Easter one days; but the Greeks and all the East paid no regard to this ordinance.4

At the time of the Council of Nice, the week before Easter was called Quarantana, or Lent; though some observed more days, and some fewer, at pleasure; but within forty years after this council, Lent was extended to three weeks.5

"Durandus . . . . tells us Lent was the first Sunday in Lent, and to end fixed at those times of the year which on Easter eve, which time, containing forty-two days, if you take out of them the six Sundays on which it was counted not lawful at any time of the year to fast, then there will remain only thirty-six days; and therefore, that the number of forty days which Christ fasted might be perfected, Pope Gregory (the Great) added to Lent four days of the week before-going. viz. that which we now call Ash Wednesday, and the three days following it;" so that our present Lent is a superstitious imitation of our Saviour's fast of forty days.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. A. D. 206. (P.) * Mosleim, I. p. 324, (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. ii. Ch. iv. Sect. vi. Sueur, A. D. 391. (P.) S Ibid. A. D. 326, 364. (P.)

Before the Council of Nice, there had been a great difference between the Eastern and Western churches about the time of keeping Easter, the Christians in the East following the custom of the Jews, with whom the day on of the Epiphany, which feast only, which the paschal Lamb was killed and not that of the nativity, is obwas always the fourteenth of their month Nisan, on whatever day of the week it happened to fall; but with the Latins, Easter-day had always been the Sunday following, being the anniversary of our Saviour's resurrection. At the Council of Nice, the custom of the Latin church was established; and as astronomy was more cultivated in Egypt, it was given in charge to the bishop of Alexandria, to publish to the other churches the proper time of keeping Easter, by what were called paschal epistles. For the same purpose afterwards the golden number was invented.2

Pentecost was a Jewish festival. celebrated fifty days after the passover; and being likewise distinguished in the Christian history by the descent of the Holy Spirit, it was observed next after Easter, and, as far as appears, about the time of Tertullian. We call it Whitsuntide. These are the only great festivals that Christians were not at liberty to fix where they counted to begin on that which is now pleased. All the other festivals they the Pagans used to observe with the greatest solemnity, with a view to facilitate their conversion to Christianity.

<sup>1</sup> History of Popery, I. p. 186. (P.) 1735, I. p. 100. <sup>2</sup> Hist, of Ancient Ceremonies, p. 44. (P.)

The feast of Christmas, in commemoration of the nativity of Christ, is mentioned by Chrysostom as unknown at Antioch till within ten years of the time of his writing; and therefore he concluded that it had lately been introduced from Rome.3 It was thought to be first observed by the followers of Basilides, and from them to have been adopted by the orthodox, in the fourth century, when the festival of Christ's baptism was introduced; in consequence of which this feast of the nativity was removed from the sixth of January to the twenty-fifth of December: the former retaining the name served in the East.4

Festivals in honour of the apostles and martyrs are all of late date, none of them earlier than the time of Constantine, when magnificent temples were built round the tombs of some of their martyrs; and then the festivals were only held at the places where they were supposed to have suffered.

Vigils were the assemblies of the ancient Christians by night, in the time of persecution, when they durst not meet in the day-time. Afterwards they were observed before Easter, but they were kept not as feasts, which was done afterwards, but as fasts, as appears from Tertullian.

The feast of Ascension was observed about the time of Austin. The feast of Circumcision is first mentioned by Maximus Taurinensis, who flourished in 450; and the feast of Purification was perhaps instituted in the ninth century.5 The feast of Advent is of no

<sup>5</sup> Pierce's Vindication, pp. 512, 513. (P.)

&lt;sup>3</sup> Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 280. (P.) <sup>4</sup> Pierce's Vindication, pp. 509, 510. (P.) See "Christ's Birth mis-timed;... proving that Jesus Christ was not born in December." Phanix 1707, I. p. 114.

III., in the thirteenth century; and in Auvergne, then by all their neigh-

later than the tenth century.1

It was Mamert, bishop of Vienne in fast, and made it universal.4 Gaul, who, about 463, first instituted the fast of Rogation, that is, the prayers that are made three days before the feast of Ascension, that is, the Monday, Thursday; which was expressly conancient church, forbidding all fasting between Easter and Pentecost. This fast of Rogation was generally received in the West presently after the time of this Mamert.2 The bishop of Venice added the processions to them, in imitation of the Lustrationes Ambervales of the Heathens, which were made round their fields, in order to render them fruitful; and these were attended with much intemperance and disorder, being made, no doubt, in all respects, after the Pagan manner.3

Alcinus Avitus, who succeeded Hesychius, the immediate successor of Mamert, in the church of Vienne, describes the occasion of instituting this last in fered much by fire, thunderstorms, earthwild beasts, and other calamities; that on this the bishop of the city ordered the people to fast three days with prayer and repentance, that, by the example of the Ninevites, they might avert the judgments of God. He says that thereupon the anger of God was appeased, and that in commemoration of it. Mamert ordered this fast to be observed every year. His example was soon folearlier authority than that of Innocent lowed, first by the church of Clermont the Vigils of the great festivals are all bours, and afterwards throughout all Gaul. In 801, Leo III. confirmed this

The fast of Ember Weeks, or Jejunia quatuor temporum, was probably instituted a little before Leo the Great, in the middle of the fifth century.5 But Tuesday, and Wednesday before Holy others think that it is not quite certain that he speaks of it.6 Some say that trary to the order established in the Pope Gelasius having ordered that the ordination of priests and deacons should be on the four weeks of Ember, or ember days, viz. the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, after Whitsunday, after the fourteenth of September, and the thirteenth of December, and this ceremony being always conducted with fasting and prayer, it came to be a custom to fast at that time.7

It was upon the idea of the spiritual benefit that would arise from visiting the church of St. Peter at Rome, and also in imitation of the Jewish jubilee, and the secular games among the Romans, that the popish jubilee is founded. This festival, which is celebrated with his homily on the Rogation. He there the utmost pomp and magnificence, was says that the city of Vienne had suf- instituted by Boniface VIII., in the year 1300, in consequence, as it is said, quakes, extraordinary noises in the of a rumour, the origin of which is not night, prodigies, signs in the heavens, known, which was spread among the inhabitants of Rome, in 1299, that all who within the limits of the following year, should visit the church of St. Peter, would receive the remission of all their sins; and that this privilege would be annexed to the same observance every hundredth year.8

<sup>1</sup> Sueur, A. D. 392. (P.) 2 Ibid. (P.) 2 Ibid.

<sup>2</sup> flyid. (P.)

3 See Tibullus, L. ii. El. ii. Virgil, Ecl. line
74, 75. "Il y avoit parmi les anciens Romains un jour dedie pour faire ces processions, assavoir le 25 d'Avril, qu'ils nommoient Rubigulia, c'est-à-dire, la fête des nielles, parce qu'ils faisoient des sacrifices et des prières aux Dieux, y afin qu'ils conservassent les bleds de cet accident là. Dans l'Eglise Romaine on fait la même cérémonie le même jour qui est la Fête de S. Marc."
Les Conformites des Cérémonies, pp. 95. 96.

<sup>4</sup> Sueur, A. D. 462, 463. (P.) 5 Pierce's Vindication, p. 529. 6 Sueur, A. D. 392. (P.)

<sup>5</sup> Pierce's Vindication, p. 529. (P.)
6 Sueur, A. D. 392. (P.)
7 Hist. of Ancient Ceremonies, p. 67. (P.)
8 "La plus solemnelle Fête des anciens Romains étoit celle des jeux qu'ils appelloient séculiers, qui ne se devoit célébrer q'une fois about d'un siècle... A cela a succedé en l'Eglise Romaine le grand Jubilé qui fut institué par Boniface VIII... On invita tous les Chrétiens de venir à Rome, et afin de les y attirer on promit à ceux qui dans l'année viendroient visiter les Temples des Apètres, l'entiere rémission de leurs péchez non seulement quant à la coulpe, mais aussi quant à la peine." Les Conformitez, pp. 109, 110.

is called a holy year; but, as the author of the Histoire des Papes observes, it crilege, impiety, debauch and superstition.2

Many of these festivals have been retained by the reformers, especially those of Easter, Whitsuntide and Christmas, article.4 and, like the Papists, they observe them with more strictness than they do the Sundays.

Our Established Church has by no means thrown off the popish superstition with respect to fasting. The fast days in the Church of England, are all the Fridays in the year except Christmas-day, all the days in Lent,

1 Hist. of Ancient Ceremonies, p. 67. (P.) 2 Vol. V. p. 409. (P.)

The successors of Boniface added a which, besides Fridays, are thirty-three. number of new rites and inventions to six more in the Ember weeks, three this superstitious institution, and find-Rogation days, and the thirtieth of ing by experience that it added lustre January. The sum of all the festival to the Church of Rome, and increased days is thirty-one. And if to these we its revenue, they made its return more add the ninety-five fast days, fifty-two frequent. In 1350, Clement VI. ordered Sundays, and twenty-nine saints' days, that the jubilee should be celebrated all the days in year appropriated to every fifty years, on pretence that the religious exercises, besides vigils, will be Jews did the like, and Paul II., in the one hundred and seventy-eight; and fifteenth century, reduced the term to making allowance for some of them in-twenty-five years. This year of jubilee terfering with others, they will be about one hundred and seventy.3

In so little esteem, however, are these should rather be called the year of sa- observances held by the more enlightened members of the established church. that there can be no doubt but that, when any reformation takes place, a great retrenchment will be made in this

Pierce's Vindication, p. 508. (P.)
The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in 1689, <sup>4</sup> The Ecclesiastical Commissioners, in 1889, proposed to the Convocation "a new calendar," in which were "omitted all the Legendary Saints' Days, and others not directly referred to in the service book," and "that a rubric be made, declaring the intention of the Lent Fasts, to consist only in extraordinary acts of devotion, not in distinction of meats." Calamy, Abridgment of Baxter, &c. Ed. 2, I. p. 453.

"Our Calender, every man of judgment will allow, does greatly need revising and reforming. The observations upon the subject are so well

The observations upon the subject are so well known, that they need not be here repeated." Free and Cand. Disquis. 1750, Ed. 2, p. 154.

PART IX.

THE HISTORY OF CHURCH DISCIPLINE.

THE INTRODUCTION.

THE changes which the discipline of the of attention to the subject. Christian church underwent from the chose to avail themselves of them. On this account I have given a good deal

To many persons, I doubt not, this will time of the apostles to the Reforma- be as interesting an object as anything tion, were as great, and of as much in the history of Christianity, and to inimportance in practice, as the changes troduce it in this place will make the in any other article relating to Chris- easiest connection between the two great tianity. From being highly favourable divisions of my work, I mean the corto good conduct, the established maxims ruptions of doctrine, and the abuses of of it came at length to be a cover for power in the Christian church. It will every kind of immorality, to those who also serve to show in what manner these departures from the Christian system promoted each other.

SECTION I.

THE HISTORY OF CHURCH DISCIPLINE, IN THE TIME OF THE CHRISTIAN FATHERS.

In the purer ages of the church, the offences which gave public scandal were few; but when they did happen, they were animadverted upon with great For, as many enormities were laid to the charge of Christians, they were exceedingly solicitous to give no just cause of obloquy. It is, indeed, probable, that some time after the apostolic age, the morals of the Christians in general were more strict than we find, by the writings of the apostles, they were in their own times. Nor is it to be wondered at, when we consider that the whole body of the Gentile Christians, being then newly converted from Heathenism, must have retained many of their former habits, or have easily relapsed into them.

Afterwards, most of the cases of scandal we meet with relate to the behaviour of Christians in the time of persecution, from which many shrunk or fled, in a manner that was exceedingly and justly disapproved by the more severe. Consequently, after a persecution, there was much to do about the re-admission to the privileges of church communion, of those who repented of their weakness; and it was a great part of the business of the councils in the fourth and fifth centuries (which was after the establishment of Christianity) to settle rules concerning the degrees of penance, and the method of receiving penitents into the church. besides the cases of those who had shrunk from persecution, the governors of Christian churches at that time must have had many offences of other kinds to animadvert upon; considering that Christianity had then the countenance of the civil powers, and, therefore, that people of all ranks, and of all characters, would naturally crowd into it. On these accounts they found it necessary to have a very regular system of discipline.

In general, we find that, about the third and fourth centuries, Christians distinguished four orders of penitents. The first stood at the entrance of the church, begging in the most earnest manner the prayers of all that went The second were admitted to enter, and to hear the lectures that were given to the catechumens, and the exposition of the Scriptures, but they were dismissed, together with the catechumens, before the celebration of the eucharist. The third lay prostrate in a certain place in the church, covered with sackcloth, and after receiving the benediction of the bishop, and the imposition of hands, were also dismissed before the celebration of the eucharist. The fourth order attended that celebration, but did not partake of it. Penitents having passed through all these orders, were admitted to communion by the imposition of the hands of the bishop, or of a priest, in the presence of the whole congregation.

If any persons relapsed into the same fault for which they had been excommunicated, or excluded from the congregation of the faithful, they were not re-admitted to communion, except in the article of death; but towards the end of the seventh century the ancient discipline began to be relaxed in this respect, and they admitted persons to communion after a second offence. In all times there were some crimes for which no repentance could make atonement, so that persons who had been once guilty of them could never be admitted to the peace and communion of the church. These were murder, adultery, and apostacy. In this manner, at least, were these crimes stigmatized, in many churches.

But about the third century, Pope verer penalty, came of their own accord the character of penitents, were often we shall see enough in a later period. But at this time there was not much to improper interference of these confescases.

Equally innocent was the business of confession, as it was first begun; but we see in the course of this history, that it is no uncommon thing for an innocent beginning to lead to a fatal catastrophe. The apostle Paul exhorts ment of God only. This arose from Christians to confess their sins one to the rigour of Tertullian and the Monthat we must forgive, as we hope to be Church of Rome still keeps up this forgiven. Upon this was grounded the rigorous discipline in cases of heresy, custom of the primitive churches, to the relapsed being delivered to the require every person who was excom- secular arm, without being admitted municated, to make a public confession to penance. of his guilt before he was re-admitted to Christian communion. In some cases, Nice, that those who apostatized before also, a public confession prevented ex- baptism should not be admitted to the communication. It was, likewise, the communion of the church till after custom for many conscientious persons three years of penance, but if they had to confess their private sins to some of been of the faithful, the penance was the priests in whom they could put the to continue seven years. Basil decided, greatest confidence, and whose advice that for the crime of fornication, a man and prayers they wished to have; and ought to do penance four years. Others what was at first a voluntary thing, for the same offence imposed a penance was afterwards, but indeed long after- of nine years, and for adultery eighteen wards, imposed as a positive duty.

Confession was also much encouraged by another circumstance. Many canons rigour; and the relaxation did not made a difference in the degree and begin by lessening the time of penance time of penance, between those who had (except in those cases in which the accused themselves, and those against confessors had improperly interfered), whom their crimes were proved. Many persons, therefore, to prevent the se-

Zephyrinus began to relax a little of to confess their sins; and this was much this discipline, admitting adulterers to encouraged, and the virtue of it magcommunion after some years of pen-nified by the writers of those times. ance, in which he was vehemently op- This confession was, originally, always posed to Tertullian. However, in the made in public, but some inconveniences time of Cyprian, the penalties imposed being found to attend this (especially by the bishop, which were always a when the crimes affected other persons. public appearance for a certain time in or the state) a private confession was appointed instead of it. In this case relaxed, or abridged, at the intreaty of the bishop either attended himself, or the confessors, or those who had been appointed some particular priest, who destined to martyrdom; and this was from this office got the title of penicalled indulgence, of the abuse of which tentiary priest, to receive these confessions.

The difficulty of re-admission to the complain of in this business, except the privileges of church communion was. in general, very great, and the penances sors, and the too great influence which imposed were exceedingly rigorous, and they were allowed to have in such this, in the end, was one great cause of the total relaxation of all discipline.

Novatian particularly distinguished himself by refusing to admit to communion any who had been guilty of the greater crimes, especially that of apostacy, leaving them to the judganother; and our Saviour assures us tanists; and it is observable that the

> It was ordained by the Council of vears.2

> Hitherto we have seen nothing but

Sueur, A. D. 325. (P.)
 Basnage, Histoire, I. p. 189. (P.)

but first in the manner of making the were suffered to do penance secretly of it.

peror Decius, the orthodox bishops, Socrates says, appointed that the penitents should make their confessions to one particular priest, and that they should make a public confession of such things only as should be thought proper for public hearing. This custom continued in the Eastern church till the year 390, when Nectarius, the bishop of Constantinople, abolished the office of penitentiary priests, on account of a woman having been enticed to commit adultery with a deacon of the church, whilst she stayed to perform the duties of fasting and prayer, which had been enjoined her." From this time all confessions, public and private, seem to have been discontinued in the Greek church; and at this day, it is said, that the Greeks make confession

In the Western church public confession continued till the fifth century, but at that time those offenders who had been used to make public confession of their crimes, were allowed by Leo the Great to confess them privately to a priest appointed for that purpose. By this means a great restraint upon vice was taken away, and the change was as pleasing to the sinner, as it was advantageous to the priests in several respects. Of this, many persons at that time were sufficiently aware; and we find that in 590. a council held at Toledo, forbade confession to be made privately to a priest, and ordered that it should be made according to the ancient canons.

To confession in private soon succeeded the doing penance in private, which was another great step towards the ruin of the ancient discipline, which required, indeed, to be moderated, but in a different manner. In the fifth century, however, penitents confession, then in the place of pe- in some monastery, or other private nance, and lastly, in the commutation place, in the presence of a few persons, at the discretion of the bishop, or of After the persecution under the em- the confessors, after which absolution also was given in private. This was the only method which they ventured to take with those who would not submit to the established rules of the church. "But in the seventh century, all public penance for secret sins was taken quite away. Theodore, archbishop of Canterbury, is reckoned the first of all the bishops of the Western church" who established this rule.2

Had Christians contented themselves with admonishing and finally excommunicating those who were guilty of notorious crimes, and with requiring public confession, with restitution in case of injustice, and left all private offences to every man's own conscience, no inconvenience would have arisen from their discipline. But, by urging too much the importance of confession. and by introducing corporeal austerities, as fasting, &c., as a proper mode of penance, and then changing these for alms, and, in fact, for money, in a future period, they paved the way for the utter ruin of all good discipline, and at length brought it to be much worse than a state of no discipline at However, we have yet seen but the first steps in this fatal progress.

SECTION II.

OF THE STATE OF CHURCH DISCIPLINE IN THE DARK AGES, AND TILL THE REFORMATION.

WE have seen several symptoms of the change and decay of discipline in the last period; but in this we shall see the total ruin of it, in consequence of the increased operation of the same causes, and the introduction of several new ones.

See Burnet, Art. xxv. Ed. 4, pp. 253, 254.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Burnet, p. 346. (P.) Art. xxv. Ed. 4, p. 254.

After the introduction of private confession, it was complained by a council held at Châlons-sur-Saone, in 813, that persons did not confess their offences fully, but only in part; and, therefore, they ordered, that the priest should make particular inquiry, under such heads as were thought to include the principal vices that men were addicted to. At this time, however, confession was not reckoned necessary to salvation, and was not made in order to obtain absolution of the priest, but to inform persons how they ought to of new injunctions and rites.3 conduct themselves with respect to God, in order to obtain pardon of him; and therefore the fathers of this council say that confession to God purges sin, but confession to the priest teaches

how sins are purged.1

This business of confession to priests, before it was held to be of universal obligation, gave rise to a new kind of casuistry, which consisted in ascertaining the nature of all kinds of crimes, and in proportioning the penal-This improvement is ties to each. ascribed to Theodore, archbishop of Canterbury, above mentioned, who, in a work entitled The Penitential, regulated the whole business of penance, distinguishing the different kinds of crimes, and prescribing forms of consolation, exhortation and absolution, adapted to each particular case. From Britain these regulations were soon introduced into all the western provinces. and the Penitential of Theodore became a pattern for other works of the same nature. But in the next century this discipline greatly declined, and gave way to the doctrine of indulgences.2

However, what is now properly called auricular confession was not fully established, and made of universal obligation, before the thirteenth century, when Innocent III. appointed it by his own authority, in a Lateran Council. This doctrine, as it is now received in the Church of Rome, requires "not only a general acknowledgment, but a particular enumeration of sins and [of] follies," and is appointed to be made to a proper priest once at least every year, by all persons who are arrived at years of discretion. Before this law of Innocent, "several doctors had considered confession as a duty ... of divine authority," but it "was not publicly received as a doctrine of the church." This law occasigned the introduction of a number

It being notorious to all persons, that all useful church discipline was lost at the time of the Reformation, it was thought proper at the Council of Trent to do, or at least to seem to do, something in the business; and therefore it was ordered that scandalous offenders should do public penance, according to the ancient canons, and that the bishops should be judges of it.4 But things had gone on so long in a different train, that it does not appear that anything was done in consequence of it.

Together with this change in the business of confession, other causes were at the same time operating to the corruption of church discipline, but nothing contributed to it more than the stress which was then laid upon many things foreign to real virtue, and which were made to take the place of it. Of this nature were the customary devotions of those days, consisting in the frequent repetition of certain prayers, in bodily austerities, in pilgrimages, in alms to the poor, and donations to the church, &c. These were things that could be ascertained, so that it might be known with certainty whether the party had conformed with the penalty or not; whereas a change of heart and of character was a thing of a less obvious nature, and indeed not much attended to by

&lt;sup>1</sup> Sueur, A. D. 813. (P.) <sup>2</sup> Mosheim, II. p. 26. (P.) Cent. vii. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. v.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. III. pp. 93, 94. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. ii. 4 Sess. xxiv. Cap. viii. "Publice peccantes publice pecmiteant, ni Episcopo aliter videat ur." S. Con. Trid. p. 214.

"About the end of the eighth century the commutation of penance began, and instead of the ancient severities, vocal prayers came to be all that was enjoined. So many Paters (or repetitions of the Lord's Prayer) stood for so many days of fasting; and the rich were admitted to buy off their penance under the decenter name of giving alms. The getting many masses to be said, was thought a devotion by which God was so much honoured, that the commuting penance for masses was much practised. Pilgrimages and wars came on afterwards."1

The immediate cause of this commutation of penances was the impossibility of performing them, according to the canons of the Church; since, in many cases, it required more time than the term of human life. For instance, a ten years' penance being enjoined for a murder, a man who had committed twenty murders, must have done penance two hundred years; and therefore some other kind of penance was judged absolutely necessary; and the person who was chiefly instrumental in settling the commutations of penance was one Dominic, who communicated them to the celebrated Peter Damiani, whose authority in the age in which he lived was very great.

By them it was determined that a hundred years of penance might be compensated by twenty repetitions of the psalter, accompanied with discipline, that is, the use of the whip on the naked skin. The computation was made in the following manner. thousand strokes with the whip were judged to be equivalent to a year of penance, and a thousand blows were to be given in the course of repeating ten psalms. Consequently, all the psalms, which are one hundred and fifty, were equivalent to five years of penance, and therefore twenty psalters to one hundred years. It is amusing enough 1 Burnet, p. 346. (P.) Art. xxv. Ed. 4, p. 254.

the generality of confessors at that at this day, and in a Protestant country, to read that Dominic easily dispatched this task in six days, and thus discharged some offenders for whom he had undertaken to do it. Once, at the beginning of Lent, he desired Damiani to impose upon him a thousand years of penance, and he very nearly finished it before the end of the same Lent. Damiani also imposed upon the archbishop of Milan a penance of a hundred years, which he redeemed by a sum of money, to be paid annually.<sup>2</sup> Though Peter Damiani was the great advocate for this system of penance, he did not deny the novelty of it.3

Fleury acknowledges that when the penances were made impossible, on account of the multitude of them, they were obliged to have recourse to compensations and estimations, such as these repetitions of psalms, bowings, scourgings, alms, pilgrimages, &c., -things, as he observes, that might be performed without conversion. However, in a national council in England, held in 747, penances performed by others were forbidden.4 This enormity was too great to be admitted even in these ignorant and licentious ages; but it must have gained some considerable ground before it was checked by public authority.

monks becoming confessors contributed greatly to the ruin of ecclesiastical discipline. They, knowing nothing of the ancient canons, introduced a certain casuistry by which many crimes were excused, and abso-

2 Fleury, A. D. 1059. (P.)
3 Ibid. (Vol.] XIII. [Paris, 1742.] p. 100. (P.)
[A. D. 1062.].
4 Ibid. p. 43. (P.) [Ed. Vidal. Paris, 1836.
Tom. IV. pp. 142-3. (F. A. D. 745.]. This council was held at Cliffe, in Kent. A rich layman, who had been excommunicated, employed several persons to fast, on his account, and these were so numerous, that he computed their austerities as equal to a penance of three hundred years, as equal to a penance of three hundred years, as equal to a penance of three hundred years, endured by himself. Against this penitence, by proxy, a canon was issued, "lest salvation should become more easy to the rich than to the poor, contrary to the express declaration of Jesus Christ." At the same council, the priests were ordered to teach the people the Apostles' Creed and the Lord's Prayer in English. See Rapin, Histoire, L. iii. Conciles, Ed. 1724, 4to.I.pp. 266, 267. lution was made easy in all cases, no criminals, of all kinds. Complaint does not make his confession, and congularly, he is excommunicated, and at length declared suspected of heresy, and prosecuted according to law.1 which was a custom borrowed from reformed that abuse.4 Paganism; this right of asylum being to public justice a criminal who had any person who was capable of screening him. This privilege was, of course, extended to the temples, which were considered as the houses of their gods; and so sacred was it esteemed, that, in cases of the greatest criminality, all in different parts of the country. that it was thought lawful to do, was to take off the roof of the temple, and leave the wretch who had taken refuge in it to perish with hunger and the inclemency of the weather.

The abuse of this right of asylum, when it was transferred to Christian churches, was complained of by Chrysostom, who persuaded the emperor to revoke the privileges which had been people then valued themselves on granted by his predecessors. But they were restored, extended, and established afterwards, especially by Boniface V., in the seventh century, and were the But in later times much more stress subject of great complaints in many countries, especially in England, where eighth century pilgrimages began to the churches and churchyards were in a magner crowded with debtors and persons being ever refused, or put off, being made on this subject in the time after ever so many relapses. This of Henry VII., the Pope ordered, that relaxed casuistry is the most prevalent if any person who had taken refuge in in those countries in which the inqui- an asylum should leave it, and commit sition is established, where, if a person a new crime, or repeat his old one, he should be deprived of the privilege.3 sequently receive his absolution, re- It must be observed that crosses on the public road, and various other things and places, which had the reputation of being sacred, had, by degrees, got Another thing that greatly promoted this privilege of asylum, as well as the ruin of discipline, and the encou- churches. In later times, any crimi-ragement of licentiousness, in the mid- nal was safe from the pursuit of dle ages, was the protection given to justice within the precincts of the criminals, who took refugein churches, palace of any cardinal; but Urban V.

Among the Jews the privilege of transferred from the heathen tem- asylum was a wise institution, and ples to Christian churches by the came in aid of the principle of justice; first Christian emperors. In the bar- as it only protected a person who barous times of antiquity, the rights pleaded that he had killed another inof hospitality were held so sacred, that advertently, so that the relations of it was even deemed wrong to give up the deceased could not hurt him, till a regular inquiry had been made into thrown himself under the protection of the fact; but he was delivered up to justice if it appeared that the murder was a wilful one. Besides, this asylum was not granted to the temple in particular, but to certain towns, most conveniently situated for that purpose,

Another source of great corruption in discipline was the abuse of pilgrimages. These were undertaken at first out of curiosity, or a natural reverence for any place that had been distinguished by important transactions. They began to be common about the fourth century, and it appears by the writers of that time, that some weak having seen such places, and imagined that their prayers would be more favourably heard there than elsewhere. was laid upon these things, and in the be enjoined by way of penance, and at length the pilgrimage was often a

Fleury's Eighth Discourse, p. 42. (P.)
 Mosheim, II. p. 28. (P.) Cent. vii. Pt. ii.
 Ch. iv. Sect. ii.

Histoire des Papes, IV. p. 273. (P.)
 Momoires pour la Vic de Petrarch, III. p. 676.

warlike expedition into the holy land, occasioned of the ancient canonical or service in some other of the wars penance. For a man who was not able in which the ambition of the popes to serve in the Crusades was allowed was interested. By this means all the to have the same benefit by contriuse even of the pilgrimage itself, as a buting to the expenses of those who penance, was wholly lost. For, as did. Though the Crusades are over, the Mr. Fleury observes, a penitent march- canonical penances are not returned.3 ing alone was much more free from these expeditions.1 a penance.

been the custom to confine penitents opportunity of relapsing into their offences; but in this century pilgrimto be enjoined under the idea that penitents should lead a vagabond life, like Cain. This, however, was soon abused; as, under this pretence, penitents wandered about naked, and loaded with irons, and therefore it was forbidden in the time of Charlemagne. But still it was the custom to impose upon penitents pilgrimages of established reputation, especially those to the holy land, to which there was a constant resort from all parts of Europe. This was the foundation of the Crusades.2

Of all the consequences of the Crusades, the most important to religion was the discontinuance which they Fleury also observes, that plenary temptation to sin than one who went indulgences had their origin with the to the wars in company; and some of Crusades; for till then it had never these penitents even took dogs and been known that, by any single work, horses along with them, that they the sinner was held to be discharged might take the diversion of hunting in from all the temporal punishments that might be due from the justice of Solitary pilgrimages were, however, God. Commutations of penance for much in fashion, and we find some pilgrimages to Rome, Compostella, or very rigorous ones submitted to by Jerusalem, had been in use before, and persons of great eminence in those to them, he says, the Crusades added superstitious times; when it was a the dangers of war.<sup>4</sup> Besides the wars maxim that nothing contributed so against the Mahometans, the Crusamuch to the health of the soul as the ders, in the course of their expeditions. mortification of the body. In 997, an had frequent differences with the emperor of Germany, by the advice Greek emperor; and then the preserof the monks, went barefoot to Mount vation of the Roman empire against the Garganus, famous for the supposed schismatical Greeks was held to be as presence of the archangel Michael, as meritorious as fighting against the Turks themselves; and this merit was Before the eighth century it had soon applied to all wars which the popes esteemed to be of importance near the churches, where they had no to religion, especially those against heretics, as the Albigenses in France.5

As it was the abuse of indulgences ages, and especially distant ones, began that was the immediate cause of the Reformation by Luther, it may be worth while to go a little back to consider the rise and progress of them. It has been observed in a former period, that all that was meant by indulgences in the primitive times, was the relaxation of penance in particular cases, especially at the intercession of the confessors. From this small beginning, the nature of it being at length quite changed, the abuse grew to be so enormous, that it could no longer be supported; and the fall of it occasioned the downfall of a great part of the Papal power.

As an expression of penitence and humiliation, a variety of penances, and some of them of a painful and whim-

Fleury's Sixth Discourse, p. 27. (P.)
 Ibid. (Vol.) XIII. [1742] p. 22. (P.) [Ed. Vidal, Tom. IV. pp. 135-6.]

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. p. 29. (P)
4 Ibid. Sixth Discourse, p. 6. (P.)
5 Ibid. Sixth Discourse, p. 16. (P.)

sical nature, had been introduced into power of dispensing. This doctrine or indulgences, and thereby raised the church. great sums of money. In the twelfth the temporal pains and penalties to which sinners had been subjected, they went at length so far as to pretend to abolish the punishment due to wickedness in a future state.

rates was published, in which the sums that were to be paid into the apostolical chamber for absolution for particular crimes were precisely stated. This practice entirely set aside the use of the books called Penitentials, in which the penances annexed to each crime were registered.

So long as nothing was pretended to be remitted but the temporal penances which it had been usual to enjoin for certain offences, no great alarm was given, and no particular reason was thought necessary for the change; the payment of a sum of money being a temporal evil, as well as bearing a number of lashes, or walking bare-foot, &c.; and this commutation was admitted with more ease, as it was pretended, that all the treasure raised by this means was applied to sacred uses, and the benefit of the church. But when the popes pretended to remit the future punishment of sin, and to absolve from the guilt of it, some other foundation was necessary; and this they pretended to find in the vast stock of merit which had accrued to the church from the good works of saints and martyrs, besides what were necessary to insure their own salvation. These pretended merits still belonged to the church, and formed a treasure, which the popes had the the discipline of the church. At first was greatly improved and reduced they were voluntary, but afterwards into a system by Thomas Aquinas. they were imposed, and could not be And afterwards, to the merits of the dispensed with but by the leave of the saints and martyrs were added, those bishop, who often sold dispensations of Christ, as increasing the treasure of

Among other things advanced by century the popes, observing what a Cardinal Cajetan in support of the source of gain this was to the bishops, doctrine of indulgences, in his conlimited their power, and by degrees troversy with Luther on the subject, drew the whole business of indul- he said, that "one drop of Christ's gences to Rome. And after remitting blood being sufficient to redeem the whole human race, the remaining quanity that was shed in the garden. and upon the cross, was left as a legacy to the church, to be a treasure from whence indulgences were to be drawn, To complete this business, a book of and administered by the Roman pontiffs."1

Though in this something may be allowed to the heat of controversy, the doctrine itself had a sanction of a much higher authority. For Leo X., in 1518, decreed, that the popes had the power of remitting both the crime and the punishment of sin, the crime by the sacrament of penance, and the temporal punishment by indulgences, the benefit of which extended to the dead as well as to the living; and that these indulgences are drawn from the superabundance of the merits of Jesus Christ and the saints, of which treasure the

Pope is the dispenser.2

This Leo X., whose extravagance and expenses had no bounds, had recourse to these indulgences, among other methods of recruiting his exhausted finances; and in the publication of them he promised the forgiveness of all sins, past, present, or to come; and however enormous was their nature. These he sold by wholesale to those who endeavoured to make the most of them; so that passing, like other commodities, from one hand to another, they were even hawked about in the streets by the common pedlars, who used the same artifices to raise the price of these commodities, as of any other in which they dealt.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mosheim, III. p. 311. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. ■ Ch. ii. Sect. ix. <sup>2</sup> Histoire des Papes, IV. p. 407. (P.)

One Tetzel, a Dominican friar, particularly distinguished himself in pushing the sale of these indulgences. Among other things, in the sermons and speeches which he made on this occasion, he used to say, that, if a man had even lain with the mother of God. he was able, with the Pope's power, to pardon the crime; and he boasted "that he had saved more souls from hell by these indulgences, than St. Peter had converted to Christianity by his preaching." 1 There would be no end of reciting the blasphemous pretensions of the venders of these indulcrimes, the number of persons benefited by them, or the time to which they extended. Bishop Burnet had seen an indulgence which extended "to ten hundred thousand years." Sometimes indulgences were "affixed to particular churches and altars, to particular times or days, chiefly to the year of jubilee. They are also affixed to such things as may be carried about," with a person, to "Agnus Dei's, to medals, to rosaries and scapularies. They are also affixed to some prayers, the devout saying of them being a means to procure great indulgences. The granting these is left to the Pope's discretion."2

Such scandalous excesses as these excited the indignation of Luther, who first preached against the abuse of indulgences only, then, in consequence of meeting with opposition, against indulgences themselves, and at length against the papal power which granted them. Before this time the Council of Constance had, in some measure, restrained the abuse of indulgences, and particularly had made void all those that had been granted during the schism." But it appears, that, notwithstanding these restraints, the abuses were greater than ever, in the time of Leo X.

<sup>1</sup> Mosheim, III. p. 304. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. i. Ch. ii. Sect. iii. Note [o].

Histoire, p. 566.

The Council of Trent allowed of indulgences in general terms, but forbade the selling of them, and referred the whole to the discretion of the Pope; so that, upon the whole, the abuse was established by this council.4 But though the Reformation may not have produced any formal decisions in the Church of Rome against the abuse of indulgences, so as to affect the doctrine of them, the practice has been much moderated; and at present it does not appear that much more stress is laid upon such things by Catholics gences, with respect to the enormity of in general, than by Protestants themselves.

Some remains of the doctrine of indulgences are retained in the Church of England, in which the bishops have a power of dispensing with the marriage of persons more near akin than the law allows; which is, in fact, to excuse what they themselves call the crime of incest. But there is something much more unjustifiable in the power of absolution, or an authoritative declaration of forgiveness of sin, which is also retained from the Church of Rome. For, after confession, the priest is directed to absolve a sick person in this form of words: "Our Lord Jesus Christ, who has left power to his church to absolve all sinners who truly repent and believe in him, of his great mercy forgive thee thine offences; and by his authority committed to me, I absolve thee from all thy sin, in the priests' orders cannot pronounce this Whatever was meant by the power of absolution communicated by Christ to name of the Father, and of the Son, and of the Holy Ghost." This is exactly a popish absolution, and is therefore liable to all the objections to which popish absolutions and indulgences are liable.5 One that is not in absolution.

<sup>2</sup> Burnet on the Articles, p. 282. (P.) Art. xxii. Ed. 4, p. 207.

3 L'Enfant, I. p. 438. (P.) L. vi. Sect. xxiii.

<sup>4</sup> See Sess. xxv. "Decretum be Indulgentiis." S. Con. Trid. p. 218. <sup>5</sup> See Free and Cand. Disquis. pp. 124, 329, 330.

the apostles, there is nothing said in with a view to consider the methods there for mentioning any power com- to the same religious profession. by be enabled to judge with certainty whether any person be a true penitent, and a proper object of mercy, or not? If the form has any meaning at all, the priest to absolve, or not to absolve, as he shall think proper, which is certainly great presumption and impiety.

In many other respects the discipline of the Church of England is very the Papists, lament the evil without also that of private penance, is entirely abolished; but the bishops' courts remain, which by mixing things of a civil with those of an ecclesiastical nature, are of great disservice to both. And whereas, by the rules of these courts, public penances are enjoined for certain offences, persons are allowed to commute them for sums of money.

SECTION III.

OF THE METHOD OF ENFORCING CHURCH CENSURES, OR THE HISTORY OF PER-SECUTION, TILL THE TIME OF AUSTIN.

HAVING traced the general course of church discipline, in all its changes, from the time of the apostles, to the Reformation, it may not be amiss to go over the same ground once more, the New Testament of its being com- that have been from time to time taken, mitted to the ordinary ministers of the in order to enforce the censures of the church, so that it must have been con- church; and in this we shall have ocfined to the apostles only; and we casion to lament, among other things, have no example even of their exer- the most horrid abuse of both ecclesicising any such authority as the Church astical and civil power; while men of Rome, or that of England pretends were continually attempting to do by to. It is in vain to apologize for this force what it is not in the power of form of absolution, by saying that the force to do, viz. to guide the conscience, pardon of sin is only promised to the or even to compel an outward conpenitent, for then what occasion was formity, in large bodies of people, mitted to the clergyman with respect this interference of the civil power in to the absolution, unless he be at least the business of religion, we shall see supposed to know the heart, and there- the first steps in this period, in which a great deviation was made from the admirable simplicity of the rules laid down by our Saviour.

In order to prevent the progress of it must imply that it is in the power of vice, and in any case to preserve the reputation of Christian societies, our Lord laid down a most excellent rule. as a general instruction for the conduct of his disciples, viz. first to admonish an offending brother in the most priimperfect, and the wisest members of vate and prudent manner. If that was her communion, as well as those among not effectual, one or two more were to give their sanction to the reproof; if seeing any prospect of a remedy. The that failed, the case was to come under business of auricular confession, and the cognizance of the whole congregation; and if the offender proved obstinate and refractory in this last instance, he was to be expelled from the society, in consequence of which the church was discharged from all farther attention to his conduct, and he was considered in the same light as if he had never belonged to it. Such, and so admirably simple, and well adapted to its end, was the system of discipline in the constitution of the Christian church; and for some time it was strictly adhered to, and the effects of it were great and happy. By this means Christians effectually watched over one another in love, exhorting one another daily, and not suffering sin in each other. Thus, also, by forming regular bodies, they became more firmly united and attached to one another, and their zeal for the common cause was greatly increased.

Besides admonition and reproof, as we have seen, for persons under private and public, the primitive Chris-sentence of excommunication to attend tians had no method of enforcing the at the doors of the church with all the observance of Christian duties. If marks of the deepest dejection and this failed, nothing remained but ex- contrition, entreating the ministers and communication, or cutting off the people, with tears in their eyes; and vicious or refractory member from any earnestly begging their prayers, and visible relation to them, or connexion restoration to the peace of the Church. with them. And, indeed, considering regarded, even without any superstition, as a very awful thing.

solemn and unanimous manner, would be ratified at the tribunal of Christ at here, would be excluded from heaven this censure of his fellow-christians, fore be ratified in heaven; and we of his sincerity. may presume that, in the primitive very early times.

Whatever was the cause, the effect of church censures in those times was very extraordinary. It was customary, power of that church.

Persons the most distinguished for the valuable advantages resulting to their wealth and power were indiscrievery particular member from the rest minately subject to these church cenof the body, a formal exclusion, and, as sures, and had no other method of it necessarily must have been, an igno- being restored to communion but by minious exclusion, from a Christian the same humiliation and contrition society, could not but have been that was expected from the meanest person in the society. When Philip, the governor of Egypt, would have It was generally concluded, that the entered a Christian church, after the censures of the church, passed in a commission of some crime, the bishop forbade him till he first made confession of his sin, and passed through the order the last day; so that a person cut off of penitents, a sentence which, we are from the communion of the church told, he willingly submitted to. Even the emperor Theodosius the Great was hereafter. And, indeed, if a man's excommunicated by Ambrose, the conduct were such as exposed him to bishop of Milan, for a barbarous slaughter of the Thessalonians; and of whose kindness and affection he that great prince submitted to a had abundant experience, and when penance of eight months, and was not they were under no bias or prejudice received into the church till after the in giving their judgment, it is promost humble confession of his offence, bable that it would be just, and thereand giving the most undeniable proof

I must add, that whenever a person times, this was generally the case; was excommunicated in any particular though it must be acknowledged that church, it was generally deemed wrong even a whole church may judge uncha- to admit him to communion in any ritably and rashly, and in this case other. Sometimes, however, neightheir censures certainly will not be bouring churches, being well acquainted ratified at the righteous tribunal of with the cause of excommunication, and not approving of it, received into Excommunications became much their communion the persons so stigmore dreadful when, in the progress of matized. And when the regular subsuperstition, the participation of re- ordination of one church to another ligious rites (and especially that of the was established, it was customary for Lord's supper) came to be considered the excommunicated person to appeal as a necessary qualification for the from the sentence of his particular favour of God and the happiness of church to a higher tribunal. Many of heaven, an opinion which prevailed in these appeals were made to the Church of Rome, from other churches not regularly subordinate to it, which laid the first foundation of the exorbitant

When Christians began to debate about opinions, and to divide and subdivide themselves on that account, it is to be lamented, but not to be wondered at, that they laid an undue stress on what they deemed to be the right faith, and that they should apply church censures in order to prevent the spreading of heretical opinions; without waiting till they could judge by observation what effect such opinions had on the temper and general conduct of men, and indeed without considering that influence at all. The first remarkable abuse of the power of excommunication in this way is by no means such as recommends it, being such as would now be deemed the most frivolous and unjustifiable that can well be imagined. For, on the account of nothing more than a difference of opinion and practice with respect to the time of celebrating Easter, Victor, bishop of Rome, excommunicated at once all the Eastern churches. But this was reckoned a most daring piece of insolence and arrogance, for which he was severely reproved by other bishops; nor, indeed, was any regard paid to the censure. It must be observed that, in consequence of appeals being made from inferior churches to the patriarchal ones, these took upon them to extend their excommunications beyond the limits of their acknowledged jurisdiction, viz. to all who held any obnoxious opinion or prac-Persons thus censured often formed separate churches, and in return excommunicated those who had excommunicated them.

In this state of mutual hostility things often continued a long time, till the influence of an emperor, or some other foreign circumstance, determined the dispute in favour of one of them, which was thenceforth deemed the orthodox side of the question, whilst the other was condemned as heretical. It is well known that the Arians and Athanasians were in this manner reputed orthodox by turns, as both had the sanction of councils and emperors in their favour; till, in consequence of mere faction, and the authority of the emperors, the party of Athanasius prevailed at last.

The first instance that we meet with of the use of actual force, or rather of a desire to make use of it, by a Christian church, was in the proceedings against Paul, bishop of Samosata; when, at the request of a Christian synod, the heathen emperor Aurelian expelled him from the episcopal house. Indeed, having been deposed from his office, if that had been done by competent authority, namely, that of his own diocese, he could not be said to have any right to the emoluments of it, and therefore his keeping possession of the episcopal house was an act of violence on his side.

But as soon as the empire became what is called Christian, we have examples enough of the interference of civil power in matters of religion; and we soon find instances of the abuse of excommunication, and the addition of civil incapacities annexed to that ecclesiastical censure. In a council held at Ptolemais, in Cyrene, Andronicus the prefect was excommunicated, and it was expressed in the sentence, that no temple of God should be open unto him, that no one should salute him during his life, and that he should not be buried after his death.<sup>2</sup>

The emperor Constantine, besides banishing Arius himself, ordered his writings to be burnt, and forbidding any persons to conceal him, under pain of death, deprived many of those who were declared heretics of the privileges which he had granted to Christians in general, and besides imposing fines upon them, forbade their assemblies, and demolished their places of worship. On the other hand, the emperor Constantius banished the orthodox bishops because they would not condemn Athanasius. Nestorius was banished by Theodosius, in whose reign persecution for the sake of religion

&lt;sup>1</sup> Fleury's Seventh Discourse, p. 7. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Sueur, A. D. 411. (P.)

made greater advances than in any fered from the Pagans, and the just power with which God had entrusted him, by employing it in establishing what he thought to be the orthodox faith, without ever reflecting on the impropriety of such a means with respect to such an end.

Immediately upon his baptism, which, according to the superstitious notions which influenced many persons of that age, he had deferred till his life was in danger by sickness, he published a decree commanding that, in order that all his subjects should make profession of the same religion which the divine apostle Peter taught the Romans, the doctrine of the Trinity should be embraced by those who would be called catholics; that all others, whom he says he judged to be mad, should bear the infamous name of heretics, and that their assemblies should not be called churches, reserving their farther punishment in the first place to the vengeance of heaven, and afterwards to the movements with which God should inspire him.' In consequence, I suppose, of one of these movements, three years after this edict, he published another, forbidding the Arians to hold their assemblies in cities. He, however, was not the person who was inspired with the glorious thought of sentencing all heretics to be burned alive. This was reserved for a more advanced state of the Christian church.

It was of a son of Theodosius, viz. the Eastern Emperor Honorius, that the authority of persecution to death was obtained, by four bishops sent from Carthage for that purpose in 410; and the edict extended to all who differed ever so little from the catholic faith.* But it does not appear that this sanguinary decree was carried into execution.

Notwithstanding all the hardships which the Christians had lately sufother within this period. He certainly remonstrances they had made on the imagined he made a right use of the subject, no sooner were they in possession of the same power, than they were too ready to make a similar use of it; and instead of showing the world the contrast of a truly Christian spirit, they were eager to retaliate upon their enemies, whom they had now at their mercy. But at first the number of the Pagans was too great to make very violent proceedings at all prudent. As the Christians increased in number, the Pagans were soon laid under great restrictions.

In the year 346, it was decreed that all the heathen temples in cities should be shut up, but that those in the villages should not be meddled with; the Christians having increased more in the cities, and superstition, as might be expected, retaining its hold of the minds of men much longer in the villages, where they had less intercourse with strangers, and consequently less opportunity of receiving information. It was in this state of things that the Heathens began to be distinguished by the name of Pagans (Pagani), that is, inhabitants of villages. In the year 382, these Pagans were laid under farther restrictions: for though they were allowed to frequent their temples as usual, they were not suffered to make any sacrifices there. At the same time, however, the clandestine assemblies of the Manicheans were absolutely forbidden.

Even the more learned Christians, who might have been expected, by reflections upon the past, to have seen things in a juster light, and to have entertained more liberal sentiments, soon became the advocates for the interference of civil power in matters of religion. Austin, the oracle of the church in his own time, and still more so after his death, confessed that he had formerly been of opinion that heretics should not be harassed by catholics, but rather allured by all kinds of gentle methods; yet afterwards he changed his opinion, having had proved the happy occasion of their conversion.1 His whole Epistle to Vincentius, where we learn this, is well worth reading, as being perhaps the first piece in which the use of force in matters of religion is pleaded for. He certainly meant well by it.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Sueur, A. D. 380. (P.) <sup>2</sup> Taylor on the Grand Apostacy, p. 131. (P.)

As one great source of information is by means of books, all those whose wish it has been to prevent the spreading of any particular opinion, have generally done everything in their power to suppress the books that re- civil and ecclesiastical power, the same commend it. The Heathers made frequent attempts to compel the Christians to give up their sacred books; tual as well as of a temporal nature, but the first example of anything of were frequently discussed in these this kind by Christians (except what parliaments, or assemblies of the states, is mentioned above concerning the regulations of all kinds, ecclesiastical writings of Arius) was exhibited by as well as others, were enforced by Theodosius, who in 448 made a law, civil penalties. by which it was ordered, that all the books, the doctrine of which was not conformable to the Councils of Nice and Ephesus, and also to the decisions of Cyril, should be destroyed, and the concealers of them put to death. Afterwards Pope Gelasius, in a council held at Rome in 494, specified the books which the Church of Rome rejected, but without laying any penalty on those who should read them.2 of power, and who were instigated by bigotry, went in these early times. We shall see a much greater extension of extended to no other cases. this, as well as of every other method of preventing and extirpating heresy, in the following period.

SECTION IV.

OF THE METHODS OF ENFORCING ECCLE-SIASTICAL CENSURES, FROM THE TIME OF AUSTIN TO THE REFORMATION AND AFTERWARDS, BY THE CATHOLICS.

WE are now launching into what has been properly enough called the dark

Opera, II. p. 174. (P.)
Fleury's Seventh Discourse, p. 24. (P.)

learned by experience, that the laws age of this Western part of the world: made by the emperors against heretics and we shall not be surprised to find bigotry and violence keep pace with ignorance, and that they should not be lessened but by the increase of knowledge, and but very slowly even then.

As, upon the conversion of the barbarous nations to Christianity, the bishops became some of the most considerable land-owners, in consequence of which they had a right to sit in their parliaments, to hold courts, and even to serve in the wars, there necessarily arose an unnatural mixture of person serving in both capacities. Since all public concerns, of a spiri-

By this means compulsory penances were introduced in the seventh century, when we find proofs of their being in Spain. There the bishops, finding offenders refusing to submit to penance, complained to their parliament, and requested their princes to interpose their temporal power. The punishments that were enjoined in this manner, were prohibitions to eat flesh, to wear linen, to mount a horse, &c.3 So far those who were in possession It would have been happy if civil power had proceeded no farther than this in matters of religion, and had

In this period the sentence of excommunication became a much more dreadful thing than it had been before, and a proportionably greater solemnity was added to the forms of it. The most solemn part of the new ceremonial was the extinction of lamps or candles, by throwing them on the ground, with a solemn imprecation, that the person against whom the excommunication was pronounced, might in like manner be extinguished or destroyed by the judgment of God. And because the people were summoned to decreed for any good reason, but a bell, and the curses accompanying the excommunication were recited out nounced them stood on some balcony or stage, from which he would throw down his lights, we have the phrase of cursing by bell, book and candle. The first example of excommunication by throwing down lighted lamps was at Rheims, about the year 900, when the bishops excommunicated some murderers in this manner.2

3 Ibid. XIII. p. 44. (P.) [Ed. Vidal. Tom, IV. p. 143.]

church, and there were many other offenders who were out of the reach of. church power, it came to be the custom find Thursday before Easter made choice of for this purpose. Thus we read that John XXII., according to the custom of the Church of Rome, on the Thursday before Easter, published a bull, by which he excommunicated the poor of Lyons (or the Albigenses), the Arnoldists and all heretics in general, the Corsairs, the falsifiers of apostolical bulls, and all who usurped the city of Rome or the patrimony of St. Peter.3

At length, sentences of general excommunication becoming frequent, (every decretal, though the subject of it was ever so trifling, denouncing this sentence against all who should disobey it,) and consequently whole classes of men, and sometimes whole communities, falling under those censures, they came to be despised and lost their effect.4

Leonardo Aretino, who wrote before the Reformation, observes, in his History of Florence, that when the citizens had been used to the papal censures, they did not much regard the interdicts they were laid under; especially as they observed that they were not attend this ceremony by the sound of depended on the will of those who had most influence with the popes. And in the year 1377, when the city was of a book, while the person who pro- laid under an interdict, public orders were given to the clergy to pay no regard to it.5 When the passions of ecclesiastics were much interested, they were not content with mere church censures: but, having the sanction of the civil power, they annexed the most dreadful civil penalties to their excommunications. These were easily introduced When heresics sprang up in the after the Roman empire became Christian; and in many of the imperial constitutions made after that event, we find various civil disqualifications, to pronounce these curses against them some of which were mentioned in the on certain days of the year, and we former period, added to the censures of the church. But the whole system of this mixed ecclesiastical and civil polity received fresh and stronger sanctions upon the conversion of the Germans, Goths, Celts, and other Northern nations. These people had been used to excommunication in their own Pagan religions; and the consequence of it had always been, the most dreadful civil penalties and disabilities. Among the Gauls, excommunicated persons had been looked upon as and scandalous wretches; all people avoided their company, they were not allowed the benefits of the courts of justice, nor were they admitted to any post of honour or profit in the community.

Of this prejudice of the people the Christian priests willingly took advantage, as by this means they could overawe those who despised mere church censures. Civil penalties for offences against the church were increased by degrees, till heresy came to be considered as a crime of so heinous a nature, that burning alive was decreed to be, of all others, the most proper punishment of it. indeed, wonder to find that, of all crimes, the church, which had so much at stake, should be most alarmed at

<sup>1</sup> See these forms, Hist. of Popery, 1735, II.

pp. 388, 389

2 Jortin's Remarks, IV. p. 518. (P.)

3 Hist. des Papes, IV. p. 12. (P.)

4 Fleury's Tenth Discourse, p. 65. (P.)

&lt;sup>6</sup> B. iv. pp. 77, 172. (P.)

that of heresy, and therefore should these dark ages, one of the ordeals of the most effectual remedy, and the most likely to terrify those who should be exposed to it.

It is, however, curious enough to observe that, as there could be no pretence for ecclesiastics, as such, having recourse to civil penalties, or, according to the usual phrase, making use of against the church should be punished the Council of Lateran, in 1179, which was before any heretics were punished with death, it is said that, "though the church rejects bloody executions. it may nevertheless be aided by the laws of Christian princes, and that the fear of corporeal punishments often makes persons have recourse to spiritual remedies."1 And to this day the court of Inquisition not only solemnly delivers over to the civil power all those who are destined to suffer death. but even formally recommends them to mercy,2 where it is certainly not the wish of those who express this concern for them, that they should find any.3

Among other methods of trying whether a person was a heretic, we find, in

Histoire des Papes, III. p. 90. (P.)
"Relinquimus.... Curiæ seculari, eandem af-** "Relinquimus..." Curie seculari, candem affectuose rogantes, prout suadent canonice sanctiones, ut illis vitam et membra illibata conservet." Holy Inquisition, London, 1681, p. 161.

** "We, the Inquisitors of heretical pravity, having called on the name of the Lord Jesus Christ, and of his glorious mother the Virgin Mary, and sitting on our tribunal, and judging, with the holy gospels lying before us, by this our sentence put in writing, define, pronounce, declare, and sentence thee, to be a 'convicted, confessing, affirmative and professed heretic, and to be delivered, and left by us as such, to the secular arm; and we by this our sentence do cast thee out of the ecclesiastical court, as a convicted, confessing, affirmative and professed heretic, and we do leave and deliver thee to the secular arm, and to the power of the secular court; but at the same time do most earnestly besecch that court to moderate its sentence, as not to touch thy same time do most earnestly beseech that court to to moderate its sentence, as not to touch thy blood, or to put thy life in any danger.' Is there in all history an instance of so gross and confident mockery of God and the world?"—Geddes's Inquisition in Portugal, 1730, Ed. 3, pp. 408, 409. Bee also Limborch, Hist. Inquis. C. xl. II. pp. 288-292.

apply what might be thought to be the Northern nations, and the same that till of late years was thought to be the proper test of witchcraft in this country.4 For, in the persecution of the Albigenses, in order to know whether a person was a heretic, those who suspected him threw him into water, on the supposition that, if he was a heretic, the devil within him being the temporal sword; whenever it was lighter than the water, would prevent thought necessary that any criminal his sinking.<sup>5</sup> But, as I have observed before, the punishment that was thought with death, they were solemnly de- to be the most proper for heresy, was livered over to the civil power. In burning alive; and indeed this was the first capital punishment that was decreed for it. There was not, however, any proper capital punishment for heresy till the year 1215, when it was appointed, by the fourth Council of Lateran, that all heretics should be delivered over to the civil magistrates to be burned.

Why this peculiarly dreadful punishment, of all others, should have been thought the most proper for heresy, it is not easy to say. Possibly the crime was thought to be so dreadful and contagious, that it was determined, as far as possible, to destroy and annihilate even the body of the heretic, lest it should taint the earth, the sea, or the air.<sup>6</sup> The Church of

4 This Ordeal "about the middle ages" was applied to "persons accused or suspected" of any crime. After the appointment of various adjurations, prayers and benedictions, it is added, "When the water has been thus exorcised, let "When the water has been thus exorcised, let those who are to go into it put off their clothes, and kiss the gospel and the cross, and let holy water be sprinkled over them. All that are present ought to be fasting; and so let them be thrown into the water. If they sink, they shall be reputed innocent; but if they swim on the surface, they shall be adjudged guilty." Of Ordeal. "History of Remarkable Tryals," 1715, pp. 8-16

Ordeal. "History of Remarkable Tryals," 1715, pp. 8-16.

Verstegan, in 1605, describing the Cold-water Ordeal, adds, "This kind of trial is used for such as are accused to be witches, who being cast into the water, with a cord fastened unto them, are aid, if they be witches indeed, to float upon the same, and in no wise to be able to sink into it." Restitution of decayed intelligence, pp. 52, 58.

Basnage. Histoire des Eglises Réformées, I (b), p. 229. (P.)

I have met with a passage in a bull of Pope John XXIII. against the Wickliffites, quoted by L'Enfant in his History of the Council of Piza, II. p. 98, which sufficiently explains whence the Rome, having once employed this in the expeditions for the recovery of horrid engine, found it so well adapted the Holy Land.2 In consequence of to the rest of her system, and so necessary to enforce a regard to decrees not recommended by reason or arguof the first reformers.

The burning of heretics was not, however, the first kind of persecution which the Church of Rome employed to subdue her enemies; and recourse was not had to this, till other methods, and even several of a very violent kind, had been tried without effect. first object that roused the sanguinary disposition of the court of Rome, was the heresies, as they were called, of the Waldenses, and of the Albigenses, the former of whom inhabited some of the mountainous parts of the Alps. and the latter the southern provinces of France.

These people were dreadfully persecuted by Innocent III., who first prohibited all manner of intercourse or communication with them, confiscated their goods, disinherited their children. destroyed their houses, denied them the rite of sepulture, and gave their accusers one-third of their effects. But in 1198 he erected the court of Inquisition, the object of which was the utter extirpation of them, in which Dominic was the chief actor. Afterwards he published crusades against them, promising all who would engage in that war the same indulgences that had been granted to those who engaged idea of burning heretics, rather than putting them to any other kind of death, was borrowed. He says, "We ordain that they be publicly He says, "We ordain that they be publicly burned, in execution of the sentence of our Saviour, John xv. 6: If any man abide not in me, he is cast forth as a branch, and is withered; and men gather them, and cast them into the five, and they are burned." (P.) Note at the end of the

they are burned." (P.) Note at the end of the edition 1782.

1 "The true origin of the Inquisition, by delegation from the Pope, as it is now managed, was about 1216, when Innocent III. appointed St. Dominic to be the first inquisitor, to suppress the growing heresic of the Albigeness." Holy Inquis. p. 51. See also Limborch, C. x. I. p. 60.

this, great multitudes of them were destroyed with all manner of cruelties.

This war, or rather massacre, conment, that she had frequent recourse tinued near forty years, and a million to it; and though this was the greatest of men are supposed to have lost their of all abuses of ecclesiastical autho- lives in it. And of these, it is said, rity, it was retained, along with other there were three hundred thousand of corruptions of Christianity, by most the Crusaders themselves.3 However, the consequence of this persecution was the same with that of most others: the reprobated opinion being farther disseminated by this means. Particularly, the kings of England, and the earls of Toulouse (who had been the heads of the Albigenses), being related, many of them came over into England, where great numbers embraced their opinions. They were afterwards imbibed by Wickliffe, and from him they passed into Bohemia.

Perhaps the most horrible and perfidious of any single act of barbarity, committed by the Papists, was the massacre of the Protestants in Paris, on the eve of St. Bartholomew, in 1572; when the Huguenots (as the Protestants in France are called) were lulled asleep by all the forms of pacification, and an attempt was made to rise upon them, and destroy them all in one night. In Paris, and some other towns, it took effect, and great numbers were massacred when they were altogether unapprehensive of danger. Had this happened in a popular tumult, it would have been more excusable; but it was not only a most deliberate act of perfidy, concerted long before the time of execution, but the king himself, Charles IX., bore a part in it, firing upon his own subjects from his window; and Pope Gregory XIII. gave solemn thanks to God for this massacre in the church of St. Louis, whither he himself went in procession.4

<sup>2 &</sup>quot;Catholici, qui crucis assumpto charactere ad Hareticorum exterminium se accinxerint, illa gaudeant indulgentia, illoque sancto privilegio sint muniti, que accedentibus in Sanctæ Terræ subsidium conceduntur." Holy Inquis. pp. 54, 55.

Histoire des Papes, III. p. 16. (P.)

&quot;Certain it is that the massacres of St. Bar-

The guns of St. Angelo were also fired, and bonfires were made in the streets of Rome upon the occasion.1

The court of Rome has even employed the same bloody methods to extirpate heresies that arose among the Catholics themselves, those who maintained them adhering to the Popish system in general. This was the case with respect to some Franciscans in the fourteenth century, who maintained, that neither Christ nor the apostles had any personal property. This most innocent opinion was most vehemently opposed by the Dominicans; and John XXII., in 1324, pronounced it to be "a pestilential, erroneous, damnable and blasphemous doctrine, subversive of the Catholic faith; and declared all such as adhered to it, obstinate heretics and rebels against the church. In consequence of this merciless decree, great numbers" of those poor Franciscans "were apprehended by the Dominican inquitors, ... and committed to the flames."2

It would be unjust, however, to suppose that all the members of the Catholic Church, as it is called, have been equally bent on the extirpation of heretics by these violent methods. At all times there have been advocates for moderation among very zealous Papists. Thomas Aquinas, who for many centuries was esteemed the bulwark of the Popish cause, maintained, that religion ought not to be extended by force; alleging that no person can believe as he would, and that the will should not be forced.3 There were also those who remonstrated very strongly against all the persecutions of the Protestants by the Papists, especially those of Philip II. of Spain, as well as those of Louis XIV. of France. And there is reason to believe that the minds of the Catholics in general are now so much enlightened, partly by reflection, but chiefly by experience, that they would no more act the same things over again. than the Protestants would, who, as will be seen in the next Section, were guilty of almost as great excesses, in proportion to the extent of their power.

As we are naturally more interested in our own history, I shall mention a few more particulars concerning the progress of persecution in this country. There were no penal statutes against heresy, enacted by the authority of an English Parliament, before the fifth year of Richard II., in 1382; when it was appointed, that heretics should be kept in prison "till they justified them-selves according to law, and the reason of holy church." The commitment was to be the rule for the chancellor, after the bishop had presented the name of the offender.4

Afterwards Henry IV., in order to gain the good will of the clergy, procured an act, in the second year of his reign, 1400, by which convicted heretics might be imprisoned and confined at the discretion of the diocesan or o his commissary, and those who refused to abjure, or who relapsed, were to be burnt to death in some conspicuous place before the people. By this law all heretics were less to the mercy of the bishops in the spiritual courts, who might imprison them or put them to death, without presentment or trial by a jury, as was the practice in all other tholomew's day, are painted at Rome, in the royal hall of the Vatican, with these words under royal hall of the valuear, with these words under the picture, Fontifex Colignit necem probat." See the account of the massacre in "An Essay upon the Civil Wars of France, by M. de Fottaire, author of the Henriade," Ed. 2, 1728, pp. 12-17. This Essay was written by Voltaire in English, while resident in this country. See Mon. Repos.

X. p. 38. In "Histoire du Parlement de Paris," par M. In "Histoire du Parlement de Paris," par M. Pabbé Big..., but which has been attributed to Voltaire, the author says, "Les détails de ces massacres que je dois omettre feiseront présens à tous les esprits jusqu'à la dernière postérité." Histoire, Amst. 1769, p. 180.

1 Histoire des Papes, V. p. 25. (P.)
2 Mosheim, HI. pp. 177, 178. (P.) Cent. xiv Pt. ii, Ch. ii. Sect. xxix.

3 Fleury's Sixth Discourse, p. 32. (P.)

* Rapin represents as the more probable opinion upon this subject, that the Commons refused to pass the act, but that the bishops were empowered solely by the king. "Les Communes refusérent de donner leur consentement au bill qui leur fut présenté sur ce sujet, et que ce ne fut que du Roi seulement, que les Evêques ob-tinrent cette permission." Histoire, L. x. III. p. 286.

The reign of his son Henry V., whose Junius's translation of the Old Testavery unfavourable to free inquiry. In the beginning of his reign, 1414, an act was made against the Lollards or Wickliffites,1 by which it was decreed that they should forfeit all their lands and goods to the king. In this reign, however, it was that the writ de hæretico comburendo was issued from the chancery; by which it seems that the heretics were taken again into the king's protection. But this does not appear to have been necessary, or at least to have been practised, for no such writs are to be found upon the rolls before the reign of Henry VIII. "By virtue of these statutes, the clergy ... exercised numberless cruelties upon the people, there being 'some hundreds of examples,' of persons imprisoned, and probably put to death by them."2

The prohibition of books was an evil that was greatly increased after the Reformation, though it began before. There were rigorous edicts against the writings of Wickliffe and John Huss. But Leo X. renewed them in condemning the propositions of Luther, and all the books that bore his name. He made a decree that no book should be published in Rome, or in any other city or diocese, before it had been approved by an officer appointed for that purpose; and he was the first who made any decree of this nature.3 The popes that succeeded him, forbade, under pain of excommunication, the reading of all the books of heretics; and in order to distinguish them, Philip II. ordered the Spanish Inquisition to print a catalogue of them, which Paul IV. also did at Rome; at the same time ordering them to be burnt.4 In 1597, Clement VIII. published another catalogue of books prohibited, and among them was interest it was to keep things quiet at ment, and Beza's of the New, though home, by obliging the clergy, while he the former might, at the discretion of was carrying on his wars abroad, was the bishop, be granted to learned men.

SECTION V.

OF PERSECUTION BY PROTESTANTS.

I HAVE already observed, that this sanguinary method of propagating and establishing religion was adopted, together with other popish maxims, by the Reformers; and, alas, the history of all reformed countries bears too strong evidence of it.

In the wars of Bohemia, both the Protestants and Papists "agreed ... that it was innocent and lawful to ... extirpate with fire and sword, the enemies of the true religion." The Protestants acknowledged "that heretics were worthy of capital punishment. but they denied obstinately that John Huss was a heretic." Ziska, the general of the Hussites, fell upon the sect of the Beghards in 1421, and "put some to the sword, and condemned the rest to the flames, which dreadful punishment they sustained with the most cheerful fortitude."5

Luther had no idea of the impropriety of civil penalties to enforce the true religion. He only objected to the putting heretics to death, but approved of their being confined, as madmen. "He persuaded the electors of Saxony not to tolerate... the followers of Zuinglius," merely because he did not believe the real presence of Christ in the eucharist; and "the Lutheran lawyers ... condemned to death Peter Pestelius for being a Zuinglian." They also put to death several Anabaptists.6 It was not till towards the end of the seventeenth century that "the Lutheran churches adopted that leading maxim of the Arminians," that no good subject was justly punishable

See Rapin, Histoire, L. xi. III. p. 493.
 Neal's History of the Puritans, I. p. 5. (P.)
 Toulmin's Ed. 1793, I. p. 7.
 Histoire des Papes, IV. p. 389. (P.)
 Basuage, II. pp. 465, 466. Histoire des Papes, IV. p. 684. (P.)

Mosheim, III. pp. 261, 274. (P.) Cent. xv.
 Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. iv. Ch. v. Sect. ii.
 Chandler's "History of Persecution," 1736,

pp. 310, 311. (P.)

"by the magistrate for his erroneous opinions."1

Mosheim also says, that Zuinglius is "said to have attributed to the civil magistrate such an extensive power in ecclesiastical affairs, as is quite inconsistent with the essence and genius of third."6 religion."2 He condemned an Anainsult, Qui iterum mergit mergatur; He that dips a second time, let him be dipped.3

Calvin went upon the same plan, persecuting many worthy persons, and even procuring Servetus to be burned alive for writing against the doctrine of the Trinity. He also wrote a treatise in order to prove the lawfulness of putting heretics to death; and in one of his letters he says, "Since the Papists, in order to vindicate their own superstitions, crully shed innocent blood, it is a shame that Christian magistrates should have no courage at all in the defence of certain truth." Even Melancthon, though esteemed to be of a mild and moderate temper, approved of the death of Servetus.4

After the Reformation in England, the laws against heretics were not relaxed, but the proceedings were appointed to be regular, as in other criminal cases. Thus it was enacted in 1534, "that heretics should be proceeded against upon presentments" by a jury, or on the oath of "two witnesses at least."5

When the new liturgy was confirmed by act of parliament in the reign of Edward VI., in 1548, it was ordered that "such of the clergy as refused" to conform to it, "should, upon the first conviction, suffer six months' imprisonment, and forfeit a year's profits of his benefice; for the second offence forfeit all his church preferments, and suffer a year's imprisonment; and for

Mosheim, IV. p. 440. (P.) Cent. xvii. Sect. ii
Pt. ii. Ch. i. Sect xvi.
Ibid. III. p. 320. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. i.
Ch. ii. Sect. xii.
Chandler's "History of Persecution," p. 328.

(P.)

4 Ibid. pp. 321, 323. (P.)

8 Neal's Hist. I. p. 10. (P.) Ed. 1793, p. 14.

the third offence imprisonment for life. Such as wrote or printed against the book were to be fined ten pounds for the first offence, twenty pounds for the second, and to forfeit all their goods; and be imprisoned for life, for the Cranmer, whilst he was a Lutheran. baptist to be drowned, with this cruel consented to the burning of John Lambert and Ann Askew, for those very doctrines for which he himself suffered afterwards; and when he was a sacramentarian, he was the cause of the death of Joan Bocher, an Arian, importuning the young king Edward VI. to sign the death-warrant; and he is said to have done it with great reluctance, saying, with tears in his eyes. that if he did wrong, it was in submission to his authority (Cranmer's), and that he should answer to God for it."

> Many were the severities under which the Puritans laboured in the reign of Queen Elizabeth, and the princes of the Stuart family; and the Presbyterians were but too ready to act with a high hand in their turn, in the short time that they were in power: but they were soon repaid with interest, on the Restoration. At the Revolution they obtained pretty good terms, but still all those who could not subscribe the doctrinal articles of the Church of England remained subject to the same penalties as before, and a new and severe law was made against the Anti-trinitarians. This law, which subjects the offender to confiscation of goods and imprisonment for life, if he persists in acting contrary to the law, still remains in force, though many Ibid. p. 39. (P.) Ibid. p. 51.

Repos. VII. p. 363, &c.

Now repealed, with the exceptions in the Toleration Act. (It is interesting to remark the Progress of the principle of religious equality in the United Kingdom since the time when Rutt added the preceding note. First came the Catholic Emanthe preceding note. First came the Carnon camanicipation Act; then, the Dissenters' Chaple Bill.
Next, after a considerable interval, a measure, carried by Mr. James Heywood, laid the foundation of religious equality at the two great national Universities. Since then, Church Rates have been abolished; and the Irish Church Bill of 1869 has introduced perfect religious equality into one portion of the United Kingdom. That removed.

The persecution of the Remonstrants by the Calvinistic party in Holland, was as rancorous in the mode of carrying it on, as any of the Popish persecutions, though the penalties did not extend beyond banishment.

been too ready to impose their own faith upon others, and to bind all their posterity to believe as they did. But kind occurs in the history of the Protestant church in France. At a synod held in 1612, it was decreed, that they who take holy orders should take this or any convenience whatever. oath: "I, whose name is here underwritten, do receive and approve the confession of faith of the reformed churches in this kingdom, and also promise to persevere in it until death, and to believe and teach agreeably thereunto."1 In another decree, passed in 1620, they adopt the decrees of the Synod of Dort, promising to persevere in that faith all their lives, and to defend it to the utmost of their power.2 Is it to be regretted that a church, the principles of which were so narrow and intolerant, should, in the course of Divine Providence, be suppressed? It is to be hoped that when it shall seem fit to the same wise Providence to revive the Protestant interest in that country, it will be more liberal, and more deserving of the name of a reformed Christian church.

There is too great a mixture of civil penalties in the ordinary discipline of the Church of England to this day. who maintains anything contrary to the doctrine or rites of the church, or

Great Britain will not have many years to wait before obtaining the same degree of religious liberty already accorded to Ireland, is sufficiently apparent, not only from the general tendency of public opinion, but from the course of the recent debate (May 9, 1871) on Mr. Miall's motion for the Diesetablishment of State Churches in England and Scotland. J. D. 1 other hardships under which Dissen- to the authority by which they are ters formerly laboured have lately been enforced, is declared to be ipso facto excommunicated. Many other offences which are properly civil, are deemed to be of a spiritual nature, and are punished by excommunication; which is two-fold, the greater and the less. The latter only excludes a man from the sacrament, and communion in the All the Protestant churches have divine offices; but the greater excommunication cuts a man off from all commerce with Christians in temporal affairs; so that, if the orders of the the most remarkable public act of this church were universally and strictly observed, the poor wretch must necessarily perish; since no person in the nation might sell him food, raiment,

<sup>1</sup> Quick's Synodicon, I. p. 348. <sup>2</sup> Ibid. II. p. 38. (P.)

SECTION VI.

THE HISTORY OF MISTAKES CONCERNING MORAL VIRTUE.

Not only did the Christian church adopt very wrong and pernicious maxims of church discipline, but Christians have also adopted very false and hurtful notions concerning moral virtue itself, which is the end of all discipline; and it may be useful to take a general view of these corruptions, as well as of others.

According to the genuine doctrine of reason and revelation, nothing is of any avail to recommend a man to the favour of God, and to insure his future happiness, besides good dispositions of mind, and a habit and conduct of life This is the reagreeable to them. ligion of nature, and likewise that of According to her canons, every person the Old and New Testaments. But the religion of the heathen world, and that of many of the Jews, in the time of our Saviour, was of a quite different stamp. The Heathens, having none but low notions of their gods, had no idea of recommending themselves to their favour, but by the punctual observance of certain rites, ceremonies and modes of worship, which at best had no relation to moral horrid and shameful violation of the to God.

plainest natural duties.

The pharisaical Jews, also, overlooking the excellent nature of the moral precepts of their law, and the perfect character of the great Being whom they were taught to worship, and directed to resemble, attached themselves wholly to ritual observances. Upon these, and on their relation to their ancestor Abraham, they chiefly depended for insuring to themselves the favour of God, to the utter exclusion of all the Gentile world, whatever might be their characters in a moral respect.

Our Lord and his apostles took every opportunity of opposing this fundamental corruption of genuine religion, and recalled men's attention to their hearts and lives. And one would have thought that, by the abolition of all the peculiar rites of the Jewish law, and appointing none in their place, (besides baptism and the Lord's supper, which are exceedingly simple, and have obvious moral uses,) an effectual bar would have been put in the way of the old superstitions. But human nature being the same, and men's dislike to moral virtue operating as before, and making them ready to adopt superstitious observances as a compensation for it, pretences and modes were not long wanting; and at length proper moral virtue was as effectually excluded in the Christian religion, as ever it had been in corrupt Judaism or Heathenism itself; and as great stress was laid upon things that bore no relation to moral virtue, but were, in fact, inconsistent with it, and subversive of it, as had ever been done by the most superstitious and misinformed of mankind.

Did not both the most authentic sufficient vouchers of this, it would virtue, and often consisted in the most methods of recommending themselves

We find that in early times an undue stress was laid upon the ordinances of baptism and the Lord's supper, as if these rites themselves, when duly administered (to which their being administered by a person regularly ordained for the purpose was considered as necessary) imparted some spiritual grace. Thus baptism was supposed to wash away all past sins, and the act of communion to impart some other secret virtue, by which a title to the blessings of the gospel was secured to the communicant. On this account, many persons who professed themselves to be Christians, deferred baptism till late in life, or even to the hour of death, that they might leave the world with the greater certainty of all their sins being forgiven, and before any new guilt could be contracted.

Those of the early fathers who ascribed the least to the rite of baptism, supposed that by it was done away whatever inconvenience mankind had been subjected to in consequence of the fall of Adam; so that they made a great difference between the case of those children who died baptized, and those who died unbaptized; and the virtue that was ascribed to the Lord's supper was the foundation of all the superstitions respecting that ordinance, of which an account has already been given.

When moral virtue had been once ascribed to any corporeal action, instituted by divine appointment, Christians were led by degrees to imagine that a similar virtue might be communicated by other actions or signs, not of divine appointment, but bearing some relation to religion. This superstitious use was first made of the sign history, and even the present state of of the cross, which, as has been obreligion in the Church of Rome, furnish served, was used originally with great innocence, perhaps as a private mark of not, in the present enlightened age, be distinction between the Christians and even credible, that such practices as I Heathens, in the time of persecution; shall be obliged to mention, could ever or, in peaceable times, to show the have been used by Christians, as Heathens that they were not ashamed they reproached them the most, viz. the crucifixion of their Master.

We first hear of this ceremony among the Montanists; and Tertullian, who became a Montanist, makes great boast of it. In the beginning of any business, says he, going out, coming in, dressing, washing, eating, lighting candles, going to bed, sitting down, or whatever we do, we sign our forehead with the sign of the cross.1

sign of the cross in still more general use, it being thought to be a defence against enchantments and evil spirits; call Latria, or that of the highest kind.2

After the sign of the cross, a sanctifying virtue was ascribed to holy water, or salt and water, such as the Heathers had used in their purifications, consecrated by a bishop. An extraordinary power was also ascribed to lights burning in the day-time, to the use of incense, to the relics of the saints, and to their images; and as the superstitious veneration for the real the Christian church. eucharist produced a mock one, so it probably occasioned another superstition, something similar to it, viz. the making of little waxen images of a lamb, which were either invented or much improved by Pope Urban VI. The Pope alone has the power of consecrating them, and that in the first year only of his popedom, and in every seventh year afterwards. In the service on this occasion, which may be nevertheless been put in the place of it, of that very circumstance with which seen in the History of Popery, these Agnus Dei's, as they are called, are said to be blessed and sanctified, so as "by honouring and worshipping them, we thy servants may have our crimes washed off, the spots of our sins wiped away, pardons may be procured, graces bestowed, that at last, with thy saints and elect, we may merit to receive eternal life."3

Still greater virtue was ascribed to pilgrimages to visit particular churches In the third century we find the and places, which were reputed holy, on account of their having been the resort of holy persons, of the theatre of holy actions, &c., and a similar virtue has and no Christian undertook anything been ascribed to the attendance on parof moment without it. The use of ticular ceremonies. In 1071, the Pope this sign was brought more into promised indulgence for all sin confashion by the emperor Constantine, fessed by those who should assist at who, it is said, made use of it as his the dedication of a church at mount imperial banner, or standard. And so Cassin, or who should come to the high did this sign of the cross rise in new church during the octave; which, estimation, in later ages, that the Fleury says, brought an astonishing Papists maintain that the cross, and concourse of people, so that not only even the sign of the cross, is to be the monastery and the town, but even adored with the worship which they the neighbouring country was filled with them. Sixtus IV., in 1476, granted indulgences, by an express and particular act, to those who should devoutly celebrate an annual festival in honour of the immaculate conception of the Virgin Mary.4 This superstitious use of pilgrimages was likewise the foundation of all the jubilees which have been celebrated at Rome, of which an account has been given among the festivals that have been introduced into

All the popish sacraments are likewise certain ceremonies, to the use of which the members of the catholic church ascribe a supernatural and sanctifying effect upon the mind; and they suppose them to have that weight and influence with the Divine Being, which nothing but real virtue or good dispositions of mind can ever have.

If things quite foreign to virtue have

&lt;sup>1</sup> De Corona, C. iv. Opera, p. 102. (P.) <sup>2</sup> Mosheim, I. p. 238. (P.) Cent. iii. Pt. ii. Ch. iv. fin.

Hist, III. p. 531. (P.) 1736, II. pp. 109-111.
 Mosheim, III. p. 271. (P.) Cent. xv. Pt. ii. Ch. iv. Sect. ii.

we shall not wonder that actions of real value in themselves, and which, when proceeding from a right disposition of mind, are real virtues, should have been much magnified, and that the actions themselves should have been imagined to be meritorious, even independently of the proper state of mind.

Thus, since giving to the needy, or being liberal for any useful purpose, is generally a test of virtue, it is no wonder that, in all ages, it has, by many persons, been substituted in the place of it. And, notwithstanding the strong cautions on this head in the New Testament, especially the apostle Paul's saying that he might give all his goods to feed the poor, and yet be destitute of charity, or brotherly love, this spurious kind of virtue was never made more account of. than in the corrupt ages of the Christian church, when an open traffic, as it were, was kept up between earth and heaven; there being nothing of a spiritual nature that they did not imagine might be bought with money.

In the eighth century, Mosheim says, a notion prevailed, that future punishment might be prevented by donations to religious uses;¹ and therefore few wills were made in which something was not bequeathed to the church.² For, of all pious uses, in the disposal of wealth, the church (which as it was then always understood, meant the clergy or the monks) was universally deemed a better object than the poor. Hence that amazing accumulation of wealth, which nearly threatened the utter extinction of all merely civil pro-obvious as we now think the nature of virtue to be, and fully satisfied as we are, that the nature and excellency of it consists in its tendency to make men happy, in the possession of their own minds, and in all their relations; so grossly has its nature been mistaken, that not only have things entirely foreign to it been substituted in its place. as those above mentioned, but even things that have no other effect than to give pain and make men miserable. This most absurd and spurious kind of virtue began very early in the Christian church; and in process of time the austerities to which Christians voluntarilysubjected themselves, in order to make their peace with God, and secure their future happiness, almost exceed belief.

<sup>1</sup> Vol. II. p. 60. (P.) Cent. viii, Pt. ii, Ch. ii. Sect. iii.

2 One of the regulations of Code Napolém was wisely designed to counteract this tendency. After forbidding medical attendants to profit by testamentary grants from a patient on his deathed, beyond a fair remuneration, for their attendance, the prohibition is thus extended to the clergy: "Les mêmes règles seront observées a l'égard du ministre du culto." Code Napolém, L. iii. Ch. ii. Donations et Testament, 909. Paris, 1808, p. 226.

It has been observed before, that the first corruptions of Christianity were derived from Heathenism, and especially from the principles of the oriental philosophy; and there are similar austerities at this very day among the Hindoos. Their notion that the soul is a distinct substance from the body, and that the latter is only a prison and clog to the former, naturally leads them to extenuate and mortify the body, in order to exalt and purify the soul.3 Hence came the idea of the great use and value of fasting, of abstinence from marriage. and of voluntary pain and torture; till at length it became a maxim, that the man who could contrive to make himself the most miserable here, secures to himself the greatest share of happiness hereafter. As the principle which led to all this system came from the East. we are not surprised to find the first traces of it in those sects of Christian heretics who borrowed their leading sentiments more immediately from the principles of the oriental philosophy.

The Gnostics, considering matter and material bodies as the source of all evil, were no friends to marriage, because it was a means of multiplying corporeal beings; and upon the principle they also objected to "the doctrine of the resurrection of the body, and its future re-union with the immortal spirit." 1 Marcion also, adopt- its preparation for a better and more same "pride and contentious spirit." austerities.

See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. III. pp. 391-398.

matrimony and commerce."5

Great stress was also laid, both by the Eastern and Western philosophers, on contemplation, to which solitude was favourable. By thus excluding themselves from the world, and meditating intensely on sublime subjects, they thought they could raise the soul above all external objects, and advance

ing the principles of the oriental philo-spiritual state hereafter. Many Chrissophy, prohibited marriage, "the use tians, therefore, and especially those of wine, flesh, and of all the external who had been addicted to the Platonic comforts of life," in order to mortify philosophy, before their conversion, the body, and call off the mind from were exceedingly fond of these exerthe allurements of sense. Of the cises. And this notion, though more same nature was the doctrine of Barde-liberal than the former, which led sanes, Tatian, and many others.2 them to torment and mortify the body. Some of the heathen philosophers naturally led them to be very inattenin the Western world had been used, tive to it, seeking the cultivation of the from the same principle, to exercise mind, and the knowledge of truth, in "strange severities upon themselves a fancied abstraction from all sensible and upon their disciples, from the objects. In this state of contempladays of Pythagoras down to the time tion, joined to solitude and abstinence, of Lucian, who introduces the philo- it is no wonder that they were open to sopher Nigrinus as condemning such many illusions; fancying themselves practices, and observing that they had to be inspired in the same manner as occasioned the death of several per- the heathen prophets and prophesons."3 "The Greek philosophers had tesses had fancied themselves to be, a particular dress, and affected to and as madmen are still generally appear rough, mean and dirty.... The imagined to be in the East. These Christian monks imitated the old philo- pretensions to inspiration were most sophers in their garb and appearance," common among the Montanists, who and they were also often censured for the were also most remarkable for their

To vindicate the doctrine of corpo- In the third century, in which the real austerity, it was pretended, in the doctrine of Plato prevailed much, we second century, that Christ estab- find that marriage, though permitted lished a double rule of Christianity to all priests, as well as other persons, and virtue, the one more sublime than was thought to be unfit for those who the other, for those who wished to aspired after great degrees of sanctity attain to greater perfection. These and purity; it being supposed to subthought that it was incumbent on ject them to the power of evil demons, them to extenuate and humble the and on this account many people body, by fasting, watching and labour, wished to have their clergy unmarried.6 and to refrain from "wine, flesh, Origen, who was much addicted to Platonism, gave in to the mystic theology, and recommended the peculiar practices of the heathen mystics. founded on the notion that silence, tranquillity and solitude, accompanied with acts of mortification, which exhaust the body, were the means of exalting the soul.

The perversions of the sense of scripture, by which these unnatural practices were supported, are astonishing. Jerome, writing against marriage, calls those who are in that state vessels of dishonour; and to them he applies

1 Mosheim, I. p. 109. (P.) Cent. i. Pt. ii.

Ch. v. Soct. v.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. pp. 178, 180. (P.) Cent. ii. Pt. ii. Ch. v.
Sect. vii. -ix.

<sup>3</sup> Jortin's Remarks, III. p. 23. (P.) Ed. 1805, II. p. 168.

4 Ibid. pp. 25, 26. (P.) Pp. 169, 170.

5 Mosheim, I. p. 157. (P.) Cent. ii. Pt. ii. Ch, iii. Sect. xii,

<sup>6</sup> Ibid, I. p. 218. (P.) Cent. iii. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. vi. From Porphyrius, L. iv. p. 417.

the saying of Paul, They that are in frenzy, none were held in higher vene-

soon began to favour these maxims. century.2 Constantine revoked all the laws that made celibacy infamous among the is a species called Palmers, from a ancient Romans, and made it to be bough of palm which they carry with considered as honourable.1

various other austerities, which poor bread till they obtain what they call deluded mortals, whom I am ashamed the palm, or a complete victory over to call Christians, inflicted upon them- their sins by death.3 selves, vainly imagining to merit Many of the rules to which the the kind, but they may serve to give and spirit that prevailed in the dark found and uninterrupted silence."4 ages of the church.

century "not only lived among the wild beasts," but also after their manner. "They ran naked through the lonely deserts with a furious aspect." They fed on "grass and wild herbs, avoided the sight and conversation of men, remained motionless in certain places for several years, exposed to the rigour and inclemency of the seasons; and towards the conclusion of their lives, shut themselves up in narrow and feet or legs. miserable huts; and all this was considered as true piety, the only acceptable method of worshipping the Deity and rendering him propitious;" and by this means they attracted the highest veneration of the deluded multitude. One "Simeon, a Syrian, ....in order to climb as near heaven as he could, passed thirty-seven years of his wretched life upon five pillars, of six, twelve, twenty-two, thirty-six, and forty cubits high." Others followed his example, being "called Stylites by the Greeks, and Sancti Columnares, or Pillar Saints, by the Latins;" and, of all the instances of superstitious

the flesh cannot please God. ration than this, and the practice con-The laws also of Christian emperors tinued in the East till the twelfth

Among the popish pilgrims there them. These have no home, or place I must now proceed to mention of residence, but travel and beg their heaven by them, for themselves and monastic orders are subject are ex-In this I shall, in general, tremely rigorous. Stephen, a nobleman observe the order of time in which I of Auvergne, who instituted the order find an account of them in ecclesias of Grande-montagne, with the permistical history; observing that the facts sion of Gregory VII., forbade his I mention are but a small specimen of monks, "even the sick and infirm," "the use of flesh," and imposed upon us an idea of the general sentiments them "the solemn observance of a pro-

The hermits of Luceola in Umbria Some of the Mystics of the fifth were not allowed anything of fat in the preparation of their vegetables. They are only raw herbs, except on Sundays and Thursdays. On other days they ate nothing but bread and water, and were continually employed in prayer or labour. They kept a strict silence all the week, and on Sundays only spake to one another between vespers and complines; and in their cells they had no covering for their

The persons the most distinguished in ecclesiastical history for their bodily austerities and religious exercises, were Dominic, who was one of these hermits, and Peter Damiani, who was his spiritual guide, both of whom were mentioned above. This Dominic for many years had next to his skin an iron coat of mail, which he never put off but for the sake of flagellation. He seldom passed a day without chanting two psalters, at the same time whipping himself with both his hands;

&lt;sup>2</sup> Mosheim, I. pp. 390, 391. (P.) Cent. v. Pt. ii.

Ch. iii. Sect. xi. xii.

3 History of Popery, I. p. 212. (P.) Ed. 1725, I.

p. 113. 4 Mosheim, II. p. 308. (P.) Cent. xi. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. xxvi.

and yet this was his time of greatest relaxation. For in Lent, and while he was performing penance for other persons, he would repeat at least three psalters a day, whipping himself at the same time. He would often repeat two psalters without any interval between them, without even sitting down, or ceasing for one moment to whip

Peter Damiani asking him one day if he could kneel with his coat of mail, he said, "When I am well I make a hundred genuflections every fifteenth psalm, which is a thousand in the whole psalter; " and one time he told his master that he had gone through the psalter eight times in one day and night; and at another time, trying his rabble," they fell into discredit.3 utmost, he repeated it twelve times, and as far as the psalm which begins with Beati Quorum of the thirteenth. And in repeating the psalter he did not stop at the hundred and fifty psalms, but added to them the canticles, the hymns, the creed of St. Athanasius, and the litanies, which are to be found at the end of the old psalters. His fasting and his coat of mail made his skin as black as a negro, and besides this he wore four iron rings, two on his thighs and two on his legs, to which he afterwards added four others: and besides this iron shirt, he had another under him to sleep upon. Notwithstanding these severities, he died very old on the fourteenth of October. 1062, which day is dedicated to his honour in the calendar of the Church of Rome.1 The austerities of Peter Damiani were similar to these, and an account of them may be seen in the same historian.2

In the thirteenth century there arose in Italy a sect that was, called the Flagellantes, or Whippers, and it was propagated from thence over all the countries of Europe. They ran about in promiscuous multitudes, "of both sexes and of all ranks and ages," both <sup>1</sup> Fleury, XIII. p. 99. (P.) [A. D. 1062.] See "St. Dominique l'Encuirassé." Nouv. Diet. Hist.

II. p 463.
<sup>2</sup> Fleury, p. 205, &c. (P.) [A. D. 1071-2.]

in public places and in deserts, "with whips in their hands, lashing their naked bodies with the most astonishing severity," shrieking dreadfully, and looking up to heaven "with an air of distraction, ferocity and horror; and all this with a view to obtain the divine mercy for themselves and others." For they maintained "that flagellation was of equal virtue with baptism. and the other sacraments;" and "that the forgiveness of all sins was to be obtained by it from God, without the merits of Jesus Christ." These people "attracted the esteem and veneration not only of the populace, but also of their rulers," but being afterwards joined "by a turbulent and furious

The Jansenists carried their austerities so far, that they called those persons who put an end to their own lives by their "excessive abstinence or labour, the sacred victims of repentance," and said that they had "been consumed by the fire of divine love." By these sufferings they thought to "appease the anger of the Deity, and not only contribute to their own felicity, but draw down abundant blessings upon their friends and upon the church....The famous Abbé de Paris...put himself to a most painful death," depriving himself of almost all the blessings of life, "in order to satisfy," as he thought, "the justice of an incensed God."4

So famous was the devout nunnery of Port Royal in the Fields, "that multitudes of pious persons were ambitious to dwell in its neighbourhood," and to imitate the manners of those nuns; and this in so late a period as the seventeenth century. "The end which these penitents had in view was, by silence, hunger, thirst, prayer, bodily labour, watchings, sorrow, and other voluntary acts of selfdenial, to efface the guilt and remove <sup>3</sup> Mosheim, III. pp. 94, 95, 206. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. iii.; Cent. xiv. Pt. ii. Ch. v.

Sect. vii.

4 Ibid. IV. p. 382 (P.) Cent. xvii. Sect. ii.
Pt. i. Ch. i. Sect. xlvi.

the pollution the soul had derived from natural corruptions or evil habits." Many persons, "illustrious both by their birth and stations," chose this mode of life.1

Dr. Middleton mentions a practice still kept up at Rome, which is equally tioned, and as oft ridiculed, by the plation. ancient writers."

exercise of the same kind, and in the same season of Lent, which, under the notion of penance, is still a more absurd mockery of all religion: when on a certain day, appointed annually for this discipline, men of all conditions assemble themselves towards the evening in one of the churches of the city, where whips, or lashes made of cords, are provided, and distributed to every person present; and after they are all served, and a short office of devotion performed, the candles being put out, upon the warning of a little bell, the whole company begin presently to strip, and try the force of these whips on their own backs, for the space of near an hour; during all which time the church becomes, as it were, the proper image of hell, where nothing is heard but the noise of lashes and chains, mixed with the groans of these self-tormentors; till, satiated with their exercise, they are content to put on their clothes, and the candles being lighted again upon the tinkling of a second bell, they all appear in their proper dress."2

Besides the idea of tormenting the body for the good of the soul, the Platonists especially, as I have observed above, had a notion of exalting the soul by contemplation, fancying that the shocking on account of its cruelty and mind contained within itself the eleabsurdity. "In one of these proces- ments of all knowledge, and that they sions, made lately to St. Peter's, in were best drawn forth by looking with-the time of Lent, I saw," says he, in; and also that communion with in; and also that communion with "that ridiculous penance of the Flagel- God was best kept up by an abstraclantes, or self-whippers, who march tion of the mind from all corporeal with whips in their hands, and lash things. These notions chiefly gave rise themselves as they go along, on the to what is generally called mysticism, bare back, till it is all covered with with which the minds of the early blood; in the same manner as the monks were much tinctured, and which. fanatical priests of Bellona, or the more or less, affected most of those Syrian goddess, as well as the votaries who had recourse to bodily austerities. of Isis, used to slash and cut them. But others, without taking any parselves of old;....which mad piece of ticular pains to torment the body, gave discipline we find frequently men- themselves almost wholly to contem-

This turn of mind, giving great "But," says he, "they have another scope for the flights of fancy, produced very different effects on different persons, and in some it operated as an antidote to the vulgar superstition of the Church of Rome, in which hardly anything was attended to for many ages besides mere bodily exercises. For though the ideas of the Mystics were very confused, they had a notion of the necessity of aiming at something of inward purity, distinct from all ritual observances. Nay, these notions led some of them (seeing the abuse that had been made of positive rites) to renounce them all together, even those of divine appointment, as baptism and the Lord supper.

Mosheim says that, "if any sparks of real piety subsisted" during the reign of papal superstition, it was "among the Mystics," who, "renouncing the sub-tilty of the schools, the vain contentions of the learned, with all the acts and ceremonies of external worship, exhorted their followers to aim at nothing but internal sanctity of heart and communion with God, the centre and source

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mosheim, pp. 384, 385. (P.) Loc. cit. Sect. xlvii.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Letter from Rome, p. 190, &c. (P.) Works, III. pp. 100 101.

Mystics were loved and respected by many persons who had a serious sense of religion;" but, he adds, they joined much superstition with their reveries.1

On some persons these notions had a very unfavourable effect. In the thirmans and Flemish, Beghards and Begof piety and devotion.... In France Beghins and Beghines..... They ran from place to place, clothed in the most singular and fantastic apparel, and begged their bread with wild shouts and clamours, rejecting with horror every kind of industry and labour, as an obstacle to divine contemplation." They power of contemplation, and by calling off his mind from sensible and terrestrial objects, might be united to the Deity in an ineffable manner," so as to become "a part of the godhead, ... in the same sense and manner that Christ was," and thereby become "freed from the obligation of all laws human and divine." In consequence of this, "they treated with contempt the ordinances of the gospel ... as of no sort of use to the perfect man." Some of these poor wretches were burnt in the Inquisition, and endured various other persecutions.2

We even find some who carried their notion of the abstraction of the mind from the body to such a degree, that they fancied that when the mind had attained to a certain pitch of perfection by means of contemplation, no act in which the body only was concerned could affect it; so that they might indulge themselves in any sensual pleasure without contracting the least deof holiness and perfection. Hence the this opinion could not but be exceedingly pernicious.

Some of the spiritual brethren in Flanders (and who, as Mosheim says, were patronized by several of the reformed churches) maintained, that the Deity was the sole operating cause in teenth century there was formed a the mind of man, and the immediate society called "the Brethren and Sisters author of all human actions; and conof the free spirit, ... called by the Ger- sequently that the distinction of good and evil was groundless, that religion uttes, ... a name usually given to those consisted in the union of the soul with who made an extraordinary profession God, attained by contemplation and elevation of mind, and that when this they were known by the appellation of was gained, all indulgence of the appetites and passions was perfectly innocent.3 "Margaret Poretta, who made such a shining figure" amongst the Beghards, and who "was burnt at Paris" in 1310, wrote "an elaborate treatise," to prove "that the soul, when absorbed in the love of God, is free from maintained "that every man, by the the restraint of every law, and may freely gratify all its natural appetites without contracting any guilt."

These licentious maxims were ascribed by the Jesuits, but probably without reason, to the Quietists in general, a sect which arose in 1686, and gave great disturbance to the court of Rome. The Inquisition put many of these sectaries in prison, and, among others, Molinos, who was one of the chief of them, and they put him to the torture in order to discover his accomplices. Letters were also written to all the bishops of Italy to exhort them not to suffer Quietism to take root in their dioceses. But, notwithstanding this, the sect made such progress in a short time, by the external marks of mortification, devotion, contemplation, abstraction of mind, and a pretended intimate union with God, that many persons of condition adopted their sentiments; and even some cardinals were infected by them. On this the Popes and the Jesuits exerted themselves so filement of soul. The consequences of much, that in a general congregation

Mosheim, III. pp. 301, 302. (P.) Cent xv.
 Sect. i. Ch. i. Sect. xix.
 Didd. pp. 122-124. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii.
 Ch. v. Sect. ix. x. Four friars were burnt as Beguins in 1318. See Limborch, C. xix. I. p. 105.

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. III. p. 27. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. v.

<sup>4</sup> Ibid. III. p. 202. (P.) Cent. xiv. Pt. ii. Ch. v. Sect. iv. of the Inquisition, Molinos was condemned to perpetual imprisonment, and to renounce his opinions.1

This sect made great progress in Italy in 1696, and increased notwithstanding all the opposition which was made to it. The pious Fenelon, archbishop of Cambray, gave in to this visionary system, and his humility and excellent disposition appeared, together with his weakness of mind, and bigoted attachment to the Church of Rome, in his readiness to recant, and condemn his own writings when they were censured by the Pope.2

Madame Bourignon was a woman who distinguished herself much by an attachment to the same system. She maintained "that the Christian religion neither consists in knowledge nor in practice, but in a certain internal feeling and divine impulse, that arises immediately from communion with the

Deity."3

Something similar to the principles of the Quietists are those of the Quakers in England; who, though they are far from substituting anything in the place of virtue, yet expect supernatural illumination and assistance, to enlighten the mind and to form it to virtue. They maintain, that there is concealed in the minds of all men, a certain portion of the same light or wisdom that exists in the Supreme Being, which is drawn forth by self-converse and contemplation. This divine light they usually call the internal word, or Christ within. But many of the modern Quakers make this hidden principle to be nothing more than that of natural conscience, or reason; though in this they certainly depart from the genuine principles of their ancestors, on which their sect was founded. The primitive Quakers (even as the more rigid among them at present do) certainly pretended to speak and act by the same kind of inspiration by which the apostles themselves acted, and therefore they made no greater account of the apostolic writings, or of the Scriptures in general, than of their own suggestions.4

1 Histoire des Papes, V. p. 381. (P.) See "A Letter writ from Rome, . . . . . concerning the Quietists." Sect. iv. Suppt. to Burnet's Letters, 1658, pp. 1-93.

2 "Si le Pape condamne mon livre, je serat, s'il plait à Dieu, le prémier à le condamner, et à faire un mandement pour en défendre la lecture." Letter from Paris to the Duke of Beauvilliers, 1697. Life of Fenelon, 1723, p. 97. Examen, &c. 1747, p. 112.

3 Mosheim, V. p. 65. (P.) Cont, xvii, Sect. ii. Pt. ii. Ch. vii, Sect. iv.

As the last effort of human ingenuity and depravity, I shall give a short account of the sophistical casuistry of the Jesuits; a religious order which arose after the Reformation, and which was for some time esteemed to be the great bulwark of the papal power, but is now, in consequence of their becoming suspected by the civil powers, happily abolished.5

They employed all the force of their subtle distinctions to sap the foundations of morality, in order to accommodate themselves to princes, and great men, who generally chose their confessors from their body; and in process of time they opened a door to all sorts of licentiousness. Among other things, they represented it as a matter of indifference what motives determined the actions of men; and taught that there is no sin in transgressing a divine law that is not fully known to a person, or the true meaning of which is not perfectly understood by him, or that is not even present to his mind at the time of action. They also maintained "that an opinion or precept may be followed with a good conscience, when it is inculcated by four, or three, or two, nay, even by one doctor of any considerable reputation, even though it be contrary to the judgment of him that follows it. and even of him that recommends it." This they call the doctrine of probability.

They also held what they call the doctrine of philosophical sin, according or disgrace that it brings upon a man, to which "an action, or course of actions, that is repugnant to the dictates of reason," might not be "offensive to the Deity." They held that wicked actions might "be innocently performed," if persons could, in their own mind, connect "a good end" with them, or as they expressed it, be "capable of directing their intention aright," Thus. a man who kills his neighbour in a duel would be acquitted by them, if, at the time, he "turn his thoughts from the principle of vengeance to the more decent principle of honour." Agreeably to this, they even held that an oath might be taken with "mental additions and tacit reservations." This, however, does not agree with their being charged with paying no attention to the motives with which actions are performed; but it agrees very well with their maintaining that the sacraments produced their effect by their own virtue, and immediate operation, or what they called opus operatum. But it cannot be supposed that all these maxims were held with perfect uniformity by them all.1

&lt;sup>4</sup> See Barclay, Prop. ii. iii. on Immediate Revelation and the Scriptures. 5 There has been, lately, a feeble attempt to restore this Order.

The folly and wickedness of these maxims were admirably exposed by the famous Pascal, in his Provincial Letters, which, for their excellent composition and good sense, were read with the utmost avidity, and the highest approbation, through all Europe; in consequence of which their doctrines were deed the extreme odiousness of them contributed not a little to the downfall of the order.

It is a dangerous maxim, not of the Jesuits only, but of the divines of the Church of Rome in general, to distinguish between contrition and attrition; allowing great merit even to the latter, though it consist of any kind of sorrow on the account of sin, even for the loss

<sup>1</sup> Mosheim, III. pp. 467, 468. IV. p. 355, &c. (P.) Cent. xvi. Sect. iii. Pt. i. Ch. i. Sect. xxxv. Note [a]. Cent. xvii. Sect. ii. Pt. i. Ch. i. Sect, xxxv.

"without a resolution to sin no more. Such a sorrow as this is, they teach, does make the sacrament (of penance) effectual. This was settled by the Council of Trent," though the Protestants thought that it struck "at the root of all religion and virtue."2

But the most flagrant instance of immorality with which the Church of Rome is charged, is the holding that no faith is to be kept with heretics; and upon this principle the Council of Constance acted, when the safe conduct which the emperor Sigismund had given to John Huss, the Bohemian reformer, was declared to be invalid. as given to an heretic, on which he was arrested and condemned to the flames. From this time it was the opinion of many in the Church of Rome, that no promise made to an heretic is binding.

Pope Eugenius authorized Uladislaus, king of Hungary, to break a solemn treaty with Amurath, emperor of the Turks, which ended as it might be wished that such horrible prevarication might always end. The Turk carried a copy of the treaty into the field of battle, and displaying it in the beginning of the engagement, pronounced aloud, "Behold, O Jesus, these are the covenants which thy Christians, swearing by thy name, made with me. Now, therefore, if thou art a God, revenge these injuries universally exploded, and held in the to me, and to thyself, upon their pergreatest abhorrence by all men. Infidious heads." The consequence was, fidious heads." The consequence was, that the Turks being exceedingly exasperated, and the Christians dispirited, the latter were put to flight; and both the king, and the cardinal, who had urged him to break the peace, and who was along with him, were killed upon the spot.

I have not found any public or general declaration on the subject of keeping no faith with heretics, but that of Clement IX., who, in his Acts, printed at Rome, in 1724, expressly tions made in favour of Protestants, are entirely null and void, whenever they are prejudicial to the Catholic faith, the salvation of souls, or to any rights of the church; even though such engagements have been often ratified and confirmed by oath.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Burnet, p. 348. (P.) Art. xxv. Ed. 4, p. 256. Con. Trid. Sess. xiv. Ch. iv. p. 89.

I have no doubt, however, but that the Catholics of this day would reject this doctrine with as much abhorrence as Protestants themselves: 1 and, indeed, if it had not been a general opinion with them, that oaths and subscriptions prescribed by Protestants were binding, no reason can be given why they should not have taken the oaths which have been employed in this country to prevent them from enjoying the advantages of other subjects; and yet, in all the time since the government of this country has been Protestant, no such instance has been produced. The Catholics have universally submitted to their exclusion from all places of honour and profit, the payment of double taxes, &c. &c. without ever endeavouring to relieve themselves by a declaration or oath, which the Protestants say they would declares that all promises or stipula- not consider as binding, and for the violation of which they might, it is said, be at least sure of obtaining an absolution at Rome.<sup>2</sup> But even there, it is very probable, that no such absolution would now be given.

It is to be hoped, that in many other respects, Catholics do not lay the stress they have been formerly taught to do on things foreign to real virtue, that is, to good dispositions of mind, and a good conduct in life; as it is to be lamented, that many Protestants are far from being free from all superstition in these respects. But now that the minds of men seem to be so well opened to the admission of religious truth in general, errors so fundamental as these which relate to morality will hardly remain long without redress. It will be happy if the reformation of Christians in doctrine and discipline be followed by a suitable reformation in practice.

" If there be any Protestant of common understanding and candour, who may still suspect that a snake lunks in the grass, I would ask him this plain question: If the English Catholics imagined that the Pope could dispense with their oaths, why have they so long persevered in refusing to take the oaths of Supremacy, and the Test, and so re-enter, all at once, into their British birth-rights? This consideration, alone, one might think, should stop the mouth of captiousness itself." Geddes's Apol. pp. 134, 135.

PART X.

THE HISTORY OF MINISTERS IN THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH. AND ESPECIALLY OF BISHOPS.

THE INTRODUCTION.

all chosen by the people, and were rator in their assemblies, but without ordained to their office by prayer, which, when it was made on the behalf THE Christian church was served of any particular person, was in early originally (exclusive of the apostles times always accompanied with the and other temporary officers) by Elders imposition of hands. For the sake of and Deacons only, the former being order in conducting any business that appointed for spiritual matters, and concerned the whole society, one of the latter for civil affairs. They were the elders was made president or mode-a single vote with the rest of his brethren. From this simple constitution, it is certainly astonishing to consider how these servants of the church came in time to be the lords of it, and of the world; and it is curious to observe the various steps by which this change was made.

<sup>1</sup> See the References [Rutt's Priestley], Vol. II. p. 52. Note.

SECTION I.

THE HISTORY OF CHRISTIAN MINISTERS TILL THE FALL OF THE WESTERN EMPIRE.

THE first change in the constitution of the primitive churches was making the most distinguished of the elders to be constant president, or moderator, in their assemblies, and appropriating to him the title of (επισκοπος), or bishop, which had before been common to all the presbyters or elders, but without giving him any peculiar power or authority.

Since the first Christian converts were almost wholly from the common ranks of life, there could be no great difference in their qualifications for any office, except what natural good sense, or age and experience, might give to some more than to others. In this state of things, it is evident, that public worship; but considering these none of them could have been educated not as new and distinct churches, but with a view to any employment of this as branches of the old one, in order to kind. But it was soon found expedient, preserve the connexion with the mother and especially on account of the con-church, they did not ordain a new troversies which they had with Jews bishop, but had all the ministerial and Heathens, as well as among them- duty done either by some of the forselves, that their public instructors, mer presbyters, or by new ones orand especially these bishops, should dained for that purpose. be men of some learning; and accordingly schools were erected, in very length the mother church, or some of early times, in which young men were the dependent churches, sending out instructed in such branches of know- more colonies, and to greater distances, ledge, as were found to be most useful the bishop of the mother church (being to them in the discharge of their the only person in the district who ministerial duties. Ancient writers bore that name) came to be a diocesan say, that the apostle John established bishop, whose elders and deacons prea school, or academy of this kind, at sided in all the separate and dependent any more power than that of having Ephesus. However, that which was afterwards established at Alexandria, in Egypt, called the Catechetic School, formed upon the plan of those of the Greek philosophers, was particularly famous.

A better education and superior fitness for the more conspicuous duties of Christian societies, in expounding the Scriptures, giving various instruction, public prayer, &c. would naturally create a greater difference than had been known before between Christian ministers and the people, and for the same reason between the bishops and the elders; and power and influence never fail to accompany superior qualifications. But it was several centuries before the common people ceased to have votes in everything that related to the whole society.

The first great change in the constitution of the Christian church was the exaltation of the presbyters into the rank of bishops in churches: which was, in fact, an annihilation of that important order of men, and threw the government of a church into the hands of one person.

The manner in which this change took place was gradual and easy. Whenever the number of converts in any place became too great for them to assemble with convenience in one building, they erected other places of

In this train things went on, till at

in this state at the beginning of the men. fourth century, when Marullus divided it (that is, all the Christians in Rome) succeeded of course to the place of preinto twenty-five parishes, appointing sident among them. But this ceased one priest for each of them, to instruct to be the case even in the age of the the people, and to administer the sa- apostles, when the president was chosen craments. It was the custom for the by the plurality of votes, and then the bishop to send a part of the conse-title of bishop, which before had been crated bread, after the administration common to all the presbyters, was appendent churches.1 Sometimes, however, when new distance from any capital town, they and splendour of the city bishops. tury, their rank and power were very much diminished. In a council held at Antioch, in 341, these country the country bishops were entirely abolished (though not in all places till so deans and arch-priests were instituted of diocesan episcopacy was fully established. There were bishops in capiwithin their districts were governed by presbyters, or deacons under them.

As the distinction between bishops churches. Very few elders also re- much controversy between the advomained in the mother church, because cates for the Church of England and none were now ordained to that office, the Dissenters, I shall produce a few except such as lived by the ministry. more authorities to prove that origi-The Church of Rome must have been nally they were the same order of

At first the oldest of the presbyters of the eucharist, to each of these de- propriated to him. This, says Sueur, was in the time of Hyginus.4

In the age of Cyprian, when distincchurches were erected in places at a tions were made among the bishops themselves, and when he himself was were governed by new-made bishops, the metropolitan of the whole province. presbyters and deacons, like the origi- and one who was a strenuous advocate nal churches. Beausobre says, that he for the power and dignity of the clergy, believes one cannot find an instance so it appears that even this metropolitan early as the middle of the third cen- bishop had no more authority than to tury of a church governed by a single assemble the clergy of his province, to presbyter.2 These country bishops, preside in their councils, and to adcalled choroepiscopi, made but a poor monish his brethren. There was no figure in comparison with the opulence act of a spiritual nature that was peculiar to himself; and, in his absence But before they were generally abo- from the church, during his perseculished, which was in the fourth cen- tion, every part of his office was discharged by his presbyters.

Chrysostom says, that when the apostle Paul gives orders to Titus to bishops were forbidden to ordain ordain elders in every city, "he means priests or deacons, and had only the bishops. For," says he, "he would not power of appointing persons to infe- have the whole island (of Crete) comrior offices in the church. By degrees mitted to one man, but that every one should have and mind his own proper cure; for so the labour would be easier late as the tenth century), when rural to him, and the people to be governed would have more care taken of them: in their place.3 After this the system since their teacher would not run about to govern many churches, but would tablished. There were bishops in capital to the ruling one only, and so tal towns only, and all the churches keep it in good order." Theophylaet also interprets the passage in the same manner, saying, "that every city should have its own pastor," and that and presbyters has been the subject of by presbyters in this place the apostle

Sueur, A. D. 307, 313. (P.)
 Hist. of Manicheism, I. p. 1
 Sueur, A. D. 341, 439. (P.) 113. (P.)

Ibid. A. D. 142. (P.)
 In Titum, L. v. Op. X. p. 1700. (P.) Pierce's Vindication, p. 375.

"means bishops." Occumenius and bad consequences, as the attendance of Theodoret likewise say, "that the the neighbouring bishops on the occaapostle would not commit" the charge of "so large an island to one man,"2 and yet it is not so large as some of a considerable number had usually our dioceses.

Jerome, on the Epistle to Titus, and bishops were the same; but that by degrees the care of a church was dissension. This he proves at large from many passages in the New Testament. Let the bishops know, says he, that they are above the priests more by custom than by the appointment of Christ.3 The same learned father also says that, at the beginning, churches were governed by the common council of presbyters, like an aristocracy; but afterwards the superintendency was given to one of the presbyters, who was then called the bishop, and who governed the church, but still with the council of the presbyters.4

At first bishops were appointed by the whole congregation, consisting of clergy and laity, as they were afterwards called, nor did any church apply to the neighbouring bishops to assist at the ordination. Irenæus was ordained by priests only, and such was the general custom of the church of Alexandria till the beginning of the fourth century. 5 Cyprian also says, that it belonged to the people chiefly to choose worthy pastors, and to refuse the unworthy.

the custom to invite the neighbouring of the office of bishop; no sooner was bishops to attend, and assist on the occasion; and while this was voluntary on both sides, there was a decency and propriety in it; as it showed the selves. It appears by the act of the readiness of the neighbouring bishops third Council of Carthage, that whereto receive the new one as a friend and as before, priests had the power of sion, from being customary, came to be considered as necessary; and as attended, it came to be a rule, that it could not be done without the consays, that among the ancients, priests currence of three, one of whom laid his hand on the head of the new bishop, when he was recommended to the blessgiven to one person, in order to prevent ing of God by prayer. In the third century this was always done by the metropolitan bishop; at least it was never done without his consent or order. The second Council of Nice ordered that bishops should be chosen by other bishops. But in the West the people preserved their right of choosing their bishops till after the reign of Charlemagne and his son; and it was not taken from them till the Council of Avignon, in 1050.6

The usual ceremony in appointing a bishop was the imposition of hands, which, as I have observed, was originally nothing more than a gesture which was always made use of when prayer was made for any particular person. What is imposition of hands, says Austin, but the prayer that is made over the person ? 7 Accordingly we find that this ceremony was not always thought necessary. For, instead of imposing hands on the bishops of Alexandria, they only placed them on their chair, a custom which continued

many centuries.8

Though bishops were originally no other than presbyters, the manner of Afterwards, when a new bishop was their ordination being the same, and chosen in any church, it came to be the presbyters discharging every part the distinction between them established, than the bishops began to appropriate certain functions to thembrother. But this innocent custom had assigning the time of public penance,

<sup>1</sup> Pierce's Vindication, p. 375. (P.)

<sup>**</sup> Ibide p. 343. (P.)

** Opera, VI. p. 198. (P.)

** Anecdotes, pp. 24, 54. (P.)

** Basnage, Histoire, II. p. 25. (P.)

 □ Ibid. p. 24. (P.)
 7 De Baptismo, contra Donatistas, L. iii. C. xvi.
 Opera, VII. p. 410. (P.)
 □ Basnage, II. p. 29. (P.)

and of giving absolution, as also of generally the bishop of the metropolis. consecrating virgins, and of making or the city in which the civil governor the chrism (or that mixture of oil and resided, he was called the Metrobalm with which one of the unctions politan or Archbishop. The term at baptism was made) without the ad- archbishop was first used by Athanavice of the bishop, all these things were forbidden by these canons, and from the year 430 it was common in given to the bishops.1 But the prin- the church.3 cipal thing by which the bishops were distinguished afterwards was the power of confirming the baptized, when that chrism was applied.

After the reign of Adrian, when Jerusalem was utterly destroyed, and the Jews dispersed, an opinion began to prevail among Christians, that their ministers succeeded to the characters, rights and privileges of the Jewish priesthood; and this was another source of honour and profit to the Upon this the presbyters assumed the style and rank of priests, bishops that of high priests, and deacons that of Levites.2

The principal occasion of the great distinction that was made between the clergy and the people, between the bishops and the presbyters, and also among the bishops themselves, was their assembling in synods, to deliberate about affairs of common concern, a custom which began about the middle of the second century; for it cannot be traced any higher. By this means the power of the clergy was considerably augmented, and the privileges of the people diminished. For though at first these bishops, assembled in convocation, acknowledged themselves to be no more than the deputies of the people, they soon dropped that style and made decrees by their own authority, and at length claimed a power of prescribing both in matters of faith and of discipline.

For the more orderly holding of these assemblies, some one bishop in a large district was employed by common consent to summon them, and to preside in them; and this being

Sueur, A. D. 397. (P.)
 Mosheim, I. p. 146. (P.) Cent. ii. Pt. ii. Ch. ii.

sius, afterwards by Epiphanius, and

When the clergy of several provinces assembled, they appointed officers with a more extensive jurisdiction, and called them patriarchs, or primates. This last term was not used before the time of Leo I. That of patriarch was first used by the Montanists, and in time came to be applied to the five principal sees of Rome, Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch and Jerusalem.4 "The patriarchs were distinguished by considerable and extensive rights and privileges. They alone consecrated the bishops" of their respective provinces. "They assembled yearly in council the clergy of their respective districts," and all important controversies were referred to their decision, especially where the bishops were concerned; and "they appointed vicars, or deputies," to act for them

"in the remoter provinces." Several places, however, in the fifth century, maintained their independence of these patriarchs, and both the emperors and the general councils were obstacles in the way of their ambition.5 Many of these abuses were promoted by the constitutions of Constantine. who was the first person that assembled a general council, to which all the bishops of the Christian world were invited. Having made a new division of the empire for civil purposes, he adapted the external government of the church to it. When this division was completed, those who make the correspondence between the civil and ecclesiastical governments the most exact, say that the bishops corresponded to those magistrates who presided over single cities; the metropolitan, or archbishop, to the proconsuls or presidents of provinces, comprehending several cities; the primates to the emperors' vicars, or lieutenants, each of whom governed in one of the thirteen great dioceses, into which the whole empire was divided; and the patriarchs to the prefecti prætorii, each of whom had several dioceses under them. But it is not probable that this subdivision was ever exactly observed. However, the government of the church answered much more exactly to the government of the state in the East than in the West; and in the western parts of Africa there was little or no correspondence between them.1

Sueur, A. D. 281. (P.)

&lt;sup>5</sup> Mosheim, I. pp. 371, 372. (P.) Cent. v. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. ii.

In consequence of this arrangement, a bishop in a metropolitan city acquired the power of ordaining and deposing the bishops of the cities dependent upon his metropolis, and also of terminating their differences and providing for their wants in general. But this power was not absolute, since the metropolitan could do nothing without the consent of the bishops of the province. There were also some bishops who had only the title of metropolitan, without any power annexed

As the metropolitans followed the rank of their metropolis, so the patriarchs, or exarchs, as they were sometimes called, followed the condition of the capital cities of their diocese. Thus, as Antioch was the capital city of the East, containing fifteen provinces, the bishop of that city exercised a jurisdiction over all the metropolitans, having a power of assembling the councils of the dioceses, &c. Constantinople being made the seat of the empire, the bishop of it, not content with the title of metropolitan, or even of exarch, was first honoured with that of Patriarch, as more expressive of dignity and pre-eminence; and thence he took occasion to give a greater extent to his patriarchate, so as to encroach upon the province of the patriarch of Rome.<sup>3</sup>

1 Ancodotes, p. 75. (P<sub>•</sub>)
2 lbid. p. 63. (P.)

As the higher clergy rose above the inferior, so these were not wanting to themselves, but magnified their respective offices in proportion. In the fourth century, those presbyters and deacons who filled the first stations of those orders, obtained the name of arch-presbyters and arch-deacons, and also obtained more power than the rest of their brethren. It was a considerable time, however, before the offices of priests and deacons came to be confounded as they now are in many respects. But when there was peculiar profit or honour in any of the functions of deacons or archdeacons. they were occasionally bestowed upon the priests who retained the name of the lower office. An instance of this we have not only in the present office of archdeacon in the Church of England, but in the deans and chapters of cathedral churches.

In consequence of all these changes, there did not remain, at the conclusion of the fourth century, so much as a shadow of the ancient constitution of the Christian church; the privileges of the presbyters and people having been usurped by the bishops, who did not fail to assume the state and dignity suited to their new distinctions. Indeed, long before this time, and even before the empire became Christian, a spirit of pride and ambition, that very spirit against which our Saviour so frequently and earnestly cautioned his disciples, had got fast hold of many of the Christian bishops. We find in the writings of Cyprian, that in his time many bishops assumed great state, with splendid ensigns of power, as a princely throne, surrounded with officers, &c. The presbyters and deacons also imitated them in some measure; and this last order, being above the offices to which they were originally appointed, had them done by inferior officers created on purpose, as doorkeepers, readers, grave-diggers, &c.

&lt;sup>3</sup> Ibid. pp 65, 73. (P.) <sup>4</sup> Mosheim, I. p. 290. (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. Ch. ii. Sect. viii.

The pride of the bishops was so great in the fourth century, and they set themselves so much higher than the priests, that Ærius, a Semi-Arian, and a great reformer, thought it necessary to urge, among "his principal tenets, that bishops were not distinguished from presbyters by any divine right; but that, according to the institution of the New Testament, their offices and authority were absolutely the same." His doctrine in general, by which he endeavoured to bring the discipline of the church to its pristine state, excited much disturbance in several provinces of Asia Minor.1

The wealth and power of the bishops of the greater sees were soon very considerable, so as to make them resemble princes. Pretextatus, designated consul, being pressed to embrace Christianity, said, according to Marcellinus, "Make me bishop of Rome, and I will become a Christian." And yet the propriety of the clergy in general having no independent fortunes, as well as their not enriching their families out of the revenues of the church, was very evident in those times. Constantine prohibited by an edict any rich man to enter into the church. Jerome was of opinion that none of the clergy should have any property of their own; and Austin admitted none into his church who did not first dispose of all their goods. He did not, however, think this absolutely necessary, but only for their greater perfection.2

Sometimes the revenues of a church were not sufficient for the maintenance of the clergy; and in that case it was not thought improper that they should contribute to their own maintenance by their labour. In some cases this was expressly enjoined. Thus the fourth Council of Carthage, held in 398, ordered the clergy and monks to gain their livelihood by some trade, provided it did not divert them from the duties of their office.3

It was very early thought to be of great importance that the clergy should have no secular care that would engage much of their thoughts and attention. The apostolical canons, which, though spurious, were written in the fourth century, order that bishops should not meddle with the administration of public affairs; and that if they did, they should be deposed. The same orders were given by the Councils of Chalcedon, Carthage, Mentz, &c. Nay, it appears by the letters of Cyprian, that a clergyman could not even be a guardian or trustee to a child. With this view Constantine exempted the clergy from all public and civil employments. But for the sake of gain, the clergy of those times were too ready to undertake any office or employment whatever. Chrysostom laments that ecclesiastics, abandoning the care of souls, became stewards, and farmers of taxes, employments unbecoming their holy ministry. Bishops, he said, should have nothing but food and raiment, that they may not have their desires drawn after worldly things.4

But at the same time that Constantine and other emperors released the clergy from all obligation to duties of a civil nature, they gave them secular business in another way, viz. by enforcing the rules of church discipline, and by giving the bishops the cognizance of all ecclesiastical affairs and ecclesiastical persons, such as had before been brought to the secular judges,5 and Justinian greatly enlarged this kind of authority. The clergy having thus tasted of civil power, soon got a fondness for it, which required to be restrained. So early as the middle of the fifth century, it was complained that the bishops wished to extend their jurisdiction; and in 452, Valentinian III. made a law, declaring that a bishop

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mosheim, I. p. 314. (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. ii. Ch. iii. Sect. xxi

Simon on Church Revenues, p. 24. (P.)

Sueur, A. D. 898. (P.)
 In 1 Tim. v. 17. Op. X. p. 1605. (P.)
 Sueur, A. D. 856. (P.)
 Anecdotes, p. 125. (P.)

but with their own consent.1

of the Roman emperors, both in the those who were married at all. tinued to act the same part.

were to officiate in them. And it was Reformation. an old heathen opinion, "that nations and provinces were happy, and free from danger in proportion to the num-had no power to judge even the clergy, ber of fanes and temples" they contained.3

In this age, and indeed much later, As it was deemed inconsistent with it was far from being thought improper the clerical character to have any secuthat the general regulation of ecclesi- lar concerns, so in this age, this idea, astical matters should be in the hands together with that of the greater purity of the supreme civil power. Constan- of the unmarried state, made it to be tine made many laws in ecclesiastical thought not quite proper for the clergy matters, as concerning the age, the to have wives and families, lest their qualification and duties of the clergy; thoughts should be distracted by the and Justinian added many more. Ap- cares of this life; though marriage was peals were made to the emperors against not absolutely prohibited to the priests. the injustice of the synods. They This rigour was introduced by the Monreceived them, and appointed such tanists. These condemned all second bishops to hear and try the causes, as marriages, and this opinion of theirs happened to be about the court. The generally prevailed among Christians emperors called several councils, they afterwards; and not only did they reeven sat in them, and confirmed their fuse to admit to the priesthood those decrees. This was the constant practice who had been married twice, but even

East and in the West; and when the So much were the minds of Chrisempire was divided into many lesser tians in general impressed with these sovereignties, those petty princes con-sentiments, at the time that the empire became Christian, that it was pro-Though the regulations established posed at the Council of Nice, that the by the clergy were numerous in the bishops, priests and deacons should time of Constantine, they contained cease to cohabit with the wives which nothing that could justly excite the they had married while they were lay-jealousy of the emperors; because it men. But at the instance of Paphwas then universally agreed, that the nutius, a venerable old confessor, this emperors ought to regulate the eccle- did not pass into a decree; and there-siastical discipline. One book of the forethese fathers contented themselves Theodosian code is wholly employed with ordering, that priests who were on regulations respecting the persons not already married should abstain and goods of ecclesiastics.<sup>2</sup> from it. But even before this, viz. at A kind of ecclesiastical power was a synod held at Elvira, in Spain, in also allowed to many rich laymen, as, the year 306, celibacy was absolutely in many cases, they had the appoint- enjoined to priests, deacons and subment of the bishops; at least they deacons.4 However, notwithstanding could not be appointed without their these regulations, and every provision consent. This right of patronage was that was made afterwards to secure introduced in the fourth century, to the celibacy of the clergy, supported encourage the opulent to erect a num- by the general opinion of Christians, ber of churches; which they were the the marriage of priests was not more induced to do, by having the uncommon in many parts of the power of appointing the ministers who Christian world, quite down to the

When learning became less common among the laity in the Western parts of the world, even the clergy

<sup>1</sup> Fleury's Seventh Discourse, p. 9. (P.)

&lt;sup>2</sup> Anecdotes, p. 99. (P.)

<sup>3</sup> Mosheim, I. pp. 320, 321. (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. if. Ch. iv. Sect. ii 4 Sueur, A. D. 306. (P.)

Rome, made an apology for the two were a check upon each other. bishops whom he sent thither, as his and Chalcedon, could not write, so for them."

that first Eusebius, bishop of Verceil, and after him Austin, formed in his house a society of ecclesiastics, who lived in common, having him, the bishop, for their father and master; to the canons and prebends of cathedral churches.

SECTION II.

THE HISTORY OF THE CLERGY FROM THE FALL OF THE ROMAN EMPIRE IN THE WEST, TO THE REFORMATION.

In the former period we have seen a very considerable departure from the proper character of presbyters or bishops, in those who bore that title in the Christian church. But in this we shall see much greater departure, were often found to be very ignorant; and through the increasing ignorance though it was remarkable that there and superstition in the laity, we was more literature at this time in shall find such a degree of power as-Britain, which had then suffered less sumed by the clergy, as was nearly by the invasion of barbarous nations, terminating in the entire subjection of than in other parts of the empire. When everything to their will. But in the Constantine had appointed a council meantime the different orders of those at Constantinople, Agathon, bishop of who sustained a religious character

In the first place I shall repeat what legates, on account of their want of was observed with another view in a learning; saying that, to have had a former part of this work, viz. that a theologian, he must have sent to Eng- considerable change took place in the Even in the East, several idea of the powers supposed to be given bishops, at the Councils of Ephesus to priests by their ordination, and consequently in the form of ordination. that other persons signed the decrees Originally nothing was necessary to the conferring of holy orders but prayer. It was in part to provide for the and the imposition of hands. But in better instruction of the clergy, and in the tenth and eleventh centuries, after part also as an imitation of the the introduction of the doctrine of monastic life, which rose in its credit transubstantiation, a new form was as the clergy sunk in the public esteem, observed, viz. the delivery to the priest of the vessels in which the eucharist was celebrated, with a form of words, expressing the communication of a power of offering sacrifices to God, and of celebrating masses. Also a new and in time this institution gave rise benediction was added, which respected the new doctrine of penance and absolution. For the bishop, in laying on his hands, says, Receive ye the Holy Whose sins ye remit, they are remitted, and whose sins ye retain, they are retained. According to the system now received in the Church of Rome, the priests have two distinct powers, viz. that of consecrating and that of absolving. They are ordained to the former by the delivery of the vessels. and to the latter by the bishop alone laying on his hands, and saying, Receive ye the Holy Ghost, &c. And it is said that "the bishop and priests laying on hands jointly," which from ancient custom is still retained among them, and which was the only proper ceremony of ordination, is nothing more than "their declaring, as by a suffrage. that such person ought to be ordained."4

¹ Sueur, A. D. 680. (P.)

■ Jortin's Remarks, IV. p. 277. (P.) "Some of these prelates," says Fleury, "subscribed by the hand of ■ presbyter; one because he had a lame wrist; another because he was sick; others, I suppose, because they had bones and joints in all their fingers." Jortin, Ed. 1805, III. p. 120.

³ Sueur, A. D. 395. (P.)

* Burnet on the Articles, p. 355. (P.) Art. xxv Ed. 4, p. 261.

In the former period we saw that the bishops began to reserve to themselves the power of confirming after baptism. This was fully asserted in this period. When the Bulgarians were converted to Christianity, which was in the ninth century, and their priests had both baptized and confirmed the new converts, "Pope Nicholas sent bishops among them, with orders to confirm even those who had already been confirmed by the priests." 1 However, when the doctrine of transubstantiation was established, it was not possible that the bishops, with respect to their spiritual power, should stand higher than the priests; for what power can be superior to that of making a God? And yet we find that the schoolmen endeavoured to make the episcopate to be a higher degree and extension of the priesthood.

In this period the priests assumed several new badges, or signs of their character, and these were generally borrowed from the heathen ritual. Thus the shaven head and surplices were borrowed from the Egyptian priests; and the crosier, or pastoral staff, was the lituus of the Roman augurs.2

a quite new order in the church, but in fact it was only an extension of power in the orders that existed before, without any addition to the spiritual character. This is the rank of cardinal in the Church of Rome. These cardinals, though they were not heard of in former times, now have the rank of princes in the church, with the sole power of choosing the Pope. It is about the end of the sixth century, and especially in the letters of Pope Gregory, that we first meet with the term cardinal priests and cardinal deacons, but they were then in many other churches besides that of Rome.3

Burnet on the Articles, p. 338. (P.) 'Art. xxv.

Ed. 4, p. 248.

<sup>2</sup> Hist. of Popery, III. pp. 340, 355. (P.) Ed. 1735, II. pp. 17, 25. See also Livy, L. i. C. xxviii. "On voit aux marbres et medailles antiques la forme de ce lituus, ou baton recourbé, toutes semblables à la crosse episcopale." Les Conformitez, p. 35.

Anecdotes, p. 222. (P.)

As the term cardinal signifies chief. or the principal, the cardinal priests in the Church of Rome are supposed by some to have been those priests whom Marullus, mentioned above, set over the twenty-five parishes into which he divided the Church of Rome, with priests and deacons under them, so that being next in rank to the Pope, they rose in power and wealth as he did. But till the eleventh century these cardinal priests held no considerable rank. and they were not admitted into their councils till the year 964. Or, though they might assist at them, and likewise at the nomination of the popes, as part of the body of the clergy, they were always named after the bishop; but from this time it became the interest of the popes to advance their dignity. Still, however, there remain traces of their former rank. For the popes never call themselves cardinals, but bishops. They also call bishops their brothers, but the cardinals their beloved children.

It was only in the year 1059, that the cardinals appear to be necessarily joined with the clergy in the election of a pope, but about a hundred years after this they obtained of Alexander III. that Now also we find what seems to be they should have the sole nomination; and since that time they have been continually gaining new privileges and dignities. They are now considered as "the Pope's great council," and "no oath of fidelity" is required of them. "Innocent IV., anno 1244, ordained that cardinals should, when they rode abroad, always wear a red hat, to show that they would venture their heads and expose their blood for the interest or the church; and ... Paul II., about the year 1471, ordered them to wear robes of scarlet .... Whereas all others, be they emperors or kings, must be glad to kiss the Pope's foot, cardinals are admitted to kiss his hands and mouth." If a cardinal accidentally meets a criminal going to execution he has a power of saving his life; and it is said that "No cardinal can be condemned for any crime, unless he be first convicted by seventy-two witnesses, if he is a cardinal-bishop, sixty-two if a and had their exemption from the presbyter, and twenty-seven if he be a

In very early times we find a number of inferior offices in the churches. with names suited to their business, as readers, sub-deacons, &c. None of these, however, were considered as distinct orders of clergy, but the last is enumerated as such by Pope Eugenius.

Another order of clergy took its rise in these dark ages, and was suggested by the great corruption both of the clergy and the monks in the seventh century; when many of the clergy belonging to great cathedrals formed themselves into regular communities, and were called canonici or canons, from observing certain canons or rules, which were given them by Chrodogang. bishop of Mentz, towards the middle of the seventh century, in imitation of what had before been done by Eusebius of Verceil, and Austin above mentioned. The rule of Chrodogang was observed by all the canons, as that of Benedict by all the monks.2

A regulation was made respecting this subject in 1059, when, at a council in Rome, it was ordered that those priests who kept no concubines should eat and sleep together, near the church to which they belonged, and have in common whatever revenues they had from the church, studying, and living an apostolical life. This, says Fleury, was the origin of the canons regular. A similar order was made by Nicholas

II. in 1063.

The bishops were generally at the head of these societies of clergy, and they were considered as his standing council, and during the vacancy had the jurisdiction of the diocese. But afterwards abbots, deans and provosts, &c., were preferred to that distinction, and several of them procured exemptions from any subjection to the bishop. entirely independent of the bishop, bishop's authority secured to them by a proviso in the statute of the twentyfifth of Henry VIII.3 With us those canons who have no duty whatever are called prebends.

Originally, bishops were always chosen by the people,4 though they would be naturally much influenced in their choice by the recommendation of their presbyters. But afterwards these presbyters set aside the vote of the people altogether; and when these chapters were formed, it grew into a custom in England, that the priests who constituted them, being always at hand, and easy to be assembled on the decease of a bishop, should choose him themselves, without consulting the rest of the priests. They still have the same power nominally, but their choice of a bishop is always directed by the king.

When the bishops, in consequence of their becoming landholders, came to be of great weight in the state, it could not be a matter of indifference to the prince who should be bishops. He would naturally, therefore, interesthimself in the elections. Accordingly, we soon find that the bishops of Rome, though they were chosen by the people, could not be confirmed in their office without the approbation of the emperor; and this right in the prince continued undisputed for many centuries. The great authority that Charlemagne exercised respected chiefly the election of bishops, of which he made himself master, with the knowledge and consent of the popes. He did not choose them himself, but he retained the right of approving, which he signified by delivering to them the pastoral staff and ring which was called the investiture, after which they were consecrated by the neighbouring bishops. Thus began the rights of investiture, which Our English deans and chapters are was a source of so much contention afterwards.5

See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. p. 339. Note t. 5 Anecdotes, p. 335. (P.)

Hist of Popery, III. p. 53. (P.) Ed. 1735, I. p. 368. 2 Fleury's Eighth Discourse, p. 9. (P.)

<sup>3</sup> Burnet, Pierce's Vindication, pp. 381, 384

the emperor and all secular princes infant. were forbidden to meddle with the elechands of the prince.

than secular persons, it is no wonder, how contrary soever it was to all the came to be entirely secular men, and to notions of the ancients, that bishoprics should be considered as other estates, and in some cases be given, or descend, to minors. In 925 the Pope approved of the appointment of an infant to be bishop of Rheims, another person having the administration of it: an example soon followed by princes, and an evil much complained of by Baronius. In 1478, Sixtus IV. obliged the king of Arragon, by giving the bishopric of Saragossa to a child of six years of age; a pernicious example, and unheard of till then, says the author of Histoire des Papes. In this however this writer was mistaken.

This example, pernicious as it is here said to have been, has been followed, in one instance, by Protestants. For the bishopric of Osnaburg, having, like other German bishoprics, become a principality, it was agreed, after the Reformation, that it should be held alternately by Papists and Protestants. At present it is held by the second son of the king of England, who was ap-

In the eighth general council, in 869, pointed to it when he was quite an

In the eighth century, not only were tion of any patriarch, metropolitan, or private possessions made over to ecclebishop whatever. And at the Council siastics and to monasteries, but royal of Bonaventure, in 1087, it was de-domains, such as used to be held by creed, that if any emperor, king, or princes; by which means they came other secular person, should presume into the possession of whole provinces, to give the investiture of a bishopric, cities, castles, and fortresses, with all or any other ecclesiastical dignity, he the rights and prerogatives of soveshould be excommunicated.' But by reignty; and thus churchmen became this time the popes had not only eman-dukes, counts, and marquises, and cipated themselves from the power of even commanded armies. The prince the emperor, but had arrogated to them- thought that churchmen would be selves all power in matters temporal as more faithful to him than secular well as spiritual; and on the subject of persons, and expected that they would investiture, as well as many others, the have more influence over their other emperors of Germany, after a struggle vassals, and keep them better in sub-of many years, were obliged to yield. jection.3 This aggrandisement of the In France, however, the nomination of German bishops took place chiefly the bishops was always, in fact, in the upon the death of Charles le Gros, when many of the great subjects of the When the bishops were little more empire made themselves independent.

By these steps the greater clergy have as much to do in civil business of all kinds, as any other members of the community. Thus in England it was far from exciting any wonder, in the days of popish darkness (whatever would have been thought of it in the time of the apostles), to see bishops and mitred abbots called to the great council of the nation, along with the barons; because, though churchmen, they actually were barons. The parliaments of France also, about the middle of the eighth century, were constituted in the same manner, the bishops attending along with the other grandees.

This great absurdity in politics, as well as in religion, remains as a blot in the English constitution to this day, the bishops being admitted to have a seat in the House of Lords, and this evil is the greater in a constitution which pretends to freedom. For certainly these bishops, receiving their preferment from the court, and having farther expectations from it, will, in general, be

<sup>1</sup> Histoire des Papes, II. p. 501. (P.)

<sup>2</sup> IV. p. 254. (P.)

Mosheim, II. pp. 61, 62. (P.) Cent. viii.
 Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. iv. v.
 Suenr, A. D. 889. (P.)

in the interest of the court, and consequently enemies to the rights of the people. Useful as this order of men is to the court, the time has been, when the presence of the bishops in the great council of the nation gave umbrage not only to the temporal lords, but to the sovereign. Queen Elizabeth more than once expressed her dislike of the close attendance of the bishops at court and in parliament, and she even threatened to send them into the country, to mind their proper

It is not possible that anything should be more foreign to the office of a bishop than to serve in the wars; and yet even this gross abuse naturally arose from clergymen being in possession of the great fiefs which were held by military service. And the habits of those who were made bishops in those times were such, as to make them not wish to be exempted from that obligation. In the seventh century, says Fleury, barbarians, being admitted into the clergy, introduced their habits of hunting and fighting; and from that time the bishops possessing large estates were under obligation to furnish men for the defence of it. Charlemagne excused the bishops from serving in person, but required them to send their vassals.2 But before his time some bishops distinguished themselves in the wars in Italy, and so early as the year 575.8

The impropriety of this practice was, however, soon perceived, and afterwards express laws were made to prevent bishops from appearing in the field in person. Mezerai says, that, at the beginning of the tenth century, bishops

I Lord Falkland said of the English bishops in I Lord Falkland said of the English bishops in 1641, that "they, whose ancestors, in the darkest times excommunicated the breakers of Magna Charta, did now, by themselves and their adherents, both write, preach, plot and act against it." Speeches and Passages of this great and happy Parliament, 1641, p. 191. During the present reign, the minerity, against any measure of the court, among teenty-six Lords Spiritual, has seldom exceeded two.

Fleury XIII. p. 28. (P.) (Vidal Tom. IV.

Fleury, XIII. p. 28. (P.) [Vidal, Tom. IV.

pp. 137-8.] sueur. (P.)

and abbots, notwithstanding the prohibition of councils, still bore arms, and went to the wars: and the custom continued far into the third race of the French kings.4

The utter incompetency of the bishops for the duties of their office, and the turn of the age in general, contributed to give them the same fondness for war that other persons of rank in the state had. And when they could not act contrary to the letter of the law. they sometimes had recourse to methods of evading it, which are ridiculous enough. In the thirteenth century, says Jortin, "it was an axiom, that the church abhors the shedding of blood. Therefore bishops and archbishops used to go to battle, armed with clubs; and made no scruple to knock down an enemy, and to beat and bruise him to death, though they held it unlawful to run him through with a sword."5

At length the laws got the better of this custom, and the clerical character being deemed an indelible one, in consequence of the spiritual powers supposed to have been imparted by the sacrament of orders, it was ordained, in a council of Rouen, in 1174, that clergymen who had been deposed should not, however, bear arms, as if they were laymen.6

Originally, bishops were not only carefully excluded from all business of a secular nature, but in the exercise of their spiritual power, they were much restrained by the civil magistrates, even after they became Christians. Justinian, who had a great zeal for the church, forbade the bishops to excommunicate any person before the cause of it had been proved in form; and this was so far from giving offence, that Pope John II. thanked the emperor for his zeal in these respects.7

But in this period we find the bishops not only exercising their spiritual power without the least control, but en-

&lt;sup>4</sup> 1bid. A. D. 989. (P.) <sup>5</sup> Remarks, V. p. 388. (P.) Ed. 1805, III.

p. 382. <sup>6</sup> Fleury. (P.) [See A. D. 1190.] <sup>7</sup> Anecdotes, p. 171. (P.)

and controlling princes themselves in and in case of a contest the party the exercise of their proper authority. To this, many circumstances contri- vail. buted, but nothing more than the admission of the great clergy to seats in munications of those times, which was the assemblies of the state. The ignorance of the laity also gave great power to the clergy. As these were the only people who could read or write, they were universally secretaries, stewards, treasurers, &c. Hence the word clerk. which originally signified a clergyman (clericus) came to denote an officer in the law.1

Owing to these causes and to the negligence of the princes, who were much weakened by their divisions in the ninth century, the bishops were almost masters of the kingdoms of France and Germany, disposing of everything at their pleasure. Though Arnoul, archbishop of Rheims, was a traitor, and deserving of the greatest punishment, two kings of France, Hugh and Robert, did not pretend to have him judged except by the clergy, in consequence of which he ran no risk with respect to his life, and could only have been deposed; and by means of the popes he was confirmed in his see, and continued in it to his death.3

The crusades contributed much to the advancement of the clergy; the crusaders leaving their estates to their management, and sometimes selling them, in order to equip themselves for those distant expeditions.3

The ceremony of consecration, which was introduced in the middle of the eighth century, afforded the priests a pretence to intermeddle with the rights of princes. For in putting on the crown they seemed to give the kingdom on the part of God; and this ceremony was soon deemed so necessary by the superstitious people, that no coronation was deemed valid without it, in consequence of which the priests had a croaching greatly on the civil power, real negative on the claims of kings, favoured by the clergy was sure to pre-

Also the consequence of the excoma cutting off of all intercourse between the excommunicated persons and the rest of the world, affected the prince as well as the people. For the man who was not deemed worthy to transact any civil business, was certainly unfit to be a king. After the death of Louis V. Charles of Lorraine was the presumptive heir to the crown of France; but the clergy, who were then the most powerful order in the state, having excommunicated him, he was reckoned disqualified to wear the crown.

But the first remarkable attempt upon the rights of royalty by priests, was the deposition of Vamba, king of the Visigoths, in Spain, at the twelfth Council of Toledo, in 681. On the pretence of his being a penitent, he had been clothed with the monastic habit, though it was unknown to himself, his disorder having made him insensible. For the two characters of monk and king were deemed to be incompatible. The second example was that of Louis le Débonaire, who had likewise been in a state of penitence, after which the bishops who imposed the penance, pretended that he could not resume the royal dignity. The opinion that bishops had a power of deposing kings made such progress in the eighth and ninth centuries, that the kings themselves acquiesced in it.6

The primary cause of the temporal power of the clergy was the wealth which they acquired by the liberality of the laity; which, in those superstitious times, knew no bounds. nations for pious uses were so profuse, as to threaten the utter extinction of all merely civil property; so that no effectual check could be put to it, but by laymen assuming ecclesiastical titles, and by degrees resuming their

<sup>1</sup> Fleury's Seventh Discourse, pp. 12, 19. (P.)

Fleary & Seventi Discourse, pp. 12, 19. (P.)
 Sueur, A. D. 991. (P.)
 Histoire des Papes, H. p. 527. (P.)
 Fleury, XIII. p. 30. (P.) [Vidal, Tom. IV.

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. (P.) 6 Ibid. Seventh Discourse, p. 12. (P.)

propriations, which has been a subject of great complaint to the clergy. This was certainly an abuse and an irregularity; but one evil is often made use of, in the course of Divine Providence.

to correct another.

The notion that temporal and spiritual goods had such an affinity, that the one might be procured by means of the other, could not fail to operate in favour of the wealth, and consequently of the temporal power, of the valuable commodity, and the rich laity were the purchasers. And were not many ancient writings and charters, &c., still extant, we should not believe how nearly the grant of money and lands to the church, for the good of men's souls, approached to the form of a bargain and sale in other cases. The grants by which estates, &c., were made to the church, were often express stipulations for the good of their own souls, and those of others.

Thus, when Ethelwolf tythed 1 the kingdom of England, he said, "It was for the good of his own soul, and those of his ancestors." An act of King Stephen says, "I, Stephen, by the grace of God, king, being desirous of sharing with those who barter earthly things for heavenly felicity, and moved thereto by the love of God, and for the good of my own soul, and of my father and mother, and the souls of all my relations, and my royal ancestors; to wit, of King William my grandfather, King Henry my uncle, &c., do, by the advice of my barons, give to God and the holy church of St. Peter, and the monks thereof, the tythes of all lands, &c."2

Wealth and power generally go hand in hand, and the one will never fail to introduce the other. With the clergy it was their spiritual power that was the cause of their wealth, and their wealth contributed to create their temporal power. But before the clergy

See Milton, Hist. of England, B. v. p. 228
 Rapin, L. iv. I. p. 290.
 Fleury, p. 39. (P.)

property, in the character of lay-im- assumed any proper power over the laity, they exempted themselves from their jurisdiction, which they began to do very early, and with the consent of the Christian emperors, who did not wish to see persons of an order which they so much respected brought into the ordinary civil courts. It was therefore only in extreme cases that any of the clergy were brought before them. Athalaric, the Gothic king of Italy, approved of this custom.3

Moreover, as the Christian emperors clergy. These were the venders of a had a respect for the clergy, and a confidence in them, they chose to extend the effects of church censures; whereby it was in the power of the clergy to prevent or punish many offences of a civil nature, so that in time all the bishops had courts of their own; and when the popes got power, it was necessary that the power of the bishops should rise in some proportion to it. Boniface VIII. made a decree by which the bishops might at all times have their auditories, and consequently put the accused in prison. But this was not much regarded, nor had the ecclesiastics a prison before the pontificate of Eugenius I.4

By degrees the dignity of the priests rose so much higher than that of the temporal powers, that it was deemed a thing absolutely intolerable, that a clergyman should be subject to any temporal tribunal; and as the canon law did not punish with death, the clergy enjoyed almost an absolute impunity for the commission of any crime whatever. And in those dark and ignorant ages, the disposition of the clergy to violence, and crimes of every kind, was little, if at all; less than that of the laity. It appears in the reign of Henry II. of England, that more than a hundred murders had been committed by clergymen, whom the civil powers could not bring to justice.5 As to the higher ranks of the clergy,

<sup>3</sup> Anecdotes, p. 188. (P.)

it was hardly possible that they should Ibid. p. 119. (P.)
Hist. of Popery, III. p. 130. (P.) Ed. 1735, L.
p. 391. See Rapin, L. vii. II. p. 187.

be punished for any crime, on account counting upwards to the common anthe certainty of their finding protection ference with their sovereign. Besides, in those times no clergyman could be punished capitally without previous degradation, and a priest could not be degraded but by eight bishops, to assemble whom was a great expense.

In that reign of superstition, the clergy could be in no want of plausible pretences to interpose in civil affairs. Among others, they pretended to have jurisdiction in all cases of sin, in consequence of which, says Fleury, the bishops made themselves judges in all selves to be the only sovereigns in the world.1 In a council of Narbonne, in 1054, persons who refused to pay their debts were excommunicated.2 Had church censures extended to no other cases than these, the abuse would not have been much complained of.

The case in which the clergy interfered the most was in things relating to marriage. For as incest is a sin, they made themselves judges of the degrees of relationship within which it was lawful to contract marriage. And as dispensations for marriage within those degrees was very gainful, it was their interest to extend those degrees, that dispensations might be more frequently wanted.

Before the time of Justin II. ecclesiastical canons began to encroach upon the province of the secular power in this respect, forbidding the marriage of cousins, and of the children of cousins, and introducing a different method of counting the degrees of relationship, which is not more ancient than Pope Gregory or Zachary. According to Fleury, the difference between the canon and the civil law on this subject arose about the year 1065, when two degrees in civil law were made one by the canon law, the former of their right of appeal to Rome, and cestor, and then down again to the persons whose degree of relationship was there, especially if they had any dif- to be determined. Whereas the custom was now to begin with the common ancestors, and count to the more remote of the two parties. Brothers, therefore, who, according to the civil law, were in the second degree of relationship, according to the canon law were in the first; and cousins-german, which were in the fourth degree, were by the canons brought to the second, &c.3

Besides this advantageous method of counting the degrees, the clergy likewise added to the number of degrees within which it was not lawful law-suits, and even in all wars among to contract marriage. Mezerai says, sovereigns, and in fact made them- that about the end of the tenth century, the degrees of relationship within which marriage was prohibited were extended to seven, which very much embarrassed sovereign princes, who were generally related to one another within those degrees.

Another method of extending the degrees of relationship was, by considering the relations of one party as those of the other. In 557, a council at Paris forbade the marriage of a wife's sister; many persons having then done it, after the example of King Clotaire, who had married the sister of his deceased wife.4 Relation by adoption was also made to have the same effect as that by nature. In 734, the Pope not only advised to dissolve the marriage of a man with a woman whose child he had before adopted, but to punish him with death. And what will be thought perhaps more extraordinary, the spiritual relationship, as it was called, or that of godfather or godmother, was made to have the same effect as a natural relation of the same name.6

The number of lawful marriages were also reduced. Second marriages were soon reckoned improper, and with respect to the clergy, absolutely unlawful, marry the emperor Leo, a fourth time, alleging a law which he himself had accused of heresy. made, that no person should marry lawful, but not fourth.2 It was thought proper in very early to it, they should abstain from comsome pious legacy.4

<sup>3</sup> Ibid. XIII. p. 147. (P.) [A. D. 1065.] 4 Sueur. (P.) 5 Ibid. (P.) 6 Ibid. A. D. 995. (P.)

<sup>1</sup> Seventh Discourse, p. 20. Fleury A. D. 1054, (P.)

and in matters where the civil law had judges.7

it being soon imagined to be forbidden not interfered, as in respect to usury by Paul, who says, a bishop must be and concubinage. And because the the husband of one wife. Epiphanius crime of heresy drew after it the loss mentions a person who being a widower of estates, and of all civil rights, even married a second wife, that he might with respect to the sovereign, the clergy not be made a priest. Jerome says, could always accuse of this crime any we do not desire, but we allow of person whom they meant to destroy; second marriages. In 901, the patriand if the prince would not submit to arch of Constantinople refused to their sentence, he was accused of not believing the power of the keys, and

The ordinary jurisdiction of the more than twice. After much altercabishops was much restrained by the tion on the subject, it was agreed, in Pope's legates, especially from the 902, that third marriages should be eleventh century; and the bishops, thus restrained, endeavoured to extend their jurisdiction at the expense times, that a new-married couple of the lay-judges, by three methods, should have the benediction of the viz. the quality of the persons, the bishop or a priest. Thus, in the fourth nature of the causes, and the multipli-Council of Carthage, in 398, it was cation of the judges. Boniface VIII. ordered that the bride and bridegroom ordained that laymen should have should be presented to a priest for his no power over ecclesiastical persons or benediction, and that, out of respect goods, and the bishops made as many clergy as they pleased, by which means merce the first night.3 This custom of they drew great numbers from the temgiving the benediction prepared the poral jurisdiction, an abuse which was way for the clergy being considered as carried to an enormous extent. Bethe only persons before whom marriage cause widows and orphans had been could be legally contracted, and the protected by the bishops in early ages, laity were effectually excluded when they now undertook all their causes, matrimony was made one of the seven even those of the widows of kings, sacraments. Marriage also came under and those of kings themselves in their the cognizance of the clergy by means minority. They also took cognizance of the oath which the parties took to be in all cases in which lepers were confaithful to each other. For Fleury says, cerned. Lastly, the bishops multiplied the clergy included within their juris- judges, and thereby extended their diction everything in which oaths were jurisdiction, establishing their officials concerned, as well as where the causes in various places besides the episcopal had any connexion with things spi- city. The archdeacons and chapters ritual. Thus on account of the sacra- also did the same, and all these had ment of marriage, they took cognizance their delegates, sub-delegates, and other of marriage portions, cases of dowry, commissaries.6 However, in all great of adultery, of legitimacy, and also of causes, the authority of the bishops was wills; because it was supposed that much lessened by the number of apthe church ought not to be without peals to the court of Rome; and afterwards the Inquisition also encroached The clergy also claimed entire juris- upon the jurisdiction of the bishops, diction in cases of heresy and schism, as well as on that of the ordinary

<sup>1</sup> Le Clerc's Hist. Eccl. A. D. 158. (P)

&lt;sup>2</sup> Sueur. (P.)
<sup>8</sup> Ibid. (P.)

Fleury's Seventh Discourse, p. 17. (P.)

<sup>5</sup> Ibid. p. 17.Ibid. p. 18.7 Ibid. p. 23.

A circumstance which contributed necessary to hold another synod on this not a little to make the clergy intent subject at Calne, four years afterwards, upon extending their authority in the in which it was finally decided.4 state, and to make them formidable in With the high rank and the wealth this law was often disregarded.1

to England to hold a synod for the directed to the popish saints. purpose of prohibiting the marriage of Now these people having been before it, was their not being allowed to which the clergy acquired, it is not to marry. In consequence of this, great be wondered that they should not imnumbers of them became less attached prove in virtue, heavenly-mindedness. to their respective countries, and made and a careful attention to the duties the hierarchy alone their great object. of their office. Complaints of their This point, however, was not estab- arrogance, avarice and voluptuousness, lished without much opposition. A are without end; and yet, vicious as council held at Constantinople under the clergy in general were, they were Justinian II. gave the priests leave to reverenced almost to adoration by the marry, though the popes had enjoined ignorant vulgar of those ages. This the contrary. Many priests had wives arose, in a great measure, from the even in the West about the year 1000; sentiments and customs of the Northern but, in 1074, Gregory VII. decreed in nations before their conversion to Chriscouncil, not only that priests "should tianity; which in those days consisted abstain from marriage," but that they in nothing more than their being taught who had wives should either dismiss to say by rote some general principles of them, or quit their office. But even the Christian religion, being baptized, and changing the objects of their That the true motive to this, in later superstitious customs. For these were ages, was not a regard to purity, is evi-suffered to continue the same as bedent, from its being no objection to fore, only, instead of being acts of priests to keep many concubines, even homage to their heathen deities, they publicly. John Cremensis, who came were now taught to consider them as priests, was the very night after the their conversion absolutely enslaved by council found in bed with a common their priests, having never been used to prostitute.<sup>2</sup> Father Simon says, that undertake anything, even in civil or the priests being prohibited from mar- military affairs, without their counsel; riage, made no scruple of keeping con- when they became Christians, they cubines.3 It was in 970 that a synod transferred the same superstitious dewas held at Canterbury, in which it ference to their Christian priests, who, was decreed that the clergy in Eng- we may be sure, did nothing to check land should either part with their it. In the dark ages, the profligacy of wives or their livings; a law which the clergy perhaps exceeded that of the Dunstan enforced with great rigour. laity, as the sacredness of their cha-The priests, however, were much averse racter gave them a kind of impunity. to this law, and therefore it was found One Fabricius complains of the luxury of the clergy in his time, towards the 1 Mosheim, II. p. 284. (P.) Cent. xi. Pt. ii. end of the tenth century, in the follow-

I Mosheim, II. p. 284. (P.) Cent. xi. Pt. ii. end of the tenth century, in the follow-Ch. ii Sect. xii.

2 History of Popery, III. p. 45. (P.) It is ing terms:—They no longer saluted creditable to a priest of the same church, "John one another with the title of brother, Brompton, Abbot of Jourval in Richmondshire, but that of master; they would not thus acknowledges and censures the fact: "Res learn anything belonging to their minisasperrima negari non potuit, celari non decut; et sic qui summo honore ubique habebaur, ingloriosus et Dei judicio confusus cum summo dedecore in sua repedavit. Hoe si cuiquam displiceat, taccat, ne Johannem sequi Liv.; U. p. 367.

4 At this council the king and nobles were present with the prelates and abbots. See Rapin, videatur." Hist. of Popery, 1735, I. pp. 363, 364.

8 On Church Revenues, p. 78. (P.)

all sorts of wild beasts.1

Nothing, perhaps, can show the pride of the clergy in a stronger light, than made the monks, and their monasteries. the decrees of the eighth general of great value to the Christian world. council, held at Constantinople, in 869, in which it was ordered that bishops piety of those ages had an asylum, till should not go before princes, that they should not alight from their mules or horses, but that they should be con- three-fold order of ministers, viz. sidered as of equal rank with princes bishops, priests, and deacons. and emperors; that if any bishop should live in a low manner, according to the not administer the Lord's supper; the ancient and rustic custom, he should be deposed for a year; and that if the prince was the cause of it, that prince should be excommunicated for two years. In the same council it was decreed that bishops only should be present at councils, and not secular princes; for that they ought not to be even spectators of such things as sometimes happen to priests.2 All writers agree tenth century.3

When the occupation of churchmen and temporal lords differed so very little, it is natural to expect that there would be no great difference in their accomplishments. In the ninth century the ignorance of the clergy was so great, that few of them could either write or read. But one reason of this was, that many noblemen and others, wanting sufficient talents to appear to advantage in the field, retired into the church, the great endowments of which were temptations to them. The estates of the church were also often openly invaded, and the ignorant spoilers got possession of the benefices.

of the greatest rapine and profligacy, had a greater proportion of learned clergy than the rest of Europe, in the vicars. Their study was to have horses, greatest part of the dark ages; and cooks, maîtres d'hôtel, concubines, buf- Ireland had perhaps a greater proporfoons and mountebanks; and they ap- tion than Britain, as they had suffered plied to the emperor for leave to hunt still less by the ravages of the barbarians.

> The very corrupt state of the clergy With them almost all the learning and the approach of better times.5

In the Church of England there is a deacons may baptize and preach, but priests may administer the Lord's supper, and pronounce absolution; and only the bishops confirm baptized persons, ordain ministers, and govern the church. The bishop's diocese is considered as the lowest kind of a church, and the presbyters are considered as his delegates or curates. But the first English reformers considered bishops and priests as of the same in giving the most shocking picture of order, and therefore did not require that the depravity of all ranks of men in the those who had been ordained by priests should be ordained again by a bishop. Wickliffe, who began the reformation in England, admitted no more than two degrees in the ministerial office, viz., deacons and presbyters or bishops. These two, says he, were known in Paul's time, and others are the invention of impious pride.

There is also another deviation from the primitive state of things in the Church of England, as the people have not in general the choice of their minister,6 and the bishops are all nominated by the court. For though ansets. The pp. 91, 92.

6 In some parishes, the inhabitants have, alternately, a choice; the chancellor nominating to

Sueur, A. D. 989. (P.)
 Ibid. A. D. 869. (P.)
 Among others, see Sueur, A. D. 909. (P.)
 Mosheim, II. p. 119. (P.) Cent. ix. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. ii.

<sup>5 &</sup>quot;Where, indeed, could the precious remains of classical learning, and the divine monuments ssession of the benefices. Of ancient taste, have been safely lodged, amidst the ravages of that age of ferocity and rapine.

Britain, being removed from the seat the greatest rapine and profligacy, and Aristotle were obliged to shroud their heads from the rage of Gothic ignorance; and there the sacred records of divine truth were preserved like treasure, hid in the earth in troublesome times, safe but unenjoyed." On Monastic Institutions, Miscel. Pieces, by J. and A. L. Aikin, 1775, Ed. 2,

In the reign of Edward IV. this absurd

1 "The Queen [Anne] grants a license to the deen and chapter, under the great seal, to elect the person whom, by her letters missive, she bath appointed; and they are to choose no other." Rights of the Clergy, 1709, p. 90. See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. p. 339, Notet, To which add the following testimonies: "This order of admitting none to any ecclesiastical function, but by election of all the faithful, in a general assembly, was inviolably observed, and so continued for about two hundred years." Father Paul, on Eccles. Benef. Ch. fit. Ed. 3, p. 6. "That the people had votes in the choice of bishops all must grant; and it can be only ignovance and folly that pleads the contrary." Lowth on Church-power. Tougood, Let. ii. Ed. 5, p. 96.

the dean and chapter have the nominal custom was set aside, and the king choice, the king sends them an express himself immediately appointed the order to choose such as he shall direct. bishops; but the old custom was renewed in the reign of Queen Elizaheth.

Almost all the inferior ministers are chosen by the bishops, the chancellor, or some lay patrons. When a new rector is to be placed in a parish, the patron of the living recommends whom he pleases to the bishop, and the bishop has no power to refuse. The rights of patronage to livings are openly bought and sold; and it is not reckoned simony to buy the next right of presentation, provided the living be not void at the time.

PART XI.

HISTORY OF THE PAPAL POWER.

THE INTRODUCTION.

WHEN we consider that, originally, the bishops of Rome were nothing more than any other bishops, that is, the ministers or pastors of a society of Christians, without any power, even within their own church, besides that of exhortation and admonition, it is are no other than the successors of those bishops, should have obtained done; and it is hardly possible to conceive how the one should have arisen from the other. There is not, indeed, whatever, civil or ecclesiastical.

tors themselves, and rose to a greater height of temporal power (and a power established on the voluntary subjection of the mind) than almost any sovereign, the most despotic by law or constitution, ever attained. And from being mere subjects, they came to be. not only princes, but the most imperious lords of their former masters; and truly astonishing that the popes, who their ecclesiastical power was still more absolute and extensive than their civil power. I shall endeavour to point out the rank and authority that they have the several steps by which this great change was made.

The ground of the papal pretensions to power, in later ages, was the popes in the whole history of human affairs, being the successors of the apostle another example of so great a change Peter, to whom was delivered by Christ in the condition of any order of men the keys of the kingdom of heaven. But whatever was meant by that ex-From being in the lowest state of pression, Peter himself assumed no persecution, in common with other pre-eminence over the rest of the Christians, and having nothing to do apostles. Paul opposed him to his with things of a temporal nature, they face, and says that he himself was not came to be the greatest of all persecu- inferior to the very chiefest apostles.

having a general jurisdiction over the sidered with attention. church at large, appointing and directing the conduct of all the bishops; an office to which they appointed no successors at all.

The title of pope (papa), which signifies father, was not originally peculiar to the bishop of Rome, but in early times was commonly applied to other bishops, especially in the greater sees. Thus Cornelius, bishop of Rome, called Cyprian the pope of Carthage; and it was not till about the beginning of the seventh century, that the bishops of Rome appropriated that title to themselves.

One of the most extraordinary circumstances relating to the papal power is, that, though the foundations on which it rested were entirely changed, and those pretences on which the greatest stress was laid, had not been heard of, or hinted at, for many centuries; vet being continually urged, in dark ages, they came at length to be universally acknowledged, and acquiesced in, even by those princes whose interest it was to oppose them. And in time the business transacted at the court of Rome was so great and peculiar, that nothing was more sensibly felt than the want of unity in it. during the great schism in the papacy.1 All Europe was in the deepest affliction on the occasion; and instead of rejoicing in the division of this enormous controlling power, it was the great object of princes and people to unite the church under its one proper head. Had the sun been divided, and its light been in danger of being extinguished, the Christian world would hardly have been more alarmed than it was; so necessary was the subjection of all Christians to one supreme

Also, though it be probable that Peter head of the church, at that time, was at Rome, and suffered martyrdom deemed to be. The rise and progress there, it is not probable that he was of such an amazing power, from so ever the proper bishop of Rome, or of very low a beginning, is indeed a great any particular place; the apostles object, and well deserves to be con-

SECTION I.

OF THE STATE OF THE PAPAL POWER TILL THE TIME OF CHARLEMAGNE.

THE first cause of the increase of power to the popes was the same that enlarged the power of the bishops of all the great cities of the empire; in consequence of which they had the power of calling, and presiding in, the assemblies of bishops within the provinces to which the civil jurisdiction of their respective cities extended: and. by degrees, as has been observed before, they had the power of ordaining the bishops in their provinces, and negative on the choice of the people.

The bishops of the most important sees were at length distinguished by the title of patriarchs, who had all equal power, and differed only with respect to rank and precedency; and in general the bishop of Rome was considered as the first in rank, out of respect to the city in which he presided. After the see of Rome, the preference was given to the other great sees, in the following order, viz. those of Constantinople, Alexandria, Antioch, and Jerusalem. The churches of Africa do not appear to have been subject to any of these patriarchs; and Cyprian, who was bishop of Car-thage, in the third century, had the same power that the bishops of Rome had, viz. to assemble the bishops of his province, to preside in their councils, and to admonish his brethren.2

The proper authority of the bishop of Rome, though he was the only per-

On the death of Gregory XI, in 1378, when there were rival popes, one at Rome, and the other at Avignon.

Mosheim, I. p. 215. (P.) Cent. iii. Pt. iL. Ch. ii. Sect. ii son in Italy distinguished by the title church in this respect. But no regard of metropolitan, did not extend over was paid to his decision, though afterthe whole of Italy, but only the wards the Council of Nice determined southern parts of it, or those provinces the question as he had done. vicar of Italy residing in Milan.1

so if the bishops of Rome were only papacy, prove, incontestably, that the equal to other bishops of the great bishops of Rome had no more real patriarchal sees, (and in early times power than other metropolitan bishops. to its authority.

of extending their power. Athanasius Constantinople, they had recourse to himself engaged the protection of Pope the Church of Rome; and by their ence of the see of Rome that the Trini- ther also, when they were oppressed by Rome, interposed his authority, but acquired a considerable degree of influ-without effect, in the controversy about ence even in the East. the time of keeping Easter, proceeding After the prevalence of the Mahoso far as to excommunicate all the metan powers in Asia and Africa, as Eastern churches, because they did not there remained only two rival metroconform to the custom of the Western Mosheim, I. p. 374. (P.) Cent. v. Pt. ii. Ch. ii.

1 Anecdotes, p. 78. (P.)

which were called suburbican, because On this, and on other occasions, the they were subject to the imperial vicar, papal pretensions did not pass unnowho resided at Rome, while all the ticed, or without opposition. Some northern parts were subject to the stand, though an ineffectual one, was vicar of Italy, as he was called, in always made to every encroachment; temporal matters; and to the arch- and the early popes themselves, who bishop of Milan in spirituals; the began to usurp a little, and to convert car of Italy residing in Milan. that into a matter of right which had But though the power of the bishops originally been mere courtesy, would of Rome had no legal extension beyond have been shocked at the idea of a that of other patriarchs, they had small part of what was done by their much more authority and influence successors. A number of decretal episthan other bishops, on account of the tles have, indeed, been alleged as proofs dignity of their city, which was the that the earliest popes always held and capital of the Roman empire, and like- exercised a sovereign power in the wise on account of the great wealth church. But these were manifestly and large revenues of that see. More-forged, as the Papists themselves now over, as it had been the custom to acknowledge; and many facts in the appeal to Rome in all great civil cases, early history of the church, and of the

they were probably superior to them In the sixth Council of Carthage in knowledge and character,) it would (426) it was concluded by the bishops be natural, when differences of opinion who composed it, that they would not arose, for each party to wish to have give way to the encroachments of the the sanction of the see of Rome. On bishops of Rome on their rights and these accounts appeals were more fre- liberties, and they gave immediate noquently made to Rome than to any tice to Pope Celestine, to forbear send-other place; and this voluntary defering his officers among them, "lest he ence was afterwards expected, and then should seem to introduce the vain ininsisted upon, Christians in general solence of the world into the church of having been by habit disposed to yield Christ." Various other councils also made decrees to the same purpose. The Arian controversy afforded the But when the patriarchs of Alexandria bishops of Rome several opportunities and Antioch were oppressed by that of Julius; and it was chiefly by the influ- example inferior bishops appealed thitarian doctrine came to be established. the bishops of Alexandria and Antioch.<sup>2</sup>
But before this time, Victor, bishop of By this means the bishops of Rome

other countries.1

The three other Eastern patriarchates midable to both, and by this means having been either abolished or much their usurpations passed without cenreduced, the bishops of Constantinople sure. phemy, and a name invented by the the bishops of Constantinople should devil; adding, that whoever called hold the principal dignity after that of himself, or wished to be called, univer- the bishops of Rome. But afterwards. sul bishop, was the forerunner of Anti- viz. in a council held at Constantinople, christ. 2 Nay, upon this occasion, by under Justinian II., it was ordained way of contrast, he took the title of that the patriarchs of Constantinople Servus Servorum Dei, or Servant of the should be equal to those of Rome. Servants of God, and he was the first alone should, from that time, have this very title of universal bishop. The circumstance which made the assumption of this title the more odious, besides its having been rejected with so much indignation by the predecessors of Boniface, was its being granted by one who had risen to the empire by the murder of the preceding emperor mentation of the power of the popes. Mauritius, his wife, and all his chilpolitans, viz. those of Rome and Con-dren; and who in this manner courted stantinople, they were continually at the friendship of the bishop of Rome, variance; and at first the bishops of whose power in the western part of the Constantinople, where the emperor re- empire was then very considerable. sided, had the advantage. These had For the popes acquired a great accesextended their jurisdiction so much sion of power, and had much more before the reign of Justin, that it com- influence in all civil affairs, in conseprehended Illyricum, Epirus, Mace- quence of the removal of the seat of donia, and Achaia. Afterwards it ex- empire from Rome to Constantinople. tended to Sicily, and many places in But they were of much more consethe southern parts of Italy, and they quence after the Lombards settled in contended with the bishops of Rome Italy. For by taking part sometimes for the superintendence of Bulgaria and with them, and sometimes with the emperor, they made themselves for-took occasion from it to carry their That the authority of the sees both pretensions to an authority so much of Constantinople and of Rome arose higher than before, that John, who was from the dignity of the cities, is evichosen patriarch of Constantinople in dent from this circumstance, viz. that 585, assumed the title of ecumenical before the year 381, the see of Conor universal bishop. This title was stantinople had depended upon that of severely condemned by Gregory the Heraclea, which had been the former Great, who was then bishop of Rome, metropolis of the province; but from as tending to diminish the authority of that time the council ordained, accordother bishops. He even called it blas- ing to the wishes of Theodosius, that

<sup>1</sup> Anecdotes, p. 158. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> Sueur, A. D. 595. (P.)
<sup>8</sup> Anecdotes, p. 206. (P.)

It was in the reign of Valentinian III. pope who used that style in his letters.3 that, by the influence of Leo, the popes But not more than eighteen years gained the greatest accession of power after the death of this Gregory, viz. in in the West, within the period of which 606, Boniface III. obtained of the em- I am now treating. Before this time peror Phocas, that the bishops of Rome the popes had no proper authority beyond the suburbican provinces.5 But this emperor extended their authority to all the bounds of his empire, even into Gaul, and ordered that whatever should be done in that country without the authority of the Pope, should have no force.6 The bishops assembled at Rome in 378, approved of this aug-

Sueur, A. D. 381. (P.)
 Anecdotes, p. 81. (P.)

Anecdotes, p. 81. (P.)
 Basnage, I. pp. 243-4. (P.)
 Mosheim, I. p. 287. (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. ii. Ch. ii.
 Sect. vi. Note [n].

ing use of this power. For in the year to be his legate, established by him to 440, Chelidonius, being deposed in solicit at the emperor's court all Gaul, appealed to the Pope, who rethings relating to the faith and peace ceived him into communion, and by of the church, against the heretics of the authority of Valentinian reinstated the age. This is the beginning of the him. This was the first encroachment Pope's legates residing at Constantithat was made by the popes on the nople, who were afterwards called liberties of the Gallican church. It Apocrisiarii."5 was not, however, till a long time after the first bishop in France who, in the garians being converted, the Pope imyear 543, sent to ask for the pallium, or mediately sent an archbishop thither, the archiepiscopal cloak, from Rome. which was the beginning of the confor; and in this case the Pope answered, and those of Constantinople.6 that he must first have the consent of the king of France.2

Illyricum and of Thessaly. And the Italy.7

East.3 his vicars in the respective countries. by its own laws.4 They were glad to be so honoured, as As the popes extended their power, St. Leo recommends to the emperor be second to that of Rome with respect

An opportunity soon offered of mak- Marcian, one Julian, whom he declares

The popes were also very attentive this, that any direct application was to send legates into nations newly made to the popes for preferment in converted, and thereby subjected them France. Auxanius, bishop of Arles, was to their patriarchate. Thus the Bul-His predecessor had it without asking test between the patriarchs of Rome

After the fall of the Western empire, the popes found themselves in a pecu-After the reign of Valentinian III., liarly favourable situation for the inthe bishops of Rome, finding their crease of their power, the emperor powers enlarged, and that they had the being then at a distance, and therefore superintendence of all the churches of obliged to take some pains to keep on the West, sent their vicars regularly good terms with them, in order to keep into the provinces, whenever there up his interest in the country. Thus was the least pretence for it, and thus Justinian paid the Pope many compliwatched every opportunity of extend- ments, and called the see of Rome the ing their jurisdiction. The first vicars chief of all the churches, hoping by which they established were those of this means to drive the Goths out of

Pope was the more readily acknow- Also the people of Rome, and of the ledged to be patriarch of all the neighbouring districts, disliking both West by the Greeks, as well as by the the Greeks and the northern invaders. Latins, as the former wished to have and having no other head, looked up the bishop of Constantinople to be to the popes for protection, and at considered as patriarch of all the length took an oath of allegiance to Gregory II. But they considered him In 517, Pope Hormisdas appointed as their chief, not as their master, bishops of Gaul, Spain, and Portugal, meaning to form a republic, governed it gave them a rank above their they began to provide a broader basis brethren; and by this means the popes for it. Lee was the first who claimed greatly extended their authority in jurisdiction over other churches, as sucthose countries.4 But before this time, cessor to St. Peter; and when it was viz. in 453, "the popes began to keep decreed at the Council of Chalcedon, spies and informers at Constantinople. that the see of Constantinople should

&lt;sup>†</sup> Basnage, I. p. 243. (P.)

® Sueur, A. D. 543. (P.)

<sup>3</sup> Anecdotes, p. 144. (P)

® Sueur. (P.)

<sup>5</sup> Jortin's Remarks, IV. pp. 297, 298. (P.) Ed.

<sup>1805,</sup> III. p. 125.

Ancedotes, p. 145. (P.)

Sucur, A. D. 534. (P.)

Ancedotes, pp. 240, 246. (P.)

authority of St. Peter, as the founder the pomp that they afterwards apof the see. From this time we find peared in. cree, and the meaning of it.

popes thought of claiming absolute in- Pope seriously in the five first cenfallibility, as the successors of an infal-turies. lible apostle. The first pope who seems The ceremony, by which respect is to have made this claim was Agatho, generally shown to the Pope, is kissing who, "in an epistle to the sixth gene- his foot, which was also done to the ral council, holden at Constantinople," Pontifex Maximus of heathen Rome, in 680, said, "that the chair of Rome and was demanded by Domitian, Dio-....never erred, nor can err in any clesian, and some others of the empoint;" and that "all the constitutions perors, be who were likewise enief ponof the .... Roman church are to be retiffs. The civility was first shown to ceived as if they had been delivered by Pope Constantine 1. by the emperor the divine voice of St. Peter." But Justinian II., at Nicomedia. He did it before this time there had not been out of voluntary respect, but it was wanting persons who flattered the afterwards claimed "as .... due to them pride of the popes by very extravagant of right from the greatest crowned encomiums. Thus, in the fifth cenheads." tury, Ennodius, a flatterer of Pope The custom of carrying the Pope to rank, assigning as a reason for it the by no means deficient; and as they appro-eminence of the city, this pope was proached to the rank of sovereign much dissatisfied, because his pre-emi-princes, they omitted none of the usual nence was not founded on something forms or symbols of royalty. But in more stable than the dignity of the this period, as they had not attained to city, and wished to have it rest on the the power, so they did not assume all this foundation for the authority of the As the Christians affected the ceresee of Rome urged with the greatest monies of the heathen worship, the confidence; and what is most extraor- popes were ready enough to avail them-dinary, it seems never to have been selves of it, when it might add to their disputed. In a synod held at Rome, personal dignity. Accordingly, as the in 494. Gelasius said that the Church office of Pontifex Maximus had been of Rome ought to be preferred to all of great dignity in Rome, and had others, not on account of the decrees generally been assumed by the emof councils, but for the words of our perors; from the end of the fourth Saviour Jesus Christ, when he said, century, the bishops of Rome were "Thou art Peter, and upon this rock often called Pontiffs, and their office will I build my church." But there the Pontificate. They were also somehas been much dispute about this detimes called sovereign prelates, or ee, and the meaning of it.

sovereign priests. But the title of It was sometime, however, before the bishops of bishops was not given to the Symmachus, maintained that the Ro- on men's shoulders after his election, man pontiff was "constituted judge which seems to have been borrowed in the place of God, which he filled as from the customs of some of the the vicegerent of the Most High."4 Northern nations, in the choice of their With this increase of real power and chiefs or princes, was first used by consequence, we may naturally expect Stephen II. He also had all his bulls, additional higher titles, and more or edicts, sealed with lead. 8 Like other splendour; and in this the popes were sovereigns, the popes, even in this period,

Sueur, A. D. 451. (P.)Ibid. (P.)

&lt;sup>3</sup> Hist. of Popery, II. p. 5. (P.) Ed. 1735, I. pp. 135, 136.

Mosheim, I. p. 443. (P.) Cent. vi. Pt. ii.

<sup>5</sup> Sueur, A. D. 214. (P.) Les Conformitez, Ch. ii.

<sup>9. 12. 6</sup> Caligula and Heliogabalus. See Les Conform. Ch. ii p. 27, Whitelocke's Ess. p. 181. 7 Hist. of Popery, 11. p. 10. (P.) 1735, I. p. 138, 8 Sucur, A. D. 752. (P.)

made use of the plural number in when Theodoric was king of Italy, that speaking of themselves. This is said to have been begun by Boniface III. about the year 606; who, in approving the choice of a bishop, used the words Volumus et jubemus, we will and command. 1 Afterwards the popes proceeded to assume other titles and forms, not only of royalty, but even of divinity; which having been first assumed by the princes of the East, were from them adopted by the Roman emperors, and from them by the popes. 2

So early as the fourth century, the bishops of Rome surpassed all their brethren in riches and splendour, which exceedingly dazzled the common people; and so great a prize being contended for, there were often great tumults in Rome on the election of a pope, attended sometimes with murder, and violence of all kinds. Many were killed on both sides, in 368, during the contest between Damasus and Ursicinus.

Notwithstanding the power assumed by the popes, and though in many things they acted independently of the emperor, and even opposed him, they were still his subjects, and upon some occasions he treated them as such. The election of the bishop of Rome was not deemed valid without the consent of the emperor, and Justinian deposed two popes. But when the seat of empire was removed to Constantinople, little account was made of the consent of the emperor; though the popes kept up a formal submission to the emperors of the East against the Lombard princes till the time of Leo Isauricus. And though Constantine Pogonatus released the popes from their usual payments for their confirmation, he expressly retained the right of confirmation.4

The Gothic kings of Italy also considered the popes as their subjects. And it appeared in the dispute between Symmachus and Laurentius, in 501, the popes then acknowledged the authority of the kings, though they were heretics; that they requested of them permission to hold national councils, and that they appealed to them when they were charged with crimes, and submitted to their judgment. Athalaric, to prevent such mischiefs as had been occasioned by former schisms at Rome, made a rigorous edict, prescribing the manner in which the election of bishops and metropolitans should hereafter be made. This edict was drawn up by Cassiodorus, and nobody considered this as any attack upon the authority of the church.5

The temporal princes, under whom the popes lived, sent for them, as well as other bishops, and employed them in embassies, whenever they thought proper to make use of them. Pope John I. was sent by Theodoric to Constantinople, to obtain of the emperor Justinian I. the revocation of an edict. which ordained that the churches of the Arians should be put into the hands of the Catholics.6

When the empire of the Lombards was entirely put an end to in Italy, the nomination of the popes, at least the right of confirming them, was still in the hands of the temporal princes. Adrian, with his whole synod, acknowledged this power in Charlemagne, and Gregory VII. was himself confirmed in the papacy by that very emperor whom he afterwards deposed. Symmachus had the effrontery to maintain to the emperor Anastasius, that the dignity of the Pope was superior to that of the emperor, as much as the administration of the things of heaven is above that of the things of the earth, and that even a common priest was superior to him. But he was far from alleging this as a reason why the popes should not be subject to the emperor in things of a temporal

<sup>1</sup> Sueur. (P.)

2 A particular account of them may be seen in nature.

Sueur, A. D. 549. (P.)

3 Anecdotes, p. 209. (P.)

4 Walsh's Hist. of the Popes, p. 97. (P.)

Anecdotes p. 165. (P
 Ibid. p. 187. (P.)

popes now pretend, is the power of apology for it afterwards.

summoning general councils, and of At length Charles the Bald, having as to externals."

SECTION II.

THE HISTORY OF THE PAPAL POWER FROM THE TIME OF CHARLEMAGNE TO THE REFORMATION.

THE first thing that I shall notice in this period, is the changes that were made from time to time with respect to the election of the popes, and the confirmation of them in their office. It is certain that for many centuries the popes could not be consecrated till their election had been approved of by the emperors; and in general a sum of money had been given at the same time, till it was remitted, as I have observed, by Constantine Pogonatus. The same right of confirming the popes was exercised by the Goths, by Charlemagne, and his successors the emperors of Germany. But, in 847, Leo IV. was chosen pope without the consent of the emperor, the Romans being then of the twenty-eight Roman parishes, pressed by the Saracens, and finding a necessity of having a head. However, they deferred the consecration from April to June, waiting for the consent presiding in them. But all the general obtained the imperial dignity by the councils within the first five centuries good offices of the popes, discharged were summoned by the emperors, them "from the obligation of waiting Leo I. joined with many other bishops for the consent of the emperors" to in requesting the emperor Theodosius their election. "And thus . . . from the to summon a council in Italy, but he time of Eugenius III., who was raised refused, because he had before appoint- to the pontificate, A.D. 884, the election ed one in Ephesus. Nor did the popes, of the bishops of Rome was carried on or their legates, preside in general without the least regard to law, order, councils in early times; but various or even decency, and was generally other bishops presided in them; and attended with civil tumults and disin the first general council, viz. that of sensions, until the reign of Otho the Nice, Constantine himself was the Great, who put a stop to those disprincipal moderator or director. Speak- orderly proceedings," and prohibited ing to the bishops upon that occasion, "the election of any pontiff without he said, "Ye are bishops of things the previous knowledge and consent within the church, but I am a bishop of the emperor;" and this order was enforced to the conclusion of the ninth century. Gregory VII., however, taking advantage of the divisions of the empire, emancipated the see of Rome from this mark of its subjection to the empire.1

One of the prerogatives to which the of the emperor, and they made an

> In early times, the bishops of Rome. like those of other cities, were chosen by the people, as well as the clergy. The first considerable innovation that was made in this respect at Rome, was at a council held in 1059, under Nieholas II.; when it was ordered that, upon the decease of a pope, the cardinal bishops should first consider of a proper person to succeed; that they should then consult with their cardinal clergy, and then, that the rest of the clergy, and also the people, should give their consent.2 But Alexander III., in the middle of the twelfth century, established the sole right of election in the college of cardinals.

After this time the term cardinal was confined to the seven bishops within the territory and city of Rome, who had been used to consecrate the Roman pontiff, and to the presbyters

Mosheim, II. pp. 120, 121, 207, 208, 280. (P.)
 Cent. ix. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. iii. Cent. x. Pt. ii.
 Ch. ii. Sect. viii. Cent. xi. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. x.
 Fleury. (P.)

cius III. was the first pope that was Arians. chosen "by the college of cardinals, alone."1 unsuitable to his dignity.

pretences to be received, when there is rendered to the popes by Lothair I.3 sufficient power to enforce them; and The last acquisition the popes made

Italy, with whom Stephen II. had as properly independent as any sovequarrelled, and against whom he un- reign princes in Europe. dertook a journey to France, to solicit the aid of Pepin, king of France, who century, "the wealth and revenues of promised that if he should drive out the pontiffs had not received any conor principal churches. To appease the the popes ceased to date their letters tumults that were made by others of by the reigns of the emperors.2 This the clergy, who were by this regulation acquisition was evidently made by excluded from the privilege of voting, such policy as is employed by secular this Alexander III. conferred the dig- princes to increase their dominions. nity of cardinals upon several more of But Stephen, like other artful princes, the superior clergy; and to pacify the was not at a loss for some colour of inferior clergy, he, or some of his suc- right, for he pretended that this terricessors, for it is uncertain, made the tory belonged to him, as being the chief of them cardinal deacons, giving spoil of an heretical prince. For the them also votes in the election. Lu- Lombards, as well as the Goths, were

When Charlemagne afterwards put an entire end to the empire of the shall just add to this article, Lombards in Italy, the whole of the that the almost universal custom of exarchate, the capital of which was the popes' changing their names upon Ravenna, was given to the popes. their election, began with Bocco di He was probably induced to make Porco, in 844, who changed his name this large grant of land to the Church to Sergius II., his original name, sig- of Rome by a pretence, which was nifying Hog's snout, being thought about this time made, that Constantine the Great had made a simi-It is not easy to say whether the lar grant of territory to the same spiritual or the temporal power of the church; though it is now universally popes was the more extravagant, but agreed that this donation of Constanthe temporal power preceded the spi- time was a forgery. Notwithstanding ritual, and no doubt laid the founda-these large grants, both Pepin and tion for it, though other pretences Charlemagne reserved to themselves were alleged. But there is no great the sovereignty of all the lands in difficulty in making merely ostensible Italy. But this was afterwards sur-

it was presently after the commence- was that of the sovereignty of Rome, ment of this period that the popes the inhabitants of which had always acquired that amazing accession of acknowledged the emperor as their property and power, which placed them sovereign. But, in 1198, the prefect on a level with other princes of Europe. of Rome received his office from the The first large accession was made Pope, and not from the emperor.4 from the spoils of the Lombards in From this time the popes have been

From the ninth to the thirteenth munificence of kings and emperors. Innocent was no sooner seated in the the Lombards, he would give the popes siderable augmentation; but at this the exarchate of Ravenna and the time they were vastly increased under Pentapolis. From their acquisition of Innocent III. and Nicholas III., partly the latter, which was made in 774, by the events of war, and partly by the

<sup>1</sup> Mosheim, II. p. 271. [Cent. xi. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. vi.] The particular rules that are now observed in the election of a pope were settled in 1175, and may be seen in the Histoire des Papes, III. p. 88. (P.)

&lt;sup>2</sup> Anecdotes, pp. 255, 267. (P.)

Ibid. pp. 320, 338. (P.)
 Histoire des Papes, III. p. 120. (P.)

papal chair, than he reduced under But the ambition of the popes was his jurisdiction the prefect of Rome," far from being satisfied with the acqui-... at" its highest "degree of grandeur and opulence."1

Like other politic princes, the popes gained these advantages chiefly in consequence of divisions in the families of the temporal powers. The divisions tury, the popes assumed the character between the kings of France of the second race were more particularly the means of advancing the power of the popes to its greatest height. Those who were condemned in France had recourse to the holy see, and al- lawful possessors." But this pontiff ways found protection there. In like manner, the popes availed themselves of the contest between the emperors Lewis and Charles, about the middle of the fourteenth century; in consequence of which the imperial power was quite lost in Italy, the popes seizing upon some of the towns, and others setting up for themselves.

The Crusades contributed very much to complete the power of the popes, as temporal princes, and brought business enough of a civil nature upon their hands. For, they had not only many dispensations to grant to those who could not go to those wars, but they made themselves judges of all the differences among those princes that went thither.2

as mentioned above; "he also seized sition of an independent sovereignty. upon Ancona, Spoletto, Assisi, and They soon began to extend their claims several cities and fortresses which had, to other territories, and even to the emaccording to him, been unjustly alien- pire itself. For having been accustomed ated from the patrimony of St. Peter. to crown the emperors, they took advan-.... Nicholas IV. followed his example tage from that circumstance, together .... and in 1278," he refused "to with that of the divisions in the emcrown the emperor Rodolphus I. before pire, to arrogate to themselves the power he had acknowledged and confirmed, of deciding who should be the emby a solemn treaty, all the pretensions peror; and one or other of the candi-of the Roman see;" and immediately dates was but too ready to yield to the upon that he seized "several cities demands of the Pope, in order to seand territories in Italy, that had for- cure his interest. In these circummerly been annexed to the imperial stances John VIII. proclaimed Charles crown, particularly Romagna and Bo- the Bald emperor in 876, in an assemlogna. It was . . . . under these two bly of the Italian princes at Pavia; pontiffs that the see of Rome arrived and in the same manner were his two successors chosen. From this nomination of Charles the Bald, Sigonius says, that the empire has been a fief of the holy see.1 After this, viz. in the eleventh cenof lords of the universe, and arbiters of kingdoms and empires. "Before Leo IX. no pope" claimed "this unbounded authority" of transferring "territories and provinces from their granted "to the Normans, who had settled in Italy, the lands and territories which they had already usurped," or which they should be able to conquer from the Greeks or Saracens.4

Gregory VII. followed the new maxims, and carried them farther, openly pretending that, as Pope, he had a right to depose sovereigns who rebelled against the church. This he founded principally upon the power of excommunication. An excommunicated person, he said, must, according to the rules of the apostles, be avoided by everybody. A prince, therefore, who is excommunicated, must be abandoned by all the world, even by his own subjects. This pope never made any formal decision of this kind,

<sup>1</sup> Mosheim, III. pp. 32, 33. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. v.
<sup>2</sup> Fleury's Sixth Discourse, p. 20. (P.)

Sueur, A. D. p. 875. (P.)
 Mosheim, H. p. 260. (P.) Cent. xi. Pt. ii.
 Ch. ii. Sect. ii.

wise urged that, since the clergy have the papal power had begun to decline.4 a right to decide concerning things When we consider the effects of expriesthood is the work of God.1

victory from his arms."2

Later popes continued the same arrotimes too often induced princes to words of Jeremiah i. 10: "I have . . . set and to destroy," &c. In the fourteenth to this dismal state, was forced to yield, century, Boniface VIII., in a quarrel and cancel his marriage. with Philip the Fair, king of France, "asserted that Jesus Christ had granted times carried their rage was truly a two-fold power to his church, ... the dreadful. John XXIII. not only excomspiritual and temporal sword; that he municated Ladislas, king of Bohemia, had subjected the whole human race to but published a crusade against him; the authority of the Roman pontiff, inviting all Christian princes to make and that whoever dared to disbelieve it war upon him, and seize his dominions. were to be deemed heretics, and stood His bull upon this occasion contained 1 Fleury, XIII. p. 48. (P.) [Vidal, Tom. IV.

p. 145.)

2 Ibid. A. D. 1078. (P.)

B Histoire des Papes, III. p. 164. (P.)

nor had he the countenance of any excluded from all possibility of salvacouncil, but he acted upon the maxim. tion." The king being still refractory, On the other hand, the defenders the Pope excommunicated him, but he of the princes took it so much for "appealed to a general council," and granted, that an excommunicated sent a party of men to bring the Pope person was subject to all the above- by force before him. In consequence mentioned inconveniences, that they of this he was apprehended at Anagni, contented themselves with saying, but the inhabitants rescued him. He that a prince ought not to be ex- died, however, presently afterwards, of communicated; which, says Fleury, rage and anguish. His successor, Benewas giving the popes a great advandict XI., of his own accord, withdrew tage in the argument. This pope like-the excommunication; but by this time spiritual, they have, a fortiori, a right communication in those dark ages, and to decide concerning things temporal. the acknowledged power of the popes The least exorcist, he said, is above an to direct that dreadful weapon, and also emperor, since he commands demons; to suspend the exercise of all ecclesiasroyalty is the work of the devil, being tical functions, than which nothing the effect of human pride; whereas the could impress the minds of men in those times with more terror and consterna-Some of the pretensions of this great tion (as they imagined their everlasting pontiff were so very absurd, that one happiness depended on those functions), would think they must have refuted we cannot wonder either at the arrothemselves by the events. In his dif- gance, or the success of the popes. ference with the emperor of Germany, Robert, king of France, not complying he says, "We bind him by an apostolical with the Pope's decree respecting the authority, not only with respect to the dissolution of his marriage, the Pope, soul, but to the body. We take from for the first time, laid the whole kingdom him all prosperity in this life, and underthis interdict, forbidding all divine service, the use of the sacraments to the living, and of burial to the dead. gant claims, and the necessity of the The people, terrified by this order, yielded such implicit obedience, that submit to them, though they had some- even the king's own domestics abantimes the spirit to resist. In 1225, doned him, except two or three, and Honorius III. applied to the popes the these threw to the dogs everything that came from his table. No person even thee over the nations, and over the dared to eat out of any vessel which he kingdoms, to root out, and to pull down, had touched. The king being reduced

The degree to which the popes some-

Mosheim, III. pp. 150-152. (P.) Cent. xiv. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. ii. iii. ■ Sueur, A. D. 998. (P.)

sound of a bell, and with candles lighted, Europe. absolved but by digging up the body from the bishops, and from the tem-with their own hands, and carrying it poral powers. 4 duke of Portugal, who, under the ponti-ficate of Lucius II., had rendered his tury to see them at the head of armies. province tributary to the Roman see." The insolence with which the popes Innocent III. gave a king to the Ar- have acted in the height of their power an order to all patriarchs, bishops, despotism were beheld with astonisharchbishops, and prelates, to publish ment, but with silent and passive obedi-every Sunday and festival-day, by the ence, by all the temporal powers of and then extinguished by throwing It was in the eleventh century that them upon the ground, that King La-the power of the popes may be said to dislas was "excommunicated, perjured, have been at its height. "Then they a schismatic, a blasphemer, a heretic, received the pompous titles of masters a relapse, a favourer of heretics, a of the world, and ... universal fathers. traitor, and an enemy of the Pope and They presided also everywhere in the of the church." He also excommunicouncils by their legates." They cated all his adherents and favourers, decided "in all controversies .... contill by a return to their duty they cerning religion, or church disci-should receive absolution; and ordered pline; and maintained the pretended that whosoever should undertake to rights of the church against usurpabury Ladislas, or any of his partisans, tions of kings and princes." But this should be excommunicated, and not be was not done without opposition both out of the place of Christian burial; In order to preserve this amazing and that the places on which they power, it was necessary to keep the should lie should be profane for ever. clergy as dependent as possible upon So fully was this temporal power of themselves, and as little attached to the popes established, that they alone their temporal sovereigns. Gregory were thought to have the right of dis-VII. never forbade the clergy to take posing of kingdoms; and they were as an oath of allegiance to their respecregularly applied to for that purpose, tive sovereigns; but this was done by as the temporal courts for titles of Urban II., who made an order for that nobility, &c. In 1179, Alexander III. purpose at the Council of Clermont. To "conferred the title of king, with the complete the temporal character of the ensigns of royalty, upon Alphonso, popes, I shall in the last place observe, menians in Asia, and in 1204 he made is hardly credible. Gregory VII. Primislas, duke of Bohemia, king of obliged the emperor Henry IV., whom that country, and Peter II. king of he had excommunicated, and who ap-Arragon. The title of king of Ireland plied for absolution, to wait three days was also a grant of the Pope to our before he would admit him; though King Henry II.; and when the Por- both the emperor, the empress, and tuguese and the Spaniards were pursu- their child waited barefoot, in the ing their discoveries and conquests, the depth of winter. On the fourth day he one to the East, and the other to the was admitted, and as a token of his West, the popes drew the line that was repentance, he resigned his crown into to regulate all their future claims to the hands of the Pope, and confessed dominion.3 These acts of universal himself unworthy of the empire, if ever he should oppose his will for the

1 Histoire des Papes, IV. p. 151. (P.)
2 Mosheim, II. p. 403. (P.) Cent. xii. Pt. ii. inclusively: together with an indulgence, in full, for all those devout souls whose bodies should 3 "King Henry obtained, at the hands of the Pope, (Martin V.) the perpetual donation to the crown of Portugal, of whatsoever should be discovered from Cape Bajadore to the East Indies, Ch. ii. Sect. ii.

out very mortifying conditions. 1

Adrian IV. insulted the emperor munion. Barbarossa, about the middle of the feet." Psa. xci. 13.

When Henry VI., the next emperor, the popes. was crowned by Celestine III., he With reskneeled before him as he sat in his general, the done to show that the imperial crown depended entirely upon the Pope.2

Our own country has not been less disgraced by papal insolence. One of the bravest of our haughty Norman princes, Henry II., could not satisfy the Pope with respect to the murder of the factious and turbulent prelate Thomas à Becket, (of which, however, he was not guilty,) till he walked barefoot to his tomb, and was whipped by the monks at Canterbury. King John was excommunicated, deposed, and made to receive his crown again, at the hands of the Pope's legate, and to acknowledge himself a vassal of the see of Rome.

In order to evade the tyranny of the popes, it was customary, when the times would bear it, not to dispute their power directly, but to prevent the publication of their bulls. Thus when Paul V. laid the state of Venice under an interdict, they banished those of the clergy who complied with the order, and at length the popes were glad to get Henry IV. of France to make their Sect. ii. Pt. i. Ch. i. Sect. xix.

1 Fleury, A. D. 1077. (P.)
2 Histoire des Papes, III. p. 112 (P.)

3 Mosheim, IV. pp. 319, 320. (P.) Cent. xvii. Sect. ii. Pt. i. Ch. i. Sect. xix.
4 Basnage, litatoire, II. p. 507. (P.)
5 Mosheim, IV. pp. 319, 320. (P.) Cent. xvii. 4 Basnage, litatoire, II. p. 507. (P.)
5 Mosheim, IV. pp. 319, 320. (P.) Cent. xvii. Ch. ii. Sect. xix.
6 Basnage, litatoire, II. p. 507. (P.)
7 Ch. ii. Sect. xi.

Fleury, A. D. 1077. (P.)
 Histoire des Papes, III. p. 112 (P.)

future; and he was not absolved with- peace with the Venetians, who threatened to break off from their com-

The temporal power of the popes, as twelfth century, for holding him the I have observed before, was more ancient left stirrup instead of the right, and than the notion of their infallibility. at length the emperor was compelled This was not known in the times of to hold the other stirrup. The next Pepin or Charlemagne; and though Pope, Alexander III., trod upon the councils were not then deemed infalneck of the same emperor, using at lible, the authority of the Pope was the same time this expression of the held to be subordinate to that. That psalmist, "Thou shalt tread upon the councils are infallible was not prelion and adder; the young lion and tended till the popes had been deemed the dragon shalt thou trample under to be so; the councils attributing to themselves what they had taken from

With respect to spiritual power in general, the popes derived much adpontifical chair, and was obliged to vantage from the ideas of the Northern take the crown from his feet; and nations in their state of Paganism. when the Pope had kicked it off again, For they considered the bishop of Rome to show his power to depose him, the in the same light in which they had cardinals were, at length, permitted to before done their arch-druid, and transcrown the emperor once more. This was ferred to him that boundless reverence with which they had been used to regard the other. Hence the force of the papal excommunications, which, as under the druids, deprived a person of all the common rights of humanity.5

> However, besides the constant opposition of the Greek church, the overbearing authority of the see of Rome was not always submitted to, even in the West. It was particularly opposed by the church of Milan, which in the former period had been a metropolitan church, with a jurisdiction independent of that of Rome. In 848. Angilbert, archbishop of Milan, separated entirely from the Church of Rome. and continued so nearly two hundred years. At length, however, the popes got the better of this, as of every other opposition.

> It is in the ninth century that we find the first seeds of the doctrine of the Pope's infallibility. Then, at least, the popes began to talk in a higher strain than usual on this subject; maintaining that they could not be judged by any person, and that their decrees, respecting manners, faith, or discipline, ought to be preferred even to those of the councils themselves, if possible.1 The argument on which this claim was rested was the declaration of our Saviour to Peter, that he would give to him the keys of the kingdom of heaven; and because he likewise said that he had prayed for him, that his faith should not fail, it was concluded that all the successors of Peter at Rome would always maintain the right faith. Weak as this argument is, it was universally acquiesced in, in those dark ages; and the popes acted upon it as upon a maxim that could not be disputed. When the bishop of Constantinople was deposed in 861, the Pope who had been written to on the occasion, but not by way of appeal, said in answer, "If they ought to be heard who sit in the chair of Moses, how much more they who sit in the chair of St. Peter!" and he maintained that no bishop of Constantinople ought to be deposed without the consent of the Pope.2

The authority of the popes having gained ground, in the manner that has been described above, the opinion of their infallibility began to appear undisguised and undisputed, about the middle of the eleventh century; Leo IX. declaring that the councils, and all the fathers, had considered the Church of Rome as the sovereign mistress, to which the judgment of all other churches belonged, and which could be judged by none; and that all difficult questions ought to be decided by the successors of St. Peter, because that church had never erred from the faith, and would not, to the end. This nity decreed in a council, that the pation of the popes, admitted that they Church of Rome never had erred, and never will err, according to the testimony of the Scriptures, on the ground above mentioned. Bernard and Thomas Aguinas gave this doctrine the great weight of their authority, and they were followed by all the schoolmen.3

Basnage, II. p. 546. (P.)
Sueur, A. D. 861. (P.)

Afterwards, however, several of the popes themselves, when they had any particular point to gain, and when the decrees of former popes were quoted against them, made no difficulty of departing from this doctrine. Thus John XXII., in his quarrel with the Fratricelli, who represented to him that three of his predecessors had been of their opinion, answered, that "what had been ill-determined by one Pope and one council, might be corrected by another, better informed concerning the truth." But, except in these occasional deviations, the popes asserted their infallibility, and it was generally acquiesced in till the time of the great schism (1378); when almost all the Christian world, seeing the popes sacrifice everything to their own ambition, dropped the high opinion which they had before entertained of them. Nor was it possible to put an end to the schism, without setting up a council above the popes.

During the time that the doctrine of the Pope's infallibility was generally received, the popes frequently spoke as if their decrees had been dictated by immediate inspiration. Thus Pope John VIII. says, that he had found that such a thing was the council of God, because that of a long time it had been revealed, by celestial inspiration, to his predecessor Nicholas.4

Such firm hold had the notion of the infallibility of the popes on the minds of men, that some of the greatest men in the Christian world, and even since is the first Pope who held this language the Reformation, were not able to shake with such firmness. Gregory VII., it off. Father Paul, the great advocate who succeeded him, with more solem- of the state of Venice against the usur-

■ On "the opinion of those .... who lodge infallibility in the bishop of Rome," see Geddes, Mod. Apol. 1800, pp. 58-62.
■ Sucur, A. D. 875. (P.)

ought to be obeyed in all matters of The popes made so artful a use of

Originally, as I have frequently ob- stored as before the council.5 seved, all bishops, and the popes them- But it was in the eleventh century rity in religious matters.

lived in the sixth century.4

Ch. ii. Sect. viii.

doctrine, and what related to the ad- the weakness of the French monarchy, ministration of the sacraments. It is that a council held at Rheims, in 991. possible, however, that he might make in which the authority of the Pope had this concession by way of argument, been disputed, is called the last sighs of while he was disputing against their the liberties of the Gallic Church, the power in things of a temporal nature. bishops of France after this allowing But this was not the case with the the popes a right to depose them. All famous Fenelon, archbishop of Cam- the world, says M. de Marca, was bray, who, when his book was con- obliged to submit to this new opinion. demned by the Pope, "declared pub- and France was at length forced to hely his entire acquiescence in the yield at the beginning of the third sentence." He even read it himself race of their kings. The popes laid all "in the pulpit at Cambray," and extheir bishops who had assisted at this horted the people "to respect and obey" council under an interdict, and would not take it off till everything was re-selves, were chosen by the people. After- that the great dispute arose between wards the metropolitans interfered, and the popes and the emperors of Gerthen the princes reserved to themselves many, about the right of Investiture, the right of approbation, and thus all This consisted, originally, in the prince, abbots and bishops were chosen till the or chief, putting a clergyman into the time of Henry III. of Germany.<sup>3</sup> But possession of any estate or fief, and was afterwards the popes claimed the right done by the delivery of a bough, or in of nomination to all the greater livings; such other manner as that in which layhaving made the first attempts of this men had been usually invested by the kind in France, where they took advansame persons. But because, upon the tage of the weakness of that monarchy. death of any incumbent, the priests They then began to give out, that the used to deliver the ring and the crosier bishops of Rome were appointed by of the deceased bishop (by which the Jesus Christ to be the supreme legisla- election of a new bishop had been used tors of the universal church, and that to be irrevocably confirmed) to some all other bishops derived their autho- person of their own choosing, before rity from them. Opposition was made the vacancy was notified to the prince, to these claims, but it was ineffectual; an order was given that those ensigns and from the time of Lewis the Meek, of spiritual power should be transmitted European princes in general suffered to the prince immediately upon the themselves to be divested of all autho- death of any bishop, and then he delivered them to whom he pleased; after To gain this point, many memorials, which the same ensigns were again and acts of former times, were forged solemnly delivered by the metropolitan in this age, and especially "the famous bishop. After much contention, and decretal epistles," said to have been much war and bloodshed upon the ocwritten by the primitive bishops of casion, it was compromised, by the Rome. They are generally fathered Pope's consenting that the emperor upon "Isidore, bishop of Seville," who should invest by the delivery of a sceptre, and not of a ring or crosier, which were ensigns of a spiritual authority.6 Basnage, II. p. 549. (P.)

Mosheim, IV. p. 393. (P.) Cent. xvii. Sect. ii.

The principal actor in this great scene

Pt. i. Ch. i Sect. Ii. See p. 222, supra.

Simon on Church Revenues, p. 61. (P.)

Mosheim, II. p. 126. (P.) Cent. ix. Pt. ii.

Mosheim, II. p. 289-291. (P.) Cent. xl.

<sup>6</sup> Mosheim, II. pp. 289-291. (P.) Cent. xi. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. xiv.

the Lateran, decided that if any bishop reluctance." received investiture from a layman, communicated.

nocent III. in the thirteenth century, commission), they easily passed to the who assumed to himself, as pope, the idea of their having a power to forgive power of disposing of all offices in the it, and, which was the same thing, of church, whether higher or lower, and their making it to be no sin, before the of creating bishops, abbots, and canons commission. at pleasure. And though the popes places upon their clients and creatures, than formerly, but disposed publicly and often deposing bishops who had of scandalous licences of all sorts, at purpose.

rights of the Gallican Church" in this of them. respect "by that famous edict, known... in its place another body of laws, more do all things that they will, even things advantageous to the papacy," called "the Concordat:" but this was "re-was Gregory VII., who, in a council at ceived with the utmost indignation and Another part of the spiritual power both he and the layman should be ex- claimed by the popes is that of granting dispensations to do what would In 1199 the popes pretended to have otherwise be unlawful; and from merely a right over all benefices, and that all relaxing the severity of discipline, or translations from one see to another remitting the penances that had been were the especial privilege of the see of enjoined for sin (which, in time, made Rome. This right, however, was not it to be imagined that they had the fully asserted before it was done by In- power of forgiving sin itself after the

It was the wants and the avarice of had formerly been strenuous advocates the popes that first led them to grant for the free choice of bishops, against these indulgences. The popes, when the encroachments of the emperors, this they were settled at Avignon, not being pope, and many of his successors, over- able to draw so much as they had used turned all those laws of election, re- to do from Italy, had recourse to new serving to themselves the revenues of methods of getting wealth. They not the richest benefices, conferring vacant only sold indulgences more frequently been duly elected, and substituting an excessive price. John XXII. was others with a high hand in their room, particularly active in promoting this The bishops, however, opposed these abominable traffic. He enlarged the encroachments, but generally to little taxes and rules of the apostolical chamber, and made them more profit-Lewis IX. of France "secured the able, though he was not the inventor.

The height to which the popes, and by the name of the Pragmatic Sanction." their advocates, carried their preten-This, however, did not make the popes sions in this way is indeed astonishing. renounce their pretensions, and their Innocent III., about 1198, decreed that legates acted with all the insolence and out of the plentitude of the papal tyranny of their masters in the coun- power, the pope could "of right, distries into which they were sent; inso- pense beyond right;" and according to much that Alexander IV. made, "in other decrees the popes claimed the 1256, a severe law against the avarice power of dispensing even against the and frauds of these corrupt ministers, apostles, and the apostolical canons. which, however, they easily evaded by Gratian, the famous canon lawyer, astheir friends and their credit at the serted that all men are to be judged by court of Rome." At last Leo X. en- the Pope, but the Pope himself by no gaged Francis I. "to abrogate the Prag- man. And "Cardinal Zabar, speaking matic Sanction, ... and to substitute of the popes, affirms that they might unlawful, and so could do more than Another prerogative claimed and God himself."1

&lt;sup>2</sup> Mosheim, III. pp. 31, 32, 289, 290. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. iii. iv. and Cent. xvi. Sect i. Ch. i. Sect. vii.

Histoire des Papes, III. p. 126. (P.)

John XXIII. drew from many cardinals making popes. what he wanted to know of them, by have always granted dispensations to have given leave to a man to marry his own sister.

Another power in spiritual matters, which has been claimed by the popes, is that of canonization, or the declaring what persons should be deemed saints, were collected, and reduced to a system, and the objects of worship. In the and became the object of study and Council at the Lateran, in 1179, under Alexander III., "canonization was ranked among the greater and more important causes, the cognizance of which belonged to the pontiff alone." "

long exercised by the popes, and yet There are too many instances in his- most clearly against all ancient custom, tory of the popes reducing these pre- was that of calling and presiding in all tensions into practice, by actually councils; whereas originally, as I have granting dispensations to do things observed, it was the business of the morally evil, especially to release per- metropolitan of each district, and sons from the obligation of oaths. In afterwards they were called by the 1042, Casimir, king of Poland, having temporal princes, first the emperor of retired to a monastery, deputies were Constantinople, and then other princes sent to the Pope, and he absolved him in their several states. In Germany from his vows, and permitted him to it had always been the custom for the resume the government of his kingdom.<sup>2</sup> metropolitans to preside in their coun-Celestine II. having required Henry, cils; but in the year 1047 the Pope king of England, to re-establish Dun-claimed a right of sending his legates stan in the archbishopric of York, and to preside in them.6 HAnd, in time, this he saying that he had swore he never claim, though the novelty of it was would do it as long as he lived, the easily proved, came to be universally Pope answered, "I am Pope; if you acquiesced in, and nothing but the will do what I require, I will absolve factions of the popes themselves could you of that oath." The king, however, ever have led the world to think or act declined it. Henry II. of England, otherwise. But after the great schism having sworn to fulfil his father's will, in the popedom, in which there were a obtained an absolution from the Pope, long time two popes, and sometimes and thereupon deprived his brother of three, there was an absolute necessity his estates, and reduced him to a pen- of calling a council, and giving it a At the Council of Constance, power of censuring, degrading, and

A new power now being established releasing them from the oath of secrecy in the world, viz. that of the popes and which they had taken.4 The popes the bishops, a power governed by maxims unknown to the world before, marry within the prohibited degrees of a new system of laws was of course consanguinity. Martin V. is said to introduced by it. This obtained the name of canon law, consisting originally of the decrees of general councils and synods, and then of the constitutions of popes, and decisions made by the court of Rome. In time these laws practice to a new set of lawyers, as the Roman civil law had been before.

The first collection of ecclesiastical canons was published towards the end of the fourth century, by Stephen of Ephesus, and it was received with universal applause. The Church of Rome made use of this collection till that of Dionysius Exiguus appeared, in the sixth century. These canons

<sup>1</sup> History of Popery, I. p. 10. (P.) "Quod omnia possint, quicquid liberet, etiam illicita, et sit plus quam Deus." De Schism. Int. Gerim. script. p. 708. Hist. of Popery, 1735, I. p. 6.
2 Floury. (P.)
3 History of Popery, 1735, I. p. 6.

* Histoire des Papes, II. p. 609. (P.)

4 Ibid. IV. p. 40. (P.)

Mosheim, II. p. 403. (P.) Cent. xii. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. xiii.

vance of their decrees.1

quent.4

canons in the twelfth century, went abhorrence and contempt. beyond the forged decretals in two im- The pride and exterior marks of the laity in any cases. The constitu- highest degree abominable and blastions of the popes, after this compila- phemous. tion of Gratian, turned upon the While the imperial power continued, maxims contained in it; and yet, as no mark of respect was paid to the had been assisted in climbing to this after they obtained sovereign power, height of power. For Father Simon says that the decrees of Gratian are composition [the canon law] thus made beyond not valued at Rome, nor the books of the seas, Austin, the monk, slily warts it over decretals, but so far as they suit their modity into England, where it remained many purpose, the great principle of the court of Rome being, that the pope is at last, well suckled by several haughty prelates, as Thomas Becket and others, it grew rampaut above all law, which was indeed the height of power. For Father Simon

1 Anecdotes, pp. 105, 107. (P.)
2 Ibid. p. 293. (P.)
■ Sueur, A. D. 388. (P.)
4 Seventh Discourse, p. 13. (P.)
■ On Church Revenues, p. 88. (P.)

had no sanctions of a temporal nature, In this country the bishops were and therefore the councils generally allowed to have a separate jurisdiction, applied to the emperors who had according to the canon law, after the assembled them, to compel the obser- Norman conquest, and this continued till it was abridged under Henry VIII.6 In the seventh century the collection Indeed the canon law has never been of canons by Isidore of Seville was directly abolished in England, and published, composed of the councils though a correction was proposed to held in Greece, Africa, France, and be made of it, the scheme was never Spain, and also of the decretal letters carried into execution. But it was of the popes, to the time of Zacharias, provided, in 1534, "that till such corwho died in 752.2 This being a dark rection of the canons was made, all and ignorant age, all the letters of the those which were then received should popes for the first four centuries were remain in force, except such as were forged, and yet the forgery was for contrary to the laws and customs of many centuries undiscovered. These the realm, or were to the damage or decretal letters had no other object hurt of the king's prerogative." And than to extend the power of the popes, it is perhaps better that the canon law and the dignity of the bishops. The should remain subject to this restraint difficulty of judging bishops, Fleury than that any new system of the same says, was increased by these decretals; kind should be enacted without any the power of judging them being control. These remains, however, of thereby given to the popes, so that the canon law have been gradually appeals to Rome became very fre- going into disuse, and the whole practice of the spiritual courts, in which Gratian, who made a collection of it is continued, is now held in universal portant articles, viz. the authority of splendour assumed by the popes have the popes, and the immunities of the sufficiently corresponded to the power clergy. For he maintained that the which they acquired; and the flatteries popes are not bound by the canons, which they have received from their and that the clergy cannot be tried by partizans have sometimes been in the the power of the popes increased, they popes that was not paid to other kicked away the scaffold by which they bishops, archbishops, or patriarchs. But above all law, which was indeed the great object of Gratian.

p. 15.

as Thomas Becket and others, it grew rampaut and unruly. And though often the civil authority great object of Gratian.

and unruly. And though often the civil authority gave it daisy-roots to hinder its growth; as the statutes of provisors, of mortinain, of pramanire, cet, yet nothing could efficially repress the monster, till our English Hercules, King Henry VIII., gave it a mortal wound." Hist. of Popery, Ed. 1735, I. p. 377.

Neal's History, I. p. 11. (P.) Toulmin's Ed. I.

the Roman Pontifex Maximus, and it view is not said.5

they obtained likewise the same titles, having sent to the church of St. John of and the same marks of reverence and the Lateran a crown of gold, with which respect, which had been claimed by he had been presented by Anastasius, other princes; and several of these the emperor of Constantinople, Pope ought to have been appropriated to di-Hormisdas put it on his tiara. Aftervinity. The title of holiness was often wards Boniface VIII., in his quarrels given by one bishop to another, but it with Philip the Fair, to show that was appropriated to the bishop of things temporal ought to be subject to Rome about the year 1000.\(^1\) The cerethings spiritual, as a mark of this mony of the adoration of the Pope, double authority, used two crowns in-after his election, was borrowed from stead of one, and to them John XXII. Paganism.2 This was always done to added a third, but with what particular is done by the cardinals to the Pope. The style that has sometimes been scated upon the altar for that purpose. assumed by the popes, and made use of The customs of kissing the feet, and in addresses to some of them, without being carried on men's shoulders, were their declining it, is truly blasphemous. also borrowed from the Romans or Martin IV., 1621, "having excommuthe Northern nations. "Dioclesian or-nicated the people of Sicily, would not dained, by a public edict, that all sorts be persuaded to absolve them till, by of persons should prostrate themselves their ambassadors, prostrate on the before him, and kiss his feet;" and for earth," they entreated it, saying, "O this purpose he had a "pantofle, or lamb of God, that takest away the sins slipper, enriched with gold, pearls, and of the world, grant us thy peace." The precious stones."3 It was Gregory fathers of the Council of the Lateran VII. who ordered in council that even said to Pope Leo X., "We respect your princes should kiss the feet of the Pope divine majesty; you are the husband only.4 But Valentine is said to have of the church, the prince of the aposbeen the first pope whose feet were tles, the prince and king of all the kissed after consecration by the car-universe." They entreated also that he dinals and other persons present, in would not let them lose the salvation, and the life, which he had given them, The popes, to show their superiority adding, "Thou art the pastor, and the to other sovereigns, have assumed a physician, thou art a God;" and detriple crown. At first they were only clared that he had all power in heaven a bonnet, a little higher than usual, and in earth.7 The canonists often very much like the Phrygian mitres, gave the popes the title of Dominus which were used by the priests of Deus noster, which, indeed, had been Cybele; but Clovis, king of France, assumed by Domitian. "Paul V.... caused his picture to be put in the first page of divers books dedicated unto him, with this inscription, Paulo V., Vice-Deo;" and "Sixtus IV. suffered to be inscribed on a triumphal arch erected to him, anno 1484,

&#x27;Oraclo vocis mundi moderaris habenas, Et merito in terris diceris esse Deus.'"

&lt;sup>1</sup> Sueur, A. D. 366. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> See Les Conformites, Ch. ii, p. 23, and "Essays ecclesiastical and civil, by the late learned Sir Bulstrade Whitlocke," 1706, p. 181. Yet, according to Sir Thomas Smith, a king or queen of England is as profoundly worshipped as a pope. "No man speaketh to the prince, nor serveth at the table, but in advarding and kneeling. All persons of the realme be bare-headed before him; insomuch that in the chamber of presence, where the cloath of Estate is set no man dare walke, was though of Estate is set, no man dare walke, yea, though the prince be not there, no man dare tarry there, but bare-headed." The Commonwealth of England, B. ii. Ch. iv. fin. 1633, pp. 103, 104. See this passage applied to another subject, M. Repos. VI. p. 226. 4 Hist. of Popery, HI. p. 340, &o. (P.) Ed. 1736,

II. p. 17. 4 Sueur, A D. 711. (P.)

&lt;sup>5</sup> Histoire des Papes, III. p. 425. (P.)
<sup>6</sup> Hist. of Popery, III. p. 441. (P.) "Agnus De, qui tollis peccata mundi, dona nobis pacem," Hist. 1736, II. p. 66.
<sup>7</sup> Basnage, II. p. 556. (P.)
<sup>8</sup> History of Popery, I. p. 94. (P.) 1735, I.

p. 51.

A circumstance which shows the However, time, and the diminution of popedom, was canonized, and a parti-cular office, or form of prayer, was they will be no longer what we now composed to his honour. This was in-call popes. troduced by Alexander VII., and was offended at it.1 in the same manner; more especially fices in the country. the great patron of learning, was ex- of in the church. ceedingly debauched, and probably an atheist.

station in life; being, in the worst the statute of provisors, by which all spirit of the papacy in a particularly their power, has at length done a strong light, is, that Gregory VII., the great deal towards it; and as the most ambitious of all the popes, and bishops of Rome sink to the level of who contributed more than any other other bishops in the Christian church, to increase the power and pride of the they will probably acquire the virtues

It may excite our gratitude for the read in the churches of Rome and other blessings of the Reformation, to look parts of Europe; and whatever in his back upon the state of this country life ought to make his memory odious, while it was subject to the papal is recited in this office as an heroic power. The popes seem to have held action. It was also authorized by this country in a state of greater Benedict XIII. But all Europe were dependence than any other in Europe. To this the obligations that William There is no giving one character of the Conqueror and others of our princes a set of men so numerous and so were under to them, contributed not a various as the popes have been, but, in little. All the rights and privileges of general, since they have become sove- the English clergy were, in fact, in reign princes, they have had all the the hands of the Pope, who taxed them follies and vices of other sovereign at his pleasure, and who had the absoprinces, and have spent their revenues lute nomination to all the richest bene-These were in (as their power was short, and the general filled with foreigners, especially office not hereditary) in enriching their Italians, who never so much as saw families and dependents. At one their dioceses, or the country, but had period they were, for many successions, their revenues remitted to them abroad; monsters of wickedness; using every by which means the country was art, and making no scruple even of drained of immense sums. The popes murder, to gain their ends. A man also disposed even of the reversions of more abandoned to vice, of the most the most lucrative places; so that atrocious kinds, than Alexander VI. neither the king, nor any other person was perhaps never known; and Leo X., in England, had anything to dispose

This was ill brooked by several of our Norman princes and lords; but It must be acknowledged, however, no redress was found for this evil till that many of the popes have been the reign of that spirited prince men who would have adorned any Edward III., who passed an act called times, patterns of virtue, and actuated presentations to livings within the by the best intentions in the world. kingdom were taken from the Pope, But they never had power to reform and appointed to be in the king, or their own courts, or to accomplish the his subjects. But still the popes had other reformations they projected considerable power, as in the trials of titles to advowsons, and appeals to I Histoire des Papes, II. p. 401, V. p. 597. (P)

2 "Raphael Urbin, the famous painter, ... being taxed by the then Pope for laying too much colour on the faces of Peter and Paul, ... replied, he didit on purpose to represent them blushing in heaven, to see what successors they had got on earth."

Hist. of Popery, 1735, I. p. 9.

from Rome, assemble the clergy of may be found." their several provinces, at what time From this time no convocation of and place they thought fit, without the clergy could be called without the leave obtained from the crown, and all king's writ, and they could consult on the canons and constitutions concluded such matters only as he should think upon in those synods were binding proper to lay before them; but still without any farther ratification from their canons were binding without the the king;" an act passed in the six-king's assent, till the act of supremacy teenth year of this reign, "called pro- under Henry VIII. This prince as-munire, by which it was enacted, that sumed the sole right to the nomination if any did purchase translations to and confirmation of bishops; and to benefices, processes, sentences of ex- the great mortification of the clergy, communication, bulls, or any other he also took to himself the first-fruits instruments, from the court of Rome, of all the benefices.2

1 Neal's History, I. p. 2. (P.)

of confirmation, of the translation of against the king or his crown, or whobishops, and of excommunication.1 ever brought them into England, or The interference of the papal power did receive or execute them, they were received another check in the reign of declared to be out of the king's pro-Richard II. For, whereas, before that tection, and should forfeit their goods time the archbishops of Canterbury and chattels to the king, and should and York might, "by virtue of bulls be attached by their bodies, if they

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. II. pp. 2, 10, &c. (P.) 1793, p. 15.

APPENDIX I.

PARTS X. AND XI.

THE HISTORY OF COUNCILS.

councils or assemblies of the bishops These assumed a most undue authority, of Christian doctrine and discipline.

quence occurred, all the apostles, or as tians about the observance of the

To the preceding history of the clergy their decrees were universally received in general, and of the bishops and in the Christian church. It does not popes in particular, it may not be appear, however, that what they reamiss to add a separate account of the solved on these occasions was directed by any immediate inspiration, for that and clergy, which make a great figure would have superseded all reasoning in the history of the Christian church. and debates upon the subject, and consequently all difference of opinion. and have been one of the principal Whereas they appear to have debated supports of the greatest corruptions among themselves, on some of these occasions, with a considerable degree We find in the book of Acts, that of warmth. And though they conwhen matters of considerable conse- clude their advice to the Gentile Chrismany of them as conveniently could, Jewish ceremonies, with saying that it assembled, to consult about it, and seemed good to the Holy Ghost and to would probably have mentioned it, of truth. Such, however, was the respect in Though Arianism was condemned which the apostles were held, that by the Council of Nice, it was estabconformed to.

that general councils; consisting of able heretics.1 bishops assembled from all parts of The Council of Constantinople also times. Our Lord did, indeed, promise, Pisa; and whereas the Council of that when two or three of his disciples Basil had decreed, that a council of were gathered together in his name, bishops is above the popes, the Lateran but this promise, whatever might be a pope is above a council. meant by it, was not made to bishops in particular, and might be claimed by any such thing as a general council. two or three individuals, as well as by Even the four first, which are the most two or three hundred.

Besides, those general councils, the whose proceedings there was not even the appearance of their being influ-

us, they probably only meant, that enced by the love of truth. For they they were fully persuaded that the determined just as the emperors, or regulations which they prescribed were the popes, who summoned them, were proper in themselves, and therefore pleased to direct. Accordingly, there agreeable to the mind and will of God; are, as might be expected, many inbeing conscious to themselves that stances of the decrees of some councils they were under no improper bias. If being contrary to those of others; they had been conscious of any par-which could not have been the case, if ticular illumination at that time, they they had been all guided by the spirit even their advices had the force of de-lished at the Council of Ariminum, crees, and in general were implicitly which was as much a general council as the other, and also in the Councils When the apostles were dead, it was of Seleucia and Sirmium. There is natural for the bishops of particular also a remarkable instance of the dechurches to assemble on similar occa- crees of councils, in which the popes sions; and though they could not have themselves have presided, contradictthe authority of the apostles, that ing one another, as those of Chalcedon office becoming extinct with those who and Constantinople, in 554. For the were first appointed to it; yet, as former absolved and justified Theodorit there was no higher authority in the of Cyr, and Ibas of Edessa, and rechurch, had they contented themselves ceived them into their body, as orthowith merely giving advice, and con- dox bishops; whereas, the Council of fined their decisions to matters of dis- Constantinople, which is styled the cipline, they would hardly have been fifth general council, and was approved disputed. But it has been pretended by the Pope, condemned them as damn-

the Christian world, succeed to all the decreed, that images were not to be power of the apostles, and have even endured in Christian churches, whereabsolute authority in matters of faith. as the second Council of Nice not But an assembly of ever so many only allowed them to be erected, but bishops, being only an assembly of even to be worshipped. In later times, fallible men, can have no just claim to the Lateran Council of Julius II. was infallibility; nor indeed was this a called for no other purpose but to rething that was pretended to in early scind the decrees of the Council of he would be in the midst of them; Council under Pope Leo, decreed that

Besides, there never has been in fact boasted of, had no bishops from several whole provinces in the Christian world. decrees of which have been urged as And the Council of Trent, the auof the greatest authority, were in thority of which the Papists make so fact assemblies of factious men; in much account of, was perhaps the least respectable of all the councils. The chief intention of the crowned heads, who promoted this council, was to reform the abuses in the court of Rome. But the Pope himself, by his legates, presiding in it, pronounced the Protestants, who appealed to it, heretics before they were condemned by that council, and none were allowed to vote in it but such as had taken an oath to the Pope and the Church of Rome. There were hardly fifty bishops present in it, none being sent from Some that were several countries. there were only titular bishops, created by the Pope for that purpose; and some had Grecian titles, to make an appearance of the Greek church consenting to it. It is also well known that nothing was decided in the council without the previous consent of the court of Rome, and the decrees concluded with an express salvo of all the authority of the apostolical see.

<sup>1</sup> Sucur, A. D. 554. (P.)

In fact, the Papists themselves have found a variety of methods of evading the force of general councils, whenever it has been convenient for them so to do; as if their decisions depended upon a matter of fact, concerning which they were never pretended to be infallible; also, if their proceedings were not in all respects regular, and if their decrees were not universally received, as well as if they had not been approved by the popes. If we may judge concerning councils by the things that have been decreed in them, we shall be far from being prejudiced in their favour; their sanction having been pleaded for things the most repugnant to reason and the plainest sense of which of these was a lawful council.2 Scripture, as has been sufficiently manifested in the course of this work.

Councils were most frequent in the times of the Christian emperors at Constantinople, and of the Christian princes of Europe, from the fall of the Roman empire till towards the end of the eighth century. But the publication of the forged decretals of Isidore at that period made a great change with respect to councils, the jurisdiction of bishops, and appeals. For, councils became less frequent when they could not be held without the Pope's leave; and the interruption of provincial councils was a great wound, says Fleury, to ecclesiastical jurisdiction.

The first who seems to have maintained the infallibility of councils is Barlaam, who exhorts one of his friends to return to the communion of the Church of Rome, because a council at Lyons, being lawfully assembled, and having condemned the errors of the Greeks, he must then be considered as a heretic, cut off from the church, if he did not submit to it. But Occam, who lived at the same time, viz. in the fourteenth century, speaks of it as the opinion of some doctors only, while others say this infallibility was a privilege of the college of cardinals, and others, of the Pope himself. It was a question, however, that did not begin to be agitated till that time, and it was then disputed very calmly. It was more openly debated during the differences between the popes and the councils; when the councils setting themselves up above the popes, determined that themselves, and not the popes, were appointed by God to judge in the last resort concerning articles of faith. The Council of Constance made no decision on this subject, but that of Basil did; saying that it was blasphemy to doubt that the Holy Spirit dictated their resolutions, decrees and canons; while the Pope and his Council at Florence, declared the contrary, and it is not yet determined

The most eminent of the Catholic writers themselves have maintained different opinions on this subject, and have been much influenced by the circumstances in which they wrote. But this was most remarkably the case with Æneas Sylvius, who had with greatboldness maintained the authority of the Council of Basil against Euge-

<sup>1</sup> Seventh Discourse, p. 13. (P.) 2 Basnage, Histoire, II. p. 518. (P.)

nius IV.; but being made Pope (by lieve, the opinion of any Protestant, such a seat) to be in the councils.2

decision.3 Calvin maintained in ex- stood and acknowledged. press terms, that the universal church is infallible, and that God must annul his solemn promises if it be otherwise.4 At present, however, it is not. I be-

1 Mosheim, III. p. 247. (P.) Cent. xv. Pt. ii.

4 Basnage, II. p. 499. (P.)

the name of Pius II.) "he published that any assembly of men is infallible. a solemn retractation of all that he But it is thought by some to be lawful had written" upon that subject; de- and convenient to call such an asclaring, "without shame or hesitation, sembly of divines, to determine what that as Æneas Sylvius he was a dam-should be the articles of faith in parnable heretic, but as Pius II. he was ticular established churches, or such as an orthodox pontiff." At present the should have the countenance of paropinion of the infallibility of the Pope ticular states. The synod of Dort, in being generally given up by the Catho-lics, they suppose the seat of infalliticles of faith, and proceeded in as bility (for it is an incontrovertible rigorous a manner against those who maxim with them that there must be did not conform to them, as any popish synod or council could have done.5 The Protestants themselves had ori-giually no dispute about the authority may hope that it is approaching, when of truly general councils. Luther ap- the absurdity of all interference of pealed to a general council regularly power, civil or ecclesiastical, in matters assembled, and engaged to abide by its of religion, shall be generally under-

<sup>5</sup> The French Protestant church also exacted of every minister the following aath:—"I do swear and protest, before God and this holy assembly, that I do receive, approve and embrace all the doctrines taught and decided by the Synod of Dort, as perfectly agreeing with the word of God and confessions of our churches. I of the schools, nor by reaching, nor classes on the very opposite opinion to that stated in the text.]

It is hardly necessary to point out the fact, so sad and yet so hopeful, that, since the meeting of the recent Ceumenical Council of Rome (1869-70), every faithful Catholie is bound to hold the very opposite opinion to that stated in the text.]

It is a summary to point out the fact, so sad and yet so hopeful, that, since the meeting of the recent Ceumenical Council of Rome (1869-70), every faithful Catholie is bound to hold the very opposite opinion to that stated in the text.]

It is a summary to point out the fact, so sad and yet so hopeful, that, since the meeting the recent Ceumenical Council of Rome (1869-70), every faithful Catholie is bound to hat stated in the transfer of the reformed churches in France, held at Alex, and the reformed churches in France, held at Alex, and the reformed churches in France, held at Alex, and the reformed churches in France, held at Alex, and the reformed churches in France, held at Alex, and the reformed churches in France, held at Alex, and the reformed churches. In the case of the schools, nor by writing, depart of the reformed churches in France, held at Alex, and the reformed churches in France, held at Alex, and the reformed churches. In the schools, nor by the reformation that it will never, neither by preaching, nor teaching in the schools, nor by reaching the reformation to the school in the text.]

It is a summary to point out the fact, and the reform the recent in the profession of our churches. In the school is the profession of our churches. In the school is the profession of the profession and the school is the profession of the school is the school in the text.] Also, p. 213, supra.

APPENDIX II.

PARTS X. AND XI.

OF THE AUTHORITY OF THE SECULAR POWERS, OR THE CIVIL MAGISTRATE, IN MATTERS OF RELIGION.

WE have seen the daring attempts to ber of bishops and other ecclesiastical to decide concerning articles of faith, to another, not indeed so excessive in as well as concerning matters of discipline, made first by the popes, who were nothing more, originally, than bishops of the single Church of Rome, clergy, who might be supposed to have and afterwards, by councils, or a num-studied, and therefore to have underfere in the business of religion; but it influence over them, and not by a in civil matters,) or to convoke synods, the church, that ecclesiastics usurped or general assemblies; when, as they upon the secular power, so as even to apprehended, the peace of the state make and depose kings. was in danger of being disturbed by A series of facts, relating to the heresies and factions in the church. ecclesiastical history of England, will But though they sometimes signed the abundantly confirm what I have here decrees of the synods, it was never advanced concerning the usurpation of supposed that their vote was necessary the rights of Christ and of God, by to the validity of them; and though the civil magistracy of this kingdom. they regulated the revenues, and other When Henry VIII. shook off his ternals." And long afterwards, when clause. the civil and ecclesiastical powers were By this celebrated act the whole place among the bishops, both as an auditor and arbitrator. We have seen, stood, the Christian system; but the and by the grace of God we have delatter is by mere laymen, who cannot creed, that which ought firmly to be be supposed to have given much atten- believed." But though this great tion to the subject of religion, and prince says, We have decreed, it is not consequently must be very ill-prepared probable that he himself had so much to decide authoritatively concerning its as a proper vote in the resolutions. If doctrines or rites. Of this nature is he had, he would hardly have called the ecclesiastical authority which, upon himself an auditor, or an arbitrator, the Reformation, was transferred from though this seems to imply his having the popes to the secular powers of the more power than that of giving a vote. different states of Europe, and more Though it is not questioned that the especially that which was assumed by emperors generally carried their points the kings and parliaments of England. with the bishops, and got them to The Roman emperors, when they make what decrees they pleased, it became Christians, did, indeed, inter- was by their interest with them, and was either to confirm the election of proper authority. And during the bishops, (which was soon perceived to prevalence of the papal power, the be of considerable importance to them state was so far from encroaching upon things of an external nature respecting dependence upon the Pope, in 1531, the church, they never presumed to he was far from abolishing their pronounce either by their own single usurped and anti-christian power. He authority, or that of the senate in con-junction with them, what was truth or himself, claiming the title of sole and what was falsehood, what ceremonies supreme head of the Church of Engought to be admitted, and what ought land. The absurdity of acknowledging to be rejected, as has been done by the a layman as supreme head of an ecclecivil governors of Europe since the siastical body, was a thing so new and Reformation. strange, that the clergy would not ad-Constantine, who was himself presi- mit it at first without this clause, As dent, or moderator, in the Council of far as it is agreeable to the laws of Nice, speaking to the bishops on that Christ. But after a year or two, viz. occasion, said, as was mentioned be- in 1533, the act of supremacy, as it fore, "Ye are bishops of things within was called, passed the parliament, and the church, but I am bishop as to ex- the convocation also, without that much more intermixed, Charlemagne, power of reforming heresies and errors, in a letter to the churches of Spain, in doctrine and worship, was transsays, concerning the council which he ferred from the Pope to the king, withhad held at Frankfort, "I have taken out any regard to the rights of synods,

Milot's Hist. of France, p. 62. (P.)

This act expresses that "the king, ... now is, by delegates."2 the contrary of this may easily be de- have passed the act."4 emperors.

errors, schisms, heresies, &c., what- own confession, unjustifiable. soever spiritual powers the legates had from the see of Rome, and exercised be no absolute necessity for our kings to in right of the Pope, for remedying of consult even the parliament upon this evils, without violating the laws of God or nature; as much, in every de- to do it, in order to give the stronger gree, have our laws fully granted to sanction to his own decisions. Thus the king for ever, whether he thinks the famous law of the six articles, comfit to do it by ecclesiastical synods, or monly called the bloody statute, and otherwise, according to law."8 or councils of clergy; and without Mary, Queen Elizabeth, and Charles I., giving any liberty to those who could all published instructions or injuncnot comply with the public standard. tions, concerning matters of faith, without the consent of the clergy in his heirs and successors,...kings of this convocation assembled, and enforced realm, shall have full power and au- them upon the clergy, under the thority to visit, repress, redress, re- penalty of premunire. So jealous was form, order, correct, restrain and Queen Elizabeth of this branch of her amend, all errors, heresies, abuses, prerogative, that she would not suffer contempts and enormities whatsoever the parliament to pass any bill for the they be." It was also ordered in this amendment or alteration of any of the reign, that "all appeals which before ceremonies of the church; it being, as had been made to Rome," were "to be she said, an invasion of her prerogamade to his majesty's chancery, to be tive. By one clause in the act of uniended and determined as the manner formity the queen was "empowered, with the advice of her commissioners This king, indeed, in his letter to or metropolitan, to ordain and publish the convocation at York, assured them farther ceremonies and rites;....and that he claimed nothing more by the had it not been for this clause of a supremacy than what Christian princes reserve of power to make what alterain primitive times assumed to them- tions her majesty thought fit, she told selves in their own dominions. But archbishop Parker, that she would not monstrated. For, by an act passed in It is not easy to reconcile these the thirty-first year of this reign, it claims of Henry VIII. and Queen was enacted, that whatsoever his ma- Elizabeth with that article of the jesty should enjoin in matters of re- Church of England (XX.) which ligion, should be obeyed by all his asserts that the "Church hath . . . . ausubjects. Such language as this was thority in controversies of faith," if by never held by any of the Christian Church be meant the clergy. For the English clergy, as a body, were so far The words of Mr. Hooker, who is from having any hand in the business generally allowed to be one of the of reformation, that they opposed it ablest advocates of the Church of as far as ever lay in their power. Be-England, are very express to this pur- sides, if it be granted that this absopose. He says, "If the whole ecclesi- lute power is in the church, the Reforastical state stand in need of being mation itself was unlawful, and all visited and reformed; or when any that Henry VIII. and our other princes part of the church is infested with have done in this business is, by their

Henry VIII., Edward VI., Queen

> After the act of supremacy, there could subject. Henry, however, generally chose which was entitled An Act for abolishing Diversity of Opinions in certain Articles concerning the Christian Religion, was an act of parliament, passed

4 Ibid. p. 93. (P.) 1793, p. 130.

Neal's History, I. p. 8 (P.) 1793, p. 11.
 Ibid. p. 88. (P.) 1793, p. 124.
 Ibid. p. 86. (P<sub>*</sub>) 1793, p. 122.

the famous bishop Latimer.

an infallibility, equal to that which had been arrogated by the popes, and to have acted in all respects as if he For in the thirty-second year of his reign, it was enacted "that all decrees and ordinances, which shall be made and ordained by the archbishops, bishops, and doctors, and shall be published with the king's advice and confirmation, by his letters patent, in and upon the matters of Christian faith. and lawful rites and ceremonies, shall be, in every point thereof, believed, obeyed, and performed, to all intents and purposes, upon the pains therein comprised, provided nothing be ordained contrary to the laws of the realm." 2 And afterwards, when the articles of the Church of England were first compiled, which was under Edward VI., in 1551, they were drawn up by Cranmer and others, and received the sanction of the royal authority in council only, without being brought to parliament or convocations, though the title expresses as much. 3

In the first year of Queen Elizabeth the parliament alone established the queen's supremacy and the Common Prayer, in spite of great opposition by the bishops in the House of Lords; and the convocation then sitting was so far from having any hand in those acts of reformation, that the members of it presented to the parliament several propositions in favour of the tenets of Popery, directly contrary to the proceedings of parliament.

in the year 1538. In this act was a In the life of Mr. Whiston we have ratification of several of the most im- a remarkable instance of the very little portant doctrines or articles of popery, consequence which the Church of Engand it continued in force to the end of land, as it is generally understood, is this king's reign. In a very short time of in deciding religious controversies. five hundred persons were imprisoned For when a convocation had sat upon in consequence of it, among whom was his writings concerning the doctrine of the Trinity, and pronounced them to This king seems even to have claimed be heretical and dangerous, Queen Anne interposed, and not choosing to ratify their sentence, all the proceedings came to nothing. Thus, as was had the consciences and the faith of observed on the occasion, the voice of all his people at his absolute disposal. a woman, which the apostle Paul does not allow to be even heard in the church, had more weight than that of all the churchmen in a body. Can > England. Of this princess, whose decision that Englana. Of this princess, whose decision that church seems to regard as final, the Protestantism is as equivocal as her personal virtue. According to her annalist Camden, Elizabeth appeared during the reign of Mary to sail by a trade-wind. He thus describes her policy: "Quum tamen illa, ut navigium ingruente tempestate, sese moderans, ad Romanæ religionis normam sacra audiret, et sæpius confiteretur, imo Cardinale Polo asperius sepius confiteretur, imo Cardinale Polo asperius interpellante, se Romano-Catholicam præ terrore mortis profiteretur." Hist. I. p. 21.

In her first year (1558) Elizabeth permitted "the epistles, gospels, and ten commandments to be read to the people, in the English tongue, howbeit without any exposition: also the Lord's Prayer, the Apostles' Creed and the Litany, she suffered to be used in the vulgar tongue. But in all other things they were to use the Romish rites and ceremonies, till a perfect form of religion should be concluded on by the authority of parlament. In the meantime she performed the liament. In the meantime she performed the obsequies of her sister Queen Mary, with solemn and sumptuous preparations, in the church of

Westminster.'

Westminster,"

In the second year of Elizabeth (1559) "were enacted and established...the Liturgy, and Administration of the Sacraments, which was in use under Edward VI, some few things being changed, and a penalty inflicted upon the depravers thereof, or such as should use any other whatsoever. Of going to church upon Sundays and holidays, a mulet of twelve pence for every day's absence, being imposed upon those that should absent themselves, and the same bestowed upon the poor." Thus was "the Protestant religion now established by authority of Parliament," (with the dissent of nine out of fourteen bishops and two nobles,) nor did the Queen bishops and two nobles, nor did the Queen "ever suffer the least innovation therein." Seo Camden's History, 1675, Ed. 3, pp. 9, 17, 19, 27, Surnet, speaking of "the censure that was passed on Whiston's book," says, "all further proceedings against him were stopped, since the Queen did not confirm the step that we had made." It would be unjust to Burnet's memory to omit what immediately follows:—"This was not unacceptable to some of us, and to myself in particular. I was gone into my diocese when

&lt;sup>1</sup> Neal's Hist. 1793, J. p. 27.

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. 1793, I. pp. 33, 34.

2 Ibid. 1793, I. pp. 38, 34.

3 Ibid. p. 50. (P.) 1793, p. 68.

4 It was in the second year of Elizabeth, that a Protestant religion was settled for the Church of stitution of the gospel? Both the Cromwell, at the head of the Indepenclergy and the queen were interfering dents.<sup>2</sup> These being the smaller in a business in which they had no number, would certainly have been right to meddle; and it is sometimes suppressed by any act of uniformity;

the violence of another.

forty-two in number, but was introof Queen Elizabeth. But nobody can of Queen Elizabeth. tell why or wherefore that clause came to be inserted, it being manifestly inconsistent with other acts of the legislature, and with the conduct of our princes according to those acts.1

To these remarks I shall add, that of England, are performed by laymen. For the chancellors, officials and surrogates, who pass censures and excommunicate, frequently are, and by express law always may be, laymen; and the bishops have no power to control the proceedings of the courts which go by their name.

The House of Commons, which took up arms against Charles I., assumed the same authority in matters of religion that had been usurped by the preceding kings. And the Presbyterians, of which sect they chiefly consisted, would have enacted some persecuting and sanguinary laws, if they

these things be agreeable to the con- had not been restrained by Oliver pleasant to see one usurper checking and it is not improbable that, in cone violence of another.

It is remarkable that this clause in they might sooner than any other sect the articles, by which it is ordained in this country hit upon the true that the church, and not the king Christian principle of religious liberty, (who, however, is acknowledged to be which entirely excludes the civil magisthe supreme head of the church) should trate from interfering with it. At the have authority in controversies of Restoration, the same church establishfaith, was not in the first articles com- ment, with the same powers in the piled by Cranmer, and which were king and in the parliament, was resumed; and everything reverted into duced into them when they were re- the same channel, or nearly the same, vised and new-modelled, in the reign in which they had been in the reign

It is something remarkable, that this glaring impropriety, of merely civil magistrates deciding concerning articles of Christian faith, which must necessarily be undertaken by all civil governors who presume to make any several of the most important acts of establishment of Christianity (that is, spiritual jurisdiction, relating to the of what they take to be Christianity) revenues and discipline of the Church in any country, should not strike more than it generally does; and that on this ground only all civil establish-

<sup>2</sup> See p. 46, supra. The Protectorate commenced with the following provisions against the persecution of any professing Christians, except papiets and prelates:—

"XXXV. That the Christian religion, contained in the Scriptures, be held forth and recommended as the publique profession of these

"XXXVI. That to the publique profession held forth, none shall be compelled by penalties or otherwise, but that endeavours be used to win them by sound doctrine, and the example of

with them by sound doctrine, and the example of a good conversation.

"XXXVII. That such as profess faith in God by Jesus Christ (though differing in judgment from the doctrine, worship or discipline publiquely held forth), shall not be restrained from but that he protected in the second of the property of the property in the proper liquely held forth), shall not be restrained from, but shall be protected in, the profession of the faith and exercise of their religion; so that they abuse not this liberty, to the civil injury of others, and to the actual disturbance of the publique peace on their parts. Provided this liberty be not extended to Popery or Prelacy, nor to such as, under the profession of Christ, hold forth and practise licentiousness." The Government of the Commonwealth, &c. "As it was publickly declared at Westminster, the 16th day of December, 1653.—Published by his Highness the Lord Protector's special commandment." M DC LHII. pp. 42, 48.

that censure was passed; and I have ever thought that the true interest of the Christian religion that the true interest of the Christian religion was best consulted, when nice disputing about mysteries was laid aside and forgotten." Burnet, O. T. Ac. 1712, Fol. II. 603. See also Whistorl's Mem. Ed. 2, pp. 156, 188, 189. Towgood's Letters, No. 1, 1779, p. 27.

Neal's Hist. I. p. 50. (P.) 1793, p. 69 See "An Historical and Critical Essay on the Thirty-niva Articles" by Atheny Collins 1724, assistance of the Christian Collins 1724 Assistance and Critical Essay on the Thirty-niva Articles" by Atheny Collins 1724, assistance of the Christian Collins 1724 Assistance and Christian Christian nine Articles," by Anthony Collins, 1724, passim.

ments of Christianity should not be religion and a parliamentary God.2 exploded, since all Christians profess to acknowledge no Father besides God, and no Master besides Christ, and to stand fast in the liberty with which he has made us free. If there be any meaning in this, it must be that no human authority should be permitted to make that necessary to Christian communion which Christ has not made necessary, but left undetermined, and consequently indifferent. There are instances, however, of this absurdity having been noticed in several periods of our history, besides that which I have mentioned, when the claim of Henry VIII. to be the supreme head of the church was first started.

When the act of Uniformity was passed, in the beginning of the reign of Elizabeth, in 1559, "Heath, archbishop of York, made an elegant speech against it;" observing that it "ought to have had the consent of the clergy in convocation, before it passed into a law. 'Not only the orthodox but even the Arian emperors,' says he, 'ordered that points of faith should be examined in councils; and Gallio, by the light of nature, knew that a civil judge ought not to meddle with matters of religion.' But he was over-ruled, the act of supremacy, which passed the house the very next day, having vested this power in the crown."1

When that law was made, in the reign of William and Mary, which makes it blasphemy, punishable with confiscation of goods and imprisonment for life, if persisted in, to deny the doctrine of the Trinity, Lord Feversham, who had no objection to the doctrine which was to be guarded by that law, expressed his dislike of the civil magistrate interfering to guard it, in very strong terms. He said that he acknowledged the houses of parliament might lay upon the subject what taxes they pleased, and might even make a king; but he did not like the idea of a parliamentary <sup>1</sup> Strype, Ann. Ref. I. p. 73. Ap. No. 6. D'Ew's Journal, p. 29, in Neal's Hist. Ed. 1793, p. 130.

Such, however, in fact, is the established religion of this country. It is such a religion as the king, lords, and commons of this realm have thought proper to make for themselves, and to impose upon the people; who certainly ought to judge for themselves, in a matter which so nearly concerns them as individuals, and of which they are as competent judges as their superiors. Such an usurped authority as this ought to be opposed, especially when it is considered that the power by which this mode of religion is enforced. is precisely the same with that of the popes; having been transferred from them to our princes.

Exclusive of everything contained in the religion of the Church of England, it is chiefly the authority by which it is enjoined that Dissenters object to in it. Things in their own nature ever so indifferent, are no longer so, when the authority by which they are enforced is improper and boundless. It is upon the same just maxim that we always profess to act in things of a civil nature. A tax of a penny is what no man would value, of itself; but it would be a justifiable cause of a civil war, if our kings only, without the concurrence of parliament, should presume to enforce that tax: because a tax that begins with penny might end in a pound, or extend to a man's whole property. In like manner, a power that alters a single article of faith, or imposes one rite, might change the whole system. It was, therefore, so far from being the mark of a weak mind, that it was an evidence of great, just, and enlarged views, in the Puritans, to resist, as they did, the imposition of things in their own nature indifferent. To have submitted, would have been to acknowledge another supreme power in the church besides that of Christ.

<sup>2</sup> See this expression, assigned to the Earl of Peterborough [Rutt's Priestley], Vol. II. p. xvii. note<sup>2</sup>. The Earl added, "that if the House were for such an one, he would go to Rome and endeavour to be chosen cardinal; for he had rather sit in the Conclave, then with their lordships, upon those terms." Tindal's Hist. IV. p. 647, in Towgood's Letters, III. Sect. xiii,

This is the true and solid ground of a dissent from the Church of England. It is declaring (and it is the only proper and effectual mode of declaring) that we will acknowledge no human authority in matters of religion; but that we will judge for ourselves in a business which so nearly concerns us, and not suffer others to judge for us; and that, in the worship of God, and what respects our happiness in a future world, we will only obey him whose power extends to that world, that is, God, and not man.

It is, moreover, evidently agreeable to the maxims of the gospel, that every Christian make an open declaration, both by his words and by his conduct, of what he believes concerning it. This is most expressly declared to be obligatory upon us with respect to Christianity in general. And for the same reason, it ought to be extended to every important distinction in the profession of Christianity, and especially what relates to the seat of power, or authority in the church of Christ. Our Lord hath said, Whosoever shall be ashamed of me, and of my words, of him shall the Son of Man be ashamed, when he cometh in his own glory, and the glory of his Father.

Had Christianity been a system of speculative opinions only, and had not required a conformity in our practice, and such as is visible to the world, every degree of persecution might be avoided. But this we know was not the case in the primitive times. All true Christians then thought themselves obliged not to make the least concealment of their opinions, whatever they might suffer in consequence of their profession. In like manner, every Protestant ought to be a declared Protestant, and not deny his principles by communicating with the idolatrous Church of Rome. And for the very same reason, every man who thinks that the Church of England usurps an undue authority over the con-sciences of men, similar to that of the Church of Rome, ought to be a declared Dissenter, and separate from the established church, whatever ridicule or persecution of any kind he may expose himself to on that account.

If the primitive Christians, or the first reformers from Popery, could have been contented with keeping their opinions to themselves, while they conformed to the religion of their country, they might have avoided all the inconveniences to which the public profession of their principles exposed them; and in this they would have followed the example of all the heathen philosophers, whose maxim it was, to think with the wise and act with the vulgar, and who ridicule the Christians for not doing the same. For all the philosophers held the popular superstitions in the same contempt with the Christians themselves. But no true Christian or Protestant will venture to sacrifice so much to his worldly ease and safety. And were not many of the present members of the Church of England either grossly ignorant of the nature of religion, inattentive to what belongs to it, or governed by the heathenish maxim above mentioned. they would not dare to countenance by their concurrence, what they may easily know to be gross corruptions of Christianity, and especially an usurpation of the rights of God and of Christ.

There is another state in Europe, in which the prince assumes an ecclesiastical power independent of the Pope. For the kings of Sicily pretend to be by birth legates a latere to the holy see, and to have a power of absolving, punishing, and excommunicating all persons, even cardinals themselves, who reside in their kingdom. They also preside in provincial councils, and act in all respects independently of the court of Rome. Their style is, beatisimo et santisimo padre, and they attribute to themselves in Sicily the same power that the popes have with respect to the rest of the church. The Sicilians claim this right from a bull of Urban II., granted in 1097 to Roger, kings of Sicily exercise that jurisdicthe Norman king of Sicily, and to his successors. But the advocates for the own territories. On this account F. court of Rome say that this bull was Simon says there are three popes in forged, during the long time that the Christendom, viz. at Rome, in Sicily, island had no communication with the and in England; the two last, however, holy see: for it continued ninety years deriving their power from the first, the under an interdict, beginning in 1282. kings of Sicily by voluntary conces-Hence, however, have arisen violent sion, and the kings of England by disputes between the kings of Sicily and the popes. But to this day the

tion, and are in fact popes within their force.1

1 Simon on Church Revenues, pp. 116, 121. Mosheim, II. p. 231. (P.) Cent. xi. Pt. i. Ch. i.

"Henry's reformation altered the form of Popery, but did not remove the grand principle of it, human authority in matters of religion; the act of supremacy lodged the same power in the crown, that had been vested in the Pope. In virtue of this power the king exercised colerated lacelation and invisigation promitted siastical legislation and jurisdiction, appointed by commission articles of religious doctrine and practice for the nation, and supported them by penal sanctions.

"The reformers in the reign of Edward VI. "The reformers in the reign of Edward VI. retained the doctrine of royal supremacy; they availed themselves of his minority and youth, put out two service-books, intended a third, and might have put out a thousand on the same principles; they sacrificed the rights of all the nation to a funcied perrogative of a boy.

"Queen Elizabeth's reigning passion was love of despotism; her means of attaining it were full of duplicity, treachery and cruelty: she made religion an engine of government, and framed the English episcopal corporation so as to serve her arbitrary plan of governing. She obtained an absolute supremacy; her bishops acted under it; she imposed articles, ceremonies, oaths, ponalties, &c." R. Robinson's "Plan of Lectures on the Principles of Nonconformity," 1781, Dept. 5. 6. Camden having quoted the conciliatory letter from Pius IV. to Elizabeth, dated 15 May, 1560, adds: "The report goeth, that the Pope gave his faith, 'that he would disamul the sentence against her mother's marriage, as unjust, confirm the English liturgy by his authority, and grant the use of the sacraments to the English, under both kinds, so as she would join herself to the Romish Church, and acknowledge the primacy of the chair of Rome; yea, and that certain thousand crowns were promised to those that should procure the same.' Elizabeth, though little solicitous about the Protestant faith, was too fond of her supremery to become a Papist. Her annalist adds, that she "still persisted, like herself, semper eadem." See Camden, Hist, p. 47. Also supra, p. 269, Note 4. Also supra, p. 269, Note 4.

APPENDIX III.

TO

PARTS X. AND XI.

OF THE AUTHORITY OF TRADITION, AND OF THE SCRIPTURES, ETC.

WE have seen the pretensions of the as carefully as we can, the channels by popes, of councils, and also of civil which these divine communications magistrates, to decide controversies of have been conveyed to us; and these faith. It may not be improper, in the can be no other than oral tradition or conclusion of this subject, to consider writing; and of these the latter is certwo other authorities, viz. those of tra-tainly preferable, whenever it can be dition and of the Scriptures. As the had, provided we have sufficient evi-Jewish and Christian religions are of dence that we have the genuine writings divine origin, it behoves us to examine, of the inspired prophets themselves.

not to be slighted.

Those Christians who were not conit being supposed to have been the proclaim in public. Matt. x. 27. invariable custom of the church from the present custom, and of its being observed without the least variation in be made.1

present. But, in this case, we object ish and absurd.

But in many cases, even tradition ought find no sufficient authority for them at

Some of the ancient heretics are said, verted by the apostles themselves, and by Austin and others, to have availed who lived before the publication of any themselves of this source of credit; of the canonical books of the New Tes- laying great stress on our Lord's saytament, could not have had any other ing to his disciples, that he had many foundation for their faith. We our- things to say to them which they were selves admit these books to be canoni- not able to bear at the time that he cal on no other foundation; and by was with them, and pretending that calling them canonical, we mean no the apostles themselves, besides preachmore than that they are the genuine ing to all persons indiscriminately, productions of those persons whose made a reserve of some things to be names they bear, or of the times to taught more privately, and only to a which they are usually ascribed; and few. But there does not appear to therefore they are of themselves of no have been any sufficient foundation for authority, but as the most indisputable that pretence; all their teaching having evidence of what it was that Christ and been public, and nothing concealed the apostles did teach and practise as from any persons who were desirous of from God; and it cannot be made to being instructed. Much less was there appear that the same thing may not any reason to think that the particular be sufficiently proved by other means. things which they wished to support We observe the first, and not the by this pretence were among the things seventh day of the week, as a day of revealed to those few. Besides, our rest, contrary to the known custom of Lord himself seems to have precluded the Jews, which we believe to have every pretence of this kind, by telling been of divine appointment, upon no his apostles, that whatever they had other authority than that of tradition; heard of him in private, they should

The Church of Rome has adopted a the time of the apostles, and it being variety of customs, and founded many impossible to account for the origin of claims, upon this authority of tradi-But in what was called the tion. Catholic church, no recourse was had churches that differ in almost every- to tradition, before the second Council thing else, but upon that supposition. of Nice, in 787, in which the worship For we do not find in the New Testa- of images was established; when many ment any express order of Christ, or of things had generally been assented to, the apostles, that such a change should and practised before that time, which had no foundation in the Scriptures, or When, therefore, we speak of tradi- in the reason of things. This council, tion as an improper foundation for therefore, expressly anathematized all faith or practice, we must mean only those who did not receive ecclesiastical pretended, or ill-founded traditions; traditions, written or unwritten. But such as were alleged by several of those the things which the members of this who were called heretics in very early council alleged as proper to be received times, or by the Church of Rome at on such authority are exceedingly fool-

The authority of the books of the to the opinions and practices, not The authority of the books of the merely because we find no trace of New Testament, supposing them to be them in the Scriptures, but because we genuine, is the very same with that of the apostles themselves. But in very early times, this does not appear to have been so great as it came to be in the case of Cornelius, and in the doubted that Paul was an inspired Antioch. ments should appear to them conclusive or inconclusive.

<sup>1</sup> See, on the observance of Sunday [Rutt's Priestley], Vol. II. pp. 322-324, and Notes.

When this apostle does not reason at all, but merely declares that he had his information from Christ, we receive it on the credit of a man whom we suppose to have been neither imposed upon himself, nor to have had any interest in imposing upon others; and as we may infer from the enmity which likewise of his being a person whose authority in general was supported by his power of working miracles. Of Christians, never making use of his this kind is the account which he gives writings. For though they were not us of the resurrection of the dead, and written in a language which they underthe change that will pass upon the living subsequent to it; and also his cult to procure a translation of them, supper, &c.

Nor was this the case of Paul only, afterwards. Though it was never altercation that Paul had with him at apostle, and received the knowledge he On the former of these occasions, had of the gospel from Jesus Christ when the conduct of Peter was arhimself, yet we find by his own writings, raigned, he vindicated himself, not by that there were violent factions against asserting that what he did was by the him all his life, and that his opinions express direction from heaven, (though were by no means implicitly received. he was led to what he did by express He himself is far from insisting that revelations made both to himself, and everything he asserted was to be re- also to Cornelius,) but by a simple ceived without examination. On the narrative of facts, from which they contrary, the various arguments he might themselves judge, that what he produces in support of his assertions, had done was not without sufficient without alleging any other authority authority. And even when all the for them, shows that his conclusions apostles were met, to consider of what were drawn from the premises which he was to be done with respect to the supalleged, and which he submitted to the posed obligation of the Gentile converts examination of his readers. He must, to observe the Jewish ceremonies, they therefore, have supposed that they seem not to have had any immediate would think themselves at liberty to inspiration. For they reasoned and judge for themselves; and that, as he deliberated upon the subject; which submitted his reasoning to their ex- seems to imply that there was for some amination, they would decide for or time a difference of opinion among against him, according as his argu- them, though they afterwards concurred in giving the advice that they did. and in which they concluded that they had the concurrence of the Holy Spirit.

But even this decree, as it is now generally called, which had the authority, as we may say, of the whole college of apostles, does not seem to have been relished by all Christians: the Jewish converts in general bore to Paul, and from the Nazarenes or Jewish stood, it would not have been more diffiaccount of the institution of the Lord's than of the gospel of Matthew, which was also probably written in Greek.

Indeed, what is universally acwho was peculiarly obnoxious to the knowledged to have been the state of Jews, on account of his zeal in preaching the Jewish Christians could not have the gospel to the Gentiles. For Peter been true, if they had had the same himself, who is called the apostle of the ideas that were afterwards entertained, circumcision, and was considered as of the constant inspiration of the aposthe very chief of the apostles, was not tles and evangelists. A great part of more respected, whenever he said or them rejected the account of our Lord's did anything that was thought to be miraculous conception, and though they improper. This appeared very clearly made use of the gospel of Matthew in Hebrew, they omitted the two first but they differ exceedingly in the order chapters, in which it is asserted; not, as far as appears, questioning their being written by Matthew, but not thinking the contents of them sufficiently well-founded; and vet they did not, on account of this difference of opinion, cease to communicate with one another. Nor does Justin Martyr, who mentions their opinion long afterwards. pass any censure upon them on account of it. He only says that he cannot think as they did; and what is more authority of Matthew and Luke, as what was decisive against them. These treated the gospel of Luke in the same manner as they did that of Matthew. if they had been acquainted with it, and had thought proper to make use of it at all.

When the Jewish church was first formed, and indeed so late as the publication of the gospel, many of the disciples would think themselves as good judges of the history of Christ, as the evangelists themselves. They did not want those books for their own use, and would judge concerning the contents of them, as they would concerning other books which implied an appeal to living witnesses. That the books were generally received, and not immediately rejected by those to whom they were addressed, is a proof that the history which they contained is in the main authentic, but by no means proves that every minute circumstance in them is true. Indeed, the evangelists, varying from one another in many particulars, (which may be seen in the Observations prefixed to my Harmony of the Gospels,)1 proves that they wrote partly from their recollection, which may be imperfect in things of little consequence, and partly from the best information which they could collect from other persons.

Like other credible historians, all the evangelists agree in the main things, of their narrative, and with respect to incidents of little consequence; and to contend for anything more than this is in effect to injure their credibility. If the agreement among them had been as exact as some pretend, it would have been natural for the enemies of Christianity to have said, that they must have been written by combination, and therefore that the history has not the concurrent testimony of independent witnesses; and if the exactness conremarkable, he does not mention the tended for cannot be proved, the authority of the whole must be given up.

Sect. xi.-xvi., also the Essays in Theol. Repos. Vol. II.

Besides, what would have been the Jewish Christians would certainly have use of appointing twelve apostles, or witnesses of the life and resurrection of Christ, if their testimony was not naturally sufficient to establish the credibility of the facts; and what would have signified even the original inspiration, unless all error in transcribing. and translating, &c., had been prevented, by the same miraculous interposition, in all ages, and in all nations afterwards? Having written more largely on this subject in my Institutes of Natural and Revealed Religion,2 and also in the Preface to my Harmony of the Gospels, to those works I beg leave to refer any readers with respect to this subject. I would also refer them to what I have written under the signature of Paulinus, in the Theological Repository, in which I think I have shown, that the apostle Paul often reasons inconclusively, and, therefore, that he wrote as any other person, of his turn of mind and thinking, and in his situation, would have written, without any particular inspiration. Facts, such as I think I have there alleged. are stubborn things, and all hypotheses must be accommodated to them.

> Not only the Nazarenes, but Christians of other denominations also, rejected several of the books of our New Testament, and without denying the authenticity of them, (for with this they are not, in general, charged,) but be-contents. Thus the Gnostics in general made but little use of the canonical tradition, and the Elcesaites, in the time of the emperor Philip, are said to have rejected all the epistles of Paul, though the authenticity of them was never questioned. When the apostles were dead, the authority of their writings would naturally rise, and appeals would be made to them when controversies arose in the church. And this natural and universal deference to the opinion of the apostles produced, I doubt not, at length, the opinion of their infallibility. Their authority was also justly opposed to the many idle traditions that were pretended to by some of the early heretics, and to the spurious gospels that were written after the four had acquired credit. Till that time there could be no inducement to write others; and notwithstanding the reception that some of the forged gospels met with in certain places, they never operated to the discredit of the four genuine ones (and indeed they were only written as supplemental to them), it appears that they were easily distinguished from the genuine gospels, and did not retain any credit long. And what we are able to collect of them at this day is enough to satisfy us, that they were not rejected without sufficient reason.

> <sup>2</sup> See [Rutt's Priestley] Vol. II. pp. 123-130. 208-211.

The Jews, in forming their canon of sacred books, seem in general to have made it a rule to comprise within their code all books written by prophets; and therefore though they had other books, which they valued, and might think very useful in the conduct of life, they never read them in their synagogues. These books were afterwards called apocryphal, consisting of pieces of very different character, partly historical and partly moral.

These apocryphal books were not much used by Christians, till they were 1 247. According to Epiphanius, "they received neither the writings of the prophets nor apostles." Lardner, IX. p. 513.

cause they did not approve of their found to favour some superstitious opinions and practices, the rise of which I have already traced, and especially books, and pleaded the authority of the worship of saints. For at the Council of Laodicea, in 364, the Hebrew canon was adopted. But in the third Council of Carthage, in 397, the apocryphal books were admitted, as canonical and divine, and were therefore allowed to be read in public, especially Ecclesiasticus, Wisdom, Tobit, Judith, and the two books of Macca-The Popes Innocent, Gelasius, bees. and Hormisdas confirmed the decrees of this council.2

The church having afterwards adopted the version of Jerome, which followed the Hebrew canon, the apocryphal books began to lose the authority which they had acquired; and it was never fully re-established till the Council of Florence, in 1442; and it was then done principally to give credit to the doctrine of purgatory. It was for a similar reason that the Council of Trent made a decree to the same purpose.3 Also, though before the second Council of Nice the Scriptures alone were considered as the standard of faith, it was then decreed, for the first time, that they who despised traditions should be excommunicated.4

Notwithstanding the apparently little foundation which many of the popish doctrines have in the Scriptures. it was very late before any measures were taken to prevent the common people from using them. Indeed, in the dark ages, there was no occasion for any such precaution, few persons, even among the great and the best educated, being able to read at all. The Sclavonians, who were converted

&lt;sup>2</sup> Sueur, A. D. 397. Basnage, II. p. 460. (P.)

Basnage, II. pp. 463, 465. (P.) "Synodus
... statuit et deelarat, ut kee ipsa votus et vulgata editio ... in publicis lectionibus, disputationibus, praedicationibus, et expositionibus pro authentica habeatur, et ut nemo illum rejicere quovis praetextu audeat vel presumati."
Decretum de editione et usu sacrorum librorum.
Sess. iv. 1546. Con. Trid. Con. et Decret. p. 8.
On Jerome's Fulgate, seo Geddes's Prospectus, 1786, pp. 44-51, and Middleton's Works, II. p.
324. 4 Basnage, H. p. 488. (P.)

had been invented, because God would the catalogue of prohibited books.4 be praised in that language. He orthey should be interpreted to the people, that they might understand them, aswas done, he says, in some churches.1

Bohemia, applying to Gregory VII. cation of the Scripture should change after considering of it, "it appeared Scriptures, because they have the same that God chose that the Scripture authority.5 should be obscure in some places, lest So much were the Roman Catholics bitions.2

of any other version.3

was much increased. For the bishops assembled at Bologna, by order of Julius III. advised that the reading of the Scriptures should be permitted as the popes had always been the greatest when they were least read; alleging that it was the Scriptures which had to Christianity at the end of the ninth raised the dreadful tempest with which century, petitioned to have the service the church was almost sunk, and that in their own language, and it was no person ought to be permitted to granted to them. Pope John VIII, to know more of them than is contained whom the request was made, thanked in the mass. His successor profited God that the Sclavonian character by this advice, and put the Bible into

The cardinal Cusa, in order to jusdered, however, that the gospels should tify the condemnation of Wickliffe, in be read in Latin, but that afterwards the Council of Constance, said that the Scriptures must be explained according to the present doctrine of the church; and that when the institu-But afterwards, Wratislas, king of tions of the church change, the explifor leave to celebrate divine service in also; and the Council of Trent has the same Sclavonian tongue, it was decided that traditions ought to be absolutely refused. For, said this pope, received with the same respect as the

if it was clear to all the world, it chagrined at the advantage which Lushould be despised, and also lead peo- ther, and the other Reformers, derived ple into errors, being ill-understood by from the Scriptures, that, on some their ignorance." This, says Fleury, occasions, they spoke of them with so was the beginning of such prohi- much indignation and disrespect, as is inconsistent with the belief of their The practice of the Church of Rome authority, and of Christianity itself. at present is very various. In Portu- Prieras, master of the sacred palace. gal, Spain, Italy, and in general in all writing against Luther, advances these those countries in which the Inqui- two propositions, viz. that the Scripsition is established, the reading of the tures derive all their authority from Scriptures is forbidden. France was the church and the Pope, and that divided on this subject, the Jansenists indulgences, being established by the allowing it, and the Jesuits refusing it. church and by the Pope, have a greater For the Council of Trent having de- authority than the Scriptures. "How clared the Vulgate version of the Bible do we know," say some of these writo be authentic, the Jesuits maintained ters, "that the books which bear the that this was meant to be a prohibition name of Moses are his, since we have not the originals, and if we had them, After the Council of Trent, this evil there is no person who knows the hand-writing of Moses? Besides, how do we know that all that Moses has said is true? Were the evangelists witnesses of all that they write? And little as possible, because the power of if they were, might they not be defective in memory, or even impose upon us? Every man is capable of deceiving, and being deceived."6

All the popes, however, have not

&lt;sup>1</sup> Basnage, II. pp. 470, 471. (P.)
<sup>2</sup> A. D. 1080. (P.)
<sup>3</sup> Basnage, II. p. 468. (P.) On Catholic Versions, see Geddes, pp. 101-113.

Ibid. II. p. 475. (P.) See supra, p. 2, fin.
 Ibid. p. 489. (P.)
 Ibid. p. 455, &c. (P.)

shown the same dread of the Scriptures. with the Catholics; many of the errors much offended at it. 1 oppressed with a reverence for anti- with Chillingworth, that the Bible quity, and the traditions of the church, alone is the religion of Protestants. at the time of the Reformation, that We may, however, be very much emthe Protestants were not a little em- barrassed by entertaining even this

1 Histoire des Papes, V. p. 80. (P.)

For Sixtus V. caused an Italian trans- and abuses of Popery being discovered lation of the Bible to be published, in the earliest Christian writers, after though the zealous Catholics were the apostolical age. But at present all Protestants seem to entertain a just So much were the minds of all men opinion of such authority, and to think barrassed by it in their controversy opinion in its greatest rigour, as I have shown in the introduction to this Appendix.

PART XII.

THE HISTORY OF THE MONASTIC LIFE.

THE INTRODUCTION.

spiritual substance, and that its powers doos. are clogged, and its virtues impeded, by its connexion with the body. Hence they inferred that the greatest perfection of mind is attained by the extenua- "takes notice that 'Paganism had tion and mortification of its corporeal incumbrance. This notion operating Besides those ministers of the Chris- with the indolent and melancholy turn tian church whose titles we meet with of many persons in the southern hot in the New Testament, but whose climates of Asia, and especially of powers and prerogatives have been pro-digiously increased from that time to solitary life, as destitute as possible of the present, we find that, excepting everything that might pamper the the popes alone, no less conspicuous a body, or that is adapted to gratify figure was made by other orders of those appetites and passions which men, of whom there is not so much as were supposed to have their seat in the the least mention in the books of Scrip-flesh. Hence arose the notion of the ture, or the writings of the apostolical greater purity and excellency of celiage; I mean the monks, and religious bacy, as well as a fondness for a retired orders of a similar constitution, which and unsocial life, which has driven so have more or less of a religious cha-racter. many persons in all ages, from the society of their brethren, to live either The set of opinions which laid the foundation for the whole business of monkery, came originally from the East, and had been adopted by some of the Greek philosophers, especially Plato, viz. that the soul of man is a Mahometans, and fakirs among Hin-many observances which, to the reproach even of Christians, implied a great strictness of manners and discipline. Juno,' says he, 'has her priestesses, devoted to one husband, Vesta her perpetual virgins, and other idols their priests also, under vows of chastity." 1

The persecution of Christians by the Heathen emperors, and consequently the more imminent hazard that attended living in cities, especially with the incumbrance of families, was another circumstance that contributed to drive many of the primitive Christians into deserts and unfrequented places. The irruptions of the Northern nations into the Roman empire had an effect of the same kind, making all cities less safe and comfortable. Moreover, when the great persecutions were over, and consequently the boasted crown of martyrdom could not be obtained in a regular way, many persons inflicted upon themselves a kind of voluntary martyrdom, in abandoning the world and all the enjoyments of life. "Gregory Nazianzen, celebrating the absurd austerities and mortifications of the monks of Naziansum, tells us that some of them, through an excess of zeal, killed themselves, to be released from the wicked world." 2 It is possible, however, that they might not directly kill themselves, or intend to do it, but only died in consequence of depriving themselves of the usual comforts of life. It was these austerities, joined with such imaginary revelations, and intimate communications with heaven, as have usually accompanied them, that was the great recommendation of Montanism. The Montanists, Tertullian says, had the same rule of faith, but more fasting and less marrying, than others.3

1 Middleton's Letter, p. 238. (P.) "Quid nos oportet facere, in quorum condemnationem habet, et Juno Univiras, et Vesta Virgines, et alia Idola continentes." Hieron, T. iv. Par. I. p. 314. It. Par. ii. pp. 154 & 744. Middleton, Works, HI. p. 127.

2 Jortin's Remarks, III. p. 22. (P.) Ed. 1805, III. p. 180

II. p. 168.

3 De Jejuniis, C. i. Op. p. 544. (P.)

These notions and these circumstances concurring, particular texts of Scripture were easily found that seemed to countenance austerities in general, and celibacy in pacticular; as that saying of our Saviour, Matt. xix. 12: "There are some.... which have made themselves eunuchs for the kingdom of heaven's sake. He that is able to receive it, let him receive it;" and Paul's saying, 1 Cor. vii. 38: "He that giveth in marriage doeth well. but he that giveth not in marriage doeth better." Both these passages, however, probably relate to the times of persecution, in which it is either absolutely necessary to abandon the satisfaction of family relations and domestic society, or at least in which it is most convenient to be free from every attachment of that kind; that when men were persecuted in one city, they might, with more ease, and less distress of mind, flee to another.

But on every other occasion marriage is spoken of in the most honourable terms in the Scriptures, and is, indeed, necessary for the propagation of the human species. Besides, Paul makes it a mark of that man of sin, or antichristian power, which was to arise in the latter times, that it was to forbid to marry, as well as to make use of "meats, which God hath created to be received with thanksgiving." 1 Tim. iv. 3. In fact, these two circumstances greatly contribute to point out the Church of Rome as the principal seat of that antichristian corruption, of which so much is said, and against which we are so earnestly cautioned, in the books of the New Testament.

Besides, men's passions are far from being improved by the long continuance of this miserable and solitary state. Instead of approaching by this means, as they vainly pretended, to the life of angels, they rather sink themselves to the condition of brutes, and some of the most worthless or savage kinds. Also, living without labour themselves, (as in time the monks came to do,) and upon the labour of others, and without adding and Ambrose into Italy. "St. Martin, to the number or strength of the com- the celebrated bishop of Tours, erected munity, they certainly defeat the great the first monasteries in Gaul, and ... purposes of their creation, as social his funeral is said to have been atbeings; and are not only a dead weight tended by no less than two thousand upon the community, but, in many monks." But the Western monks never cases, a real evil and nuisance, in those states in which they are established.1

SECTION I.

OF THE MONASTIC LIFE, TILL THE FALL OF THE WESTERN EMPIRE.

THERE is always something uncertain and fabulous in the antiquities of all societies, and it is so in those of the The monks themselves acknowledge the first of their order to have been one Paul, an Egyptian, who in the seventh persecution, or about the year 260, retired into a private cave, where he is said to have lived many years, unseen by any person, till one Anthony found him just before his death, put him into his grave, and followed his example.

This Anthony, finding many others disposed to adopt the same mode of life, reduced them into some kind of order; and the regulations which he made for the monks of Egypt were soon introduced into Palestine and Syria by his disciple Hilarion, into Mesopotamia by Aones and Eugenius, and into Armenia by Eustachius Bishop of Sebastia. " From the East this gloomy institution passed into the West; " Basil carrying it into Greece, attained the severity of the Eastern.2

The number of these monks in very early times was so great, as almost to exceed belief. Fleury says, that in Egypt alone they were computed, at the end of the fourth century, to exceed seventy thousand.3 With this increasing number many disorders were necessarily introduced among them. At the end of the fourth century the monks were observed to be very insolent and licentious; and having power with the people, they would sometimes even force criminals from the hands of justice, as they were going to execution.4 In the time of Austin many real or pretended monks went strolling about, as hawkers and pedlars, selling bones and relics of martyrs.

The increase of monks was much favoured by the laws of Christian princes, and the encouragement of the popes, as well as by the strong recommendation of the most distinguished writers of those times. "Justinian made a law that a son should not be disinherited for entering into a state of monkery against his father's will;" and Jovian appointed "that whosoever courted a nun, and enticed her to marriage, should be put to death." But this law, being thought too severe, was afterwards mitigated.5 Syricius. Bishop of Rome, ordered that monks and virgins who married after their consecration to God should be banished from their monasteries, and confined in private cells; that by their continual tears they might efface their crime, and become worthy of communion before they died. The same pope ordered that bishops and priests who were <sup>1 &</sup>quot;Esteeming it to be evangelical poverty, to feed upon the labours of other men, in beggary and idleness; these are they who, clad in mean and vile habits,...profess themselves to wear these emblems of poverty and contempt for the sake of Christ and religion; yet swelling inwardly with ambition, and giving to the chiefs of their orders the most arrogant titles...I will not deny, but there are some pious and devout men among them, but the generality of them... deform and deficer religion." Aprippa de Incertitudine, &c. 1530. "Vanity of Aris and Sciences," Ch. Ixii. On Monks, fin. 1634, p. 186.

Mosheim, I. pp. 306-308. (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. ii.
 Ch. iii. Sect. xiii. xiv.
 Eighth Discourse, p. 8. (P.)
 Sucur, A. D. 399. (P.)
 Jorthi's Remarks, IV. pp. 27, 38. (P.) Ed.
 Ed. 1305, 111, pp. 12, 16.

their office.1

The language in which the writers of those times recommended a monkish life was sometimes shocking and blasphemous, especially that of Jerome, who was the greatest advocate for it in his time. Writing to Eustochium the nun, he calls her his lady, because she was the spouse of Christ; and he reminds her mother, that she had the honour to be God's mother-in-law.2

Many women were ambitious of distinguishing themselves by some of the peculiarities of the monkish life in these early times, devoting themselves, as they imagined, to God, and living in virginity, but at first without forming themselves into regular communities. Jerome prevailed upon many women in Rome to embrace this kind of life; but they continued in their own houses, from which they even made visits; and it appears by an epitaph which he wrote for Marcella, that before her there was no woman of condition in Rome who lived in this manner, the common people of that city considering it as disreputable, on account of the novelty of the thing.3 These early nuns were only distinguished by wearing a veil, that was given them by the bishop of the place. It was not till the year 567 that Queen Radigonda founded the first monastery for women, in France, which was confirmed by the Council of Tours.4

No perfect uniformity can be expected in the customs and modes of living among men, and least of all, men whose imaginations were so eccentric as those of the monks. Accordingly we find almost endless distinctions among them, some choosing to live in one manner, and some in another. And in later times when they formed themselves into regular societies, and married, and had any commerce with laid themselves under an absolute their wives, should be degraded from engagement to live according to certain rules, we find above a hundred kinds of them, who assumed different names, generally from their respective founders. But these divisions and sub-divisions were the offspring of late

> The most early distinction among them was only that of those who lived quite single and independent, and those who lived in companies. The latter were called Canobites in Greek, in Latin Monks, (though that term originally denoted an absolutely solitary life,) and sometimes Friars from fratres, freres, brethren, on account of their living together as brothers, in one family. These had a president called abbot, or father, and the place where they lived was called a monastery.

On the other hand, those who lived single were often called eremites or hermits, and commonly frequented caves and deserts. And some make a farther distinction of these into Anachorites, whose manner of life was still more savage, living without tents or clothing, and only upon roots, or other spontaneous productions of the earth. In Egypt some were called Sarabaites. These led a wandering life, and maintained themselves chiefly by selling relies, and very often by various kinds of fraud.5

In early times it was not uncommon for persons to pass from one of these modes of life to the other; and in later ages it was found to be very advantageous to the revenues of the society. for the monks to become hermits for a time, retiring from the monastery with the leave of the abbot. These being much revered by the people, often got rich by their alms, and then deposited their treasures in their monasteries.6

Persons who live in Protestant countries, or indeed in Roman Catholic countries at present, can form no idea of the high respect and reverence with

<sup>1</sup> Sueur, A. D. 385. (P.)
2 Ad Eustochium, Ep. xxii.
144. (P.)
3 Sueur, A. D. 382. (P.)
4 Ibid. A. D. 567. (P.) Op. I. pp. 140,

Mosheim, I. p. 309. (P.) Cent. iv. Pt. if. Ch. iii. Sect. xv.

6 Simon on Church Revenues, p. 54. (P.)

rest in their prayers. In this light, institution.

and, consequently, that they who them were induced to give some attenrespect more acceptable in the sight of that respect; and the Christian Church God than those who lived virtuously in was never without great occasion for the state of marriage. But these sen- learned men. sible opinions were condemned, first by Several heresies, in particular, spring-Jerome, also, wrote in a very abusive might be useful to the people. In manner against the treatise of Jovinian, consequence of this, many of them, in which he maintained the above mentioned-opinions.

SECTION II.

THE HISTORY OF THE MONKS AFTER THE FALL OF THE WESTERN EMPIRE.

which monks were treated in early establishments, I proceed, in launchtimes. They were universally coning out into the dark ages, to point out sidered as being of a higher rank and the steps by which these monks atorder than the rest of mankind, and tained that amazing power and influeven superior to the priests; and ence which they acquired in the later wherever they went, or could be found, ages, and to note other remarkable the people crowded to them, loading facts in their history, showing both the them with alms, and begging an inte- good and the evil that arose from their

however, they were regarded in gene- The primitive monks, courting soliral. For some persons may be found tude, were equally abstracted from the who thought sensibly in every age, and affairs of the world and those of the consequently looked with contempt church; and yet, by degrees, a very upon this spurious kind of religion, considerable part of the business in and affectation of extraordinary sanc- both departments came to be done by them. The principal circumstance that In the fourth century, when all Chris- favoured their advancement, and made tian countries swarmed with monks, their introduction into public life in a we find one who, though he chose that manner necessary, was the great ignomode of life, was sensible of the super-rance of the secular clergy. For by stitious notions that were very prevathis term the common clergy began to lent with respect to it, and strenuously be distinguished, on account of their remonstrated against them. This was living more after the manner of the Jovinian, who, towards the conclusion world; while the monks, on account of of that century, taught, first at Rome, their living according to an exact rule, and afterwards at Milan, that all who got the name of regulars, and religious. lived according to the gospel, have an The monks spending a great part of equal title to the rewards of heaven; their time in contemplation, many of passed their days in unsocial celibacy, tion to letters, and soon attained a and severe mortifications, were in no manifest superiority over the clergy in the Church of Rome, and afterwards ing up in the church, and some learned by Ambrose, Bishop of Milan, in a monks very ably opposing them, it was council held in the year 390. The em- found convenient to draw them from peror Honorius seconded the proceed- their solitude, and to settle them in ings of the council, and banished the suburbs of cities, and sometimes Jovinian as a heretic. The famous in the cities themselves, that they applying to study, got into holy orders. This was much complained of for some time; but being found useful to the bishops themselves, both in spiritual and temporal affairs, those bishops who were fond of a numerous elergy, and wanted fit men to carry on their schemes, gave them considerable offices; HAVING given the preceding account of not imagining that they were encouragthe origin and nature of the monkish ing a set of men who would afterwards

revenues.1

Originally the monks, being subject to the bishops, could do nothing without their consent. They could not even choose their own abbot. But the election of an abbot being sometimes appointed by their institutions to be made by the monks of the community, they first obtained from the bishops the power of choosing their abbot, according to the tenor of their constitutions. Afterwards they sometimes got from the bishops exemptions from episcopal jurisdiction. But when the likewise the canon and civil laws, and popes got the power of granting such exemptions, they commonly gave, or sold, to the monks as many of them as they pleased, so that their power grew with that of the popes.2

In the seventh century, pope Zacharias granted to the monastery of Mount Cassin an exemption from all be advocates for the regulars. These episcopal jurisdiction, so that it was things, says Fleury, brought them too subject to the Pope only. Similar ex- much into the world.4 emptions had been obtained in the The clergy were soon aware of the

and Trent.3

<sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 65. (P.)

■ Anecdotes, pp. 298, 303. (P.)

supplant them in their dignities and ecclesiastical power was completed, and made equal to that of the other clergy, by Boniface IV. in 606. They could then preach, baptize, hear confessions, absolve, and do everything that any priest could do. Upon this the monks began to be, in a great measure, in-dependent of the bishops, refusing to submit to their orders, on the pretence that they were contrary to their rules of discipline, and always appealing to the popes, who were sure to decide in their favour.

> The monks, besides theology, studied also medicine; studies which they began through charity, but which they continued for interest. They were therefore forbidden by Innocent II., in 1131, to study either civil law or medicine. But in the beginning of the following century they were allowed to preceding century, but they were very encroachments of the monks, both upon rare. In time they came to be uni- their spiritual power and upon their versal, and were even extended to the revenues. But the tide of popularity chapters of regular cathedrals. In re- was so strongly in their favour, that turn for those privileges, the monks all attempts to withstand it were in were distinguished by a boundless de-vain. At the Council of Chalcedon it votion to the see of Rome. These was ordered that the monks should be abuses were checked, but not effec- wholly under the jurisdiction of the tually, by the Councils of Constance bishops, and meddle with no affairs. civil or ecclesiastical, without their per-The first introduction of monks into mission. But this, and all other reguholy orders, was by the permission lations for the same purpose, availed which they obtained to have priests of nothing, both the popes and rich laity their own body, for the purpose of favouring the monks. When Greofficiating in their monasteries, to which gory VII. made a law to compel laythere could be no great objection; it men to restore whatever had been in being for the convenience of the secular the possession of the church, such respriests themselves, as well as of the titutions were generally made either monastery; and especially as, with re- to the cathedral churches, where the spect to qualification for the office, they clergy conformed to a regular monastic were superior to the priests themselves. life, or to the monasteries, and seldom The first privilege they obtained of this to those parish churches to which the kind was from Boniface III.; but their estates had originally belonged.5

In later times the endowments of

I Simon on Church Revenues, p. 35. (P.)

<sup>4</sup> Eighth Discourse, p. 17. (P.)
■ Simon on Church Revenues, p. 67. (P.)

monasteries were equal, if not superior, to those of the churches; and the influence of the monks with the popes and the temporal princes being generally superior to that of the clergy, they used, in many places, to claim the bishops, clergy, and universities in tithes and other church dues. When Europe, were engaged in a violent churches depended upon monasteries, opposition to them. And it was in they appointed monks to officiate in this quarrel that the famous Wickliffe them, and appropriated the tithes to first distinguished himself, in 1360; the use of the monastery. Also bishops and from thence he proceeded to atwere often gained by the monks to tack the pontifical power itself. suffer them to put vicars or curates into churches, which they pretended no distinction of orders among monks. to depend upon monsteries; and in but a monk in one place was received other respects, also, they encroached as a monk in any other. But afterupon the rights of the clergy.

of the ignorance of the secular priests, another; and so far were they from and having got the government of considering all monks as friends and many churches committed to them, it brothers, that they often entertained was not easy to turn them out and re- the most violent enmity against each establish the secular clergy in their other; especially those who formed places; and on this account there themselves on the same general plan, happened the greatest contests be- and afterwards divided from them on tween the canons and the monks, es- some trifling difference in customs or pecially in England, where the monks habits. had deprived the canons of their canon- This distinction of orders began with ships, and even obliged the secular Benedict of Nursia, who in 529 instipriests to turn monks, if they would tuted a new order of monks, which enjoy their beuefices. All the arch- presently made most rapid progress bishops of Canterbury had been monks in the West; being particularly fafrom the time of that Austin whom voured by the Church of Rome, to the Gregory sent into England, to the interest of which it was greatly de-reign of Henry I. But, at length, voted. In the ninth century this all the bishops in England declared, order had swallowed up all the other that they would have no monk for denominations of monks.3 primate; and by degrees they began Notwithstanding the extreme proto take the government of the church fligacy of the manners of many of into their own hands.2 had the advantage of the secular.

dicant orders, assumed so much, and got so much power, both spiritual and temporal, into their hands, some time before the Reformation, that all the

The monks, and especially the men-

Before the sixth century there was wards they subdivided themselves into The monks having taken advantage societies, altogether distinct from one these monks, their number and repu-In the ninth century many monks tation would hardly be credible, but were taken from the monasteries, and that the most authentic history bears even placed at the head of armies; testimony to it. What the number of and monks and abbots frequently dis- them was in Egypt, at a very early charged the functions of ambassadors period, has been mentioned already. and ministers of state. For, upon the Presently afterwards, viz. in the fifth very same account that the clergy in century, the monks are said to have general were better qualified for these been so numerous, that large armies offices than laymen, viz. in point of might have been raised out of them, learning and address, the regular clergy without any sensible diminution of their body. And yet this was not to be compared to their numbers in to find complaints of the want of good Reformation.1

Simon on Church Revenues, p. 67. (P.)
 Ibid. p. 74. (P.)

<sup>3</sup> Mosheim, I. pp. 446-449. (P.) Cent. vi. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. v.-vii.

counts, dukes, and even kings, aban- them through all the provinces of his doned their honours, and shut them empire." He "instituted also an order selves up in monasteries, under the of Canonesses, which," Mosheim says, notion of devoting themselves entirely "was the first female convent known to God. Several examples of this fana- in the Christian world."4 tical extravagance were exhibited in In the tenth century the monkish Italy, France, Germany, Spain, and discipline, which had been greatly de-England. And others, repenting that caved, was again revived in some they had not done this in time, put on measure by the authority of Odo, the monastic habit on the approach of bishop of Clugny, whose rules were death, and chose to be buried in it, adopted by all the western kingdoms that they might be considered as in Christendom. Thus we find sucof the fraternity, and consequently cessive periods of reformation in the have the benefit of the prayers of that discipline of monasteries. But no order.

tinued to the fifteenth century. For rich, than they became as dissolute as even then we find "many made it an their predecessors, which called for essential part of their last wills, that another revolution in their affairs; and their carcases, after death, should be these successive periods of rigour and wrapped in old ragged Dominican or of dissoluteness continued quite down Franciscan habits, and interred among to the Reformation.

the Mendicants.2

Christianity together, there were not teries, was the invasion of the Norso many foundations of monasteries, mans, whose ravages fell chiefly upon both for men and women, or so rich the monasteries. For upon this, the and famous, as those of the seventh monks being dispersed, and assembling and eighth centuries, especially in where and how they could, the ob-France.3 And when monasteries were servance of their rules was impossible. so much increased, we are not surprised and many irregularities were intro-

later ages; and almost every century discipline among them, Accordingly, produced new species of them, and no in the the ninth century, the morals of ace abounded more with them than the monks were so bad, that some rethat which immediately preceded the formation was absolutely necessary; and this was attempted by Benedict, In the seventh century the heads of abbot of Aniane, at the instance of rich families were fond of devoting their Lewis the Meek. He first reformed children to this mode of life; and those the monasteries of Aquitaine, and then who had lived profligate lives generally those of all France, reducing "all the made this their last refuge, and then monks, without exception, to the rule left their estates to the monasteries, of the famous Benedict, abbot of Mount This was deemed sufficient to cancel Cassin." This discipline continued in all sorts of crimes, and therefore the force a certain time, but the effect of it embracing of this way of life was was extinct in less than a century. sometimes termed a second baptism. The same emperor also favoured "the In the eighth and ninth centuries, order of Canons," and "distributed sooner were the new and more austere This most abject superstition con- kinds of monks established, and got

One of the first great causes of this It is said that in all the centuries of relaxation of discipline in the monasduced. Something of the same kind was the consequence of the great Mosheim, III. pp. 446, 447. (P.) Cent. xvi.

 Sect. iii. Pt. i. Ch. i. Sect. xviii.
 Ibid. III. p. 184. (P.) Cent. xiv. Pt. ii.
 Ch. ii. Sect. xvii.
 Sueur, A. D. 720. (P.)

&lt;sup>4</sup> Mosheim, II. pp. 129, 130. (P.) Cent. ix. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. xi. xii.

brought to them again.

tion of discipline among all the orders omission or mistake, they carried grains jurisdiction.

their discipline, was the multiplication of prayers and singing of psalms; for they had added many to those pre- all wealthy and dissolute in the thirscribed by Benedict. This, says Fleury, teenth century, the mendicant or begleft them no time for labour, of which ging friars, who absolutely disclaimed Benedict had ordered seven hours every all property, were then established by day. This contempt of bodily labour Innocent III. and patronized by sucwas introduced by the northern nations, ceeding pontiffs. These increased so who were addicted to hunting and war, amazingly, that they became a burthen but despised agriculture and the arts. both to the people and to the church it-Mental prayer, he adds, has been much self; and at length they were the occaboasted of by the monks for the last sion of much greater disorders than those five hundred years. It is, says he, an which they were introduced to redress. idle and equivocal exercise, and pro- There is a remarkable resemblance. duced at length the error of the Beg. as Middleton observes, between these hards and Beguines, which was con- mendicant friars, and the mendicant demned at the Councils of Vienna.3 priests among the Pagans. "The The original monks, he says, were a lazy mendicant priests among the very different kind of men, and their Heathens," he says, "who used to discipline much more proper to produce travel from house to house with sacks a real mortification to the world, and to on their backs, and, from an opinion suppress inordinate affections. Theirs of their sanctity, raise large contribuwas a life of contemplation and labour, tions of money, &c. for the support of by which they chiefly supported them-their fraternity," were "the very picselves. The ancient monks had no tures of the begging friars, who are no mention of discipline or flagellation among them.4

Bodily labour, this writer observes, was likewise excluded by the introduction of lay-brothers into monasteries, and this was another means of the corruption of their manners, the monks dicant friars were instituted with the being the masters, and the lay-brothers very best intention, and that they had being considered as slaves, and an order of persons much below them, and subservient to them. John Gualbert was plague in Europe, in 1348, when many the first who instituted lay-brothers, in of the monks died, and the remainder his monastery of Valombrose founded dispersed; and having lived for some about 1040. To those lay-brothers time without any regard to their rules, were prescribed a certain number of they could not without difficulty be pater nosters, at each of their canonical hours; and that they might acquit A more general cause of the relaxa- themselves of this duty without any of the monks, as Bernard observed, of corn, or strings, whence came the use was their exemption from episcopal of chaplets. The same distinction, he says, was afterwards carried into nun-Another cause of the relaxation of neries, though there was no pretence for it.5

The monastic orders being almost hair cloths, or chains, and there was always about the street in the same habit, and on the same errand, and never fail to carry home with them a good sack full of provisions for the use of their convent."6

Notwithstanding these disorders, it must be acknowledged that the men-

<sup>1</sup> Fleury's Eighth Discourse, p. 37. (P.)

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 13. (P.) <sup>8</sup> Ibid. pp. 44, 45. (P.) <sup>4</sup> Ibid. p. 6. (P.)

&lt;sup>5</sup> Ibid. p. 15. (P.)
<sup>6</sup> Middleton's Letter, p. 220. (P.) Works, III. pp. 116, 117. "De ces moines d'entre les Payens, les uns étoient rentez... les autres étoient mandians comme les religieux de la grande mère des dieux, qui 'allans par les carrefours et par les rues,' comme dit S. Augustin, 'exigocient du peuple ce dequoi ils vivoient honteusement.'" Les Conform. p. 41.

of whom were then ignorant or negli- quisition. gent, and many corrupt and scandamatters of literature.2

and heretics, with incredible ardour they are now settled at Malta. and success. They were in those times for a considerable time a very good what the Jesuits were afterwards, the effect. St. Francis, the founder of life and soul of the whole hierarchy. this order, thought his institute, by Among other prerogatives, the popes which he forbade his monks the use of empowered them to preach, to hear gold, silver, or any kind of property, confessions, and to pronounce absoluthe pure gospel; and it was of use, as tions, without any licence from the Fleury observes, in a very corrupt age, bishops, and even without consulting to recall the idea of charity and simple them. The Franciscans had the chief Christianity, and to supply the defect management of the sale of indulgences, of ordinary pastors, the greater part and the Dominicans directed the In-

The amazing credit of religious orders in general, and the reputation of their The monks of the ancient religious founders, made many persons ambiorders fell into great contempt after tious of distinguishing themselves in the introduction of the Mendicants, the same way; and though the Council who filled the chairs in schools and of Lateran, in 1215, forbade the in-churches, and by their labours supplied troduction of any more new religions, the negligence and incapacity of the as they were called, the decree, as priests and other pastors. But this Fleury says, was ill observed: for more contempt excited the emulation of the were established in the two centuries other orders, and made them apply to following, than in all the preceding.4

Besides the monks and regulars, Afterwards, the mendicant friars, there is another sort of religious peron the pretence of charity, meddled sons who, according to their instituwith all affairs, public and private. tion, bear the name of St. John of They undertook the execution of wills, Jerusalem, from whom are descended and they even accepted of deputations the knights of Malta; and similar to to negociate peace between cities and them were the knights Templars, and princes. The popes frequently em- the knights of the Teutonic order. ployed them, as persons entirely de- These orders had their origin in the voted to them, and who travelled at a time of the crusades, and their first small expense; and sometimes they object was to take care of the sick and made use of them in raising money, wounded, and afterwards to defend But what diverted them the most from them. But they distinguished themtheir proper profession was the business selves so much in their military capaof the Inquisition. By undertaking city, that the order was soon filled with to manage this court, they were trans- men of a military turn, and at length formed into magistrates, with guards they were most depended upon for any and treasures at their disposal, and military service. Thus, from their became terrible to every body.3 undertaking the defence of their hospi-During three centuries the two tal, they undertook the defence of the fraternities of Mendicants, the Domini- Holy Land, and by degrees that of cans and the Franciscans, governed, other Christian countries against all with an almost universal and absolute Mahometan powers. The knights of sway, both church and state, and St. John were established in 1090, and maintained the prerogative of the being driven from the Holy Land, they Roman pontiff, against kings, bishops retired to Cyprus, then to Rhodes, and their first house, which stood near the middle rank between the monks and 1312.

The knights Templars were established in 1118, taking their name from

<sup>1</sup> Fleury's Eighth Discourse, p. 21. (P.)

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 32. (P.) <sup>3</sup> Ibid. p. 27. (P.)

had something of religion in their in- who were called professed members, and stitution, were formed in several parts were distinguished from those who were of Europe, whence arose what are called called scholars, but only to a few of the Commanderies, which were originally oldest of them, and those who were the office of taking care of the revenues approved by long experience. The belonging to the military orders, in dis- court and church of Rome derived more tant places. The members of some of assistance from this single order, than these orders may marry, and yet enjoy, from all their other emissaries and under the title of Commanders, the ministers, by their application to learnchurch lands that are appropriated to ing, engaging in controversy, and their order. Philip II. of Spain was, preaching in distant countries, but more in this sense, the greatest prelate in the especially by their consummate skill in church, next to the Pope; because he civil transactions, and getting to themwas the great master of the three mili- selves almost the whole business of the tary orders of Spain, and enjoyed a Confessors to crowned heads, and pergood part of the tithe of the church sons of eminence in the state; a busiwithin his territories. The king of ness which had before been engrossed Spain, F. Simon says, may always be by the Dominicans. the richest beneficiary in his kingdom; The moral maxims of this society and by appropriating to his own use were so dangerous, and so obnoxious to the revenues of his commanderies the temporal princes, (added to the alone, may have enough to live like a temptation of the wealth of which they savage manner, and by degrees lost all obliged to abolish the whole order.3 sense both of religion and humanity.2

which I think it of any consequence to give an account, is that of the Jesuits, which was instituted by Ignatius Loyola, and confirmed by the Pope, with a view to heal the wounds which the Church of Rome had received by

1 On Church Revenues, p. 234. (P.)
2 Mosheim. (P.) [Vol. 111, p. 12. Cent. xiii.
Pt. i. Ch. ii. Sect. i. The Druses, their descen dants, still inhabit this region.]

temple in Jerusalem. This order grew the secular clergy, and approached very rich and powerful, but withal so pretty nearly to the regular canons. exceedingly vicious, and it is said They all took an oath, by which they atheistical, that, becoming obnoxious bound themselves to go, without deliin France, Italy and Spain, the Pope beration or delay, wherever the Pope was compelled to abolish the order in should think fit to send them. The secrets of this society were not known Other orders of knighthood, which to all the Jesuits, nor even to all those were possessed,) that being charged It may not be improper to add, in with many intrigues and crimes of this place, that after the destruction of state, they were banished, and had Jerusalem, many of the Latins remained their effects confiscated, first in Porstill in Syria, and retreating into the tugal, then in Spain, and afterwards in recesses of mount Libanus, lived in a France; and at length the Pope was nse both of religion and numanity.

The last order of a religious kind, of Jesuits in France, by M. D'Alembort," 1766, hich I think it of any consequence to The following character of the order, and remarkable anticipation of their fall, is in a sermon markable anticipation of their fall, is in a sermon markable anticipation of their rail, is in a certification by Broune, Archbishop of Dublin, preached in 1551:—"There are a new fraternity of late sprung up, who call themselves Jesuits, which will deceive many, who are much after the Scribes and Pharisees' manner amongst the Jesus. They shall strive to abolish the truth, and shall strive to abolish the truth, and shall strive to abolish the truth, and shall strive to a strip these sorts will. the Church of Kome had received by They shall strive to abolish the fruth, and shall the Reformation, and to supply the come very near to do it; for these sorts will place of the monks, and especially that turn themselves into several forms; with the of the mendicants, who were then sunk Atheist; with the Jews, a Jew; and with the into contempt. The Jesuits held a portion of the mendicants, who were then sunk Atheist; with the Jews, a Jew; and with the feormers, a Reformade, purposely to know your intentions, your minds, your hearts, and your inclinations; and thereby bring you at last 2 Mosheim. (P.) (Vol. 111. p. 12. Cent. xiii. to be like the fool, that said in his heart, there was no God. "These shall spread over the whole world, monks in general.

the Church of Rome, in all ages. The worship of saints, and the superstitious veneration for relics, were chiefly wrought by them, and of revelations in souls."2 their favour. They were also the great the Inquisition, and the great instrument of the Papal persecutions. The licentiousness of the monks was become proverbial so early as the fifth century, and they are said, in those times, to have excited tumults and seditions in various places.

In some periods the monks, having an unlimited licence to buy and sell, exercised their permission with so little scruple, that it encouraged many great men to usurp the estates of their neighbours, being sure to find purchasers among the monks. F. Simon relates an instance in the abbey of Mire in Switzerland, in which the monk, who compiled the acts of the monastery, gives a list of things which were acquired by unjust means, without the least hint of any obligation to make restitution.1

Nothing could exceed the insolence

shall be admitted into the council of princes, and they never the wiser; charming of them, and they never the wiser; charming of them, yea, making your princes reveal their hearts, and the secrets therein unto them, and yet they not perceive it: which will happen from falling from the law of God, by neglect of fulfilling of the law of God, and by winking at their sins. Yet in the end God, to justify his law, shall suddenly cut off this society, even by the hands of those who have most succoured them, and were area of them; so that at the end they shall or those who have most succoured them, and made use of them; so that at the end they shall become odious to all nations: they shall be worse than Jews, having no resting-place upon the earth, and then shall a Jew have more favour than a Jesuit." Phenix, 1707, I. p. 136. On this Order, see An Essay, by C. Villers, 1805, pp. 96, Note and 271.

1 On Church Revenues, p. 56. (P.)

I shall conclude this article with and arrogance of the Dominicans and some particulars that lead us to think Franciscans. They even declared "pubunfavourably, and others that may in- licly, that they had a divine impulse cline us to think more favourably, of and commission to illustrate and maintain the religion of Jesus .... that the The religious orders in general have true method of obtaining salvation was been the great support of the papal revealed to them alone;" and they power, and of all the superstitions of boasted of "their familiar connexions with the Supreme Being, the Virgin Mary, and the saints in glory." By these means they gained such an aspromoted by their assiduity, in pro- cendancy over the common people, that claiming their virtues everywhere, these would trust no others "but the and publishing accounts of miracles Mendicants with the care of their

St. Francis imprinted upon himself venders of indulgences, the founders of five wounds, similar to those of our Saviour, which his followers asserted were given him by Christ himself; and in this they were encouraged by the mandates of the popes, and by several bulls enjoining the belief of it. They even approved and recommended an impious treatise entitled, "The Book of the Conformities of St. Francis with Jesus Christ," composed in 1383, by a Franciscan of Pisa, in which this saint is put on a level with

The Carmelites imposed upon the credulous, by asserting that the Virgin Mary appeared to the general of their order, and gave him a solemn promise, that the souls of all those who left the world with the Carmelite cloak or scapulary upon their shoulders, should be infallibly preserved from eternal damnation; and this impudent fiction found patrons and defenders among the pontiffs. Even the late Pope Benedict XIV., who is generally esteemed the most candid and sensible of all the popes, is an advocate for this gross imposition. 4

It must, however, be acknowledged, that not with standing the great mischief that has been done to the Christian world by the religious orders, they have,

4 Ibid. p. 61. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. ii.

Sect. xxix. Note [g].

&lt;sup>2</sup> Mosheim, III. p. 61. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. xxix.

3 Ibid. p. 169. (P.) Cent. xiv. Pt. ii. Ch. ii. Sect. xxi.

both directly and indirectly, been the occasion of some good; and though they were the chief support of the papal power, they nevertheless contributed something to the diminution of it, and to the Reformation.

Such places as monasteries originally were, though they were abused by many, must have been a very desirable retreat to many others, in times of war and confusion. And the opportunity of leisure and meditation, with a total exclusion from the world, must have been of great use to those who had been too much immersed in the bustle and the vices of it. For notwithstanding the irregularities with which monks in general were perhaps justly charged, there must have been, in all ages, great numbers who conscientiously conformed to the rules of

There is no period, perhaps, in which the state of Christianity, and of Europe in general, wore a more unfavourable aspect than in the fourteenth century. during the residence of the popes at Avignon; and yet Petrarch, who lived in that age, and who makes heavy and repeated complaints of the vices of it, and especially of the extreme profligacy of the court of Rome, appears to have had a good opinion of the state of many of the monasteries; and his own brother, who had been rather dissolute in his youth, retired to one of them in the very flower of his age, and became truly exemplary for his piety, humanity and other virtues, which were especially conspicuous during the great plague. Indeed, the general credit of the order in all ages cannot be accounted for on any other supposition, than that, as things then stood, they were, upon the whole, really useful.

Another capital advantage which the Christian world always derived from the monks, and which we enjoy to this day, is the use they were of to literature in general, both on account of the monasteries being the principal repositories of books, and the monks the copiers of them, and because, almost from their first institution, the monks had a greater share of knowledge than the secular clergy. In the seventh century, the little learning there was in Europe was, in a manner, confined to the monasteries, many of the monks being obliged by their rules to devote certain hours every day to study, when the schools which had been committed to the care of the bishops were gone to ruin.1

A very respectable religious fraternity was founded in the fourteenth century, confirmed by the Council of Constance, called the brethren and clerks of common life.2 The schools erected by this fraternity acquired great reputation. From them issued Erasmus of Rotterdam, and other eminent persons.3

The cause of literature has also been much indebted to the Jesuits, and more lately to the Benedictines; the members of both these orders having produced many works of great erudition and labour, and having employed the revenues of their societies to defray the expense of printing them.

As a proof of the monastic orders having contributed something to the Reformation, it may be sufficient to adduce the following facts. The Dominicans and Franciscans soon quarrelled about pre-eminence, and they differed exceedingly amongst themselves; and these differences among the mendicant orders, as well as the division of the popedom, and the mutual excommunication of the popes and antipopes, "gave several mortal blows tothe authority of the Church of Rome, and excited in the minds of the people

Mosheim, H. p. 12. (P.) Cent. vii. Pt. ii.
 Ch. i. Sect. i. ad ivit. See the reference, supre,
 p. 242, and Villers's Essay,
 p. 51.
 2 "Les frères de la vie commune, où des per-

3 Mosheim, III. p. 254. (P.) Cent. xv. Pt. ii.

Ch. ii. Sect. xxii.

Les Heres de la vie commune, où des personnes distinguées par leur savoir, et par leur piété, vivoient en commun de ce qu'elles mettoient ensemble pour ne pas vivre dans la faindantise. On avtribue cet établissement à Gerand, Groot, ou, le Grand, de Deventer, Decteur de Paris, et Chamoine d'Uriecht." Hist. du Concil. Const. An. 1418, H. p. 601.

[most] ardent desires of a reformation in tion. John condemning these refracthe church."1

The Fratricelli, or Fratres Minores. were monks who, in the same thirteenth century, "separated themselves from the grand community of St. Francis," with a view to observe his rule more "They went about clothed strictly. with sordid garments, or rather with loathsome rags," declaiming in all places "against the corruption of the Church of Rome, and the vices of the pontiffs and bishops." These were persecuted with the utmost virulence by the other Franciscans, who were countenanced by the popes, and they continued in this violent state of war with the Church of Rome till the Reformation, multitudes of them perishing in the flames of the Inquisition.2 These rebellious Franciscans, therefore, deserve an eminent rank among those who prepared the way for the Reformation, exciting in the minds of the people a just aversion to the Church of Rome in its then very corrupt state.3

The original difference of these monks with the Pope was perhaps the most trifling and absurd that can well be imagined, viz. the property of the things that were consumed by them, as bread and other provisions; they maintaining that they had not the property, but only the use of them. This dispute was at first confined to the monks themselves, but at length the popes interposed, and John XXII. declaring that obedience is the principal virtue of monks, and preferable to poverty, they asserted the contrary, maintaining that they ought not to obey their superiors when they commanded anything contrary to perfec-

tory monks, they declared him a heretic by his own authority. They even went so far as to call him Antichrist, and to appeal from his constitution to a future council. At length the revolt went so far, that the monks, supported by the emperor Lewis of Bavaria, pronounced sentence of deposition against the Pope, and set up another in his place.4

Since the fifteenth century, in the beginning of which the discipline of the monks was exceedingly relaxed, various reformations have been made, which, Mr. Fleury says, has raised the credit of most of the orders.5 But notwithstanding these reforms, and though nothing is now objected to them with respect to the observance of their rules. they are found to be of so little use in the present state of society, that it seems to be the determination of most of the Catholic powers to abolish them by degrees; as appears by the regulations that have been made respecting the time of admission, making it so late in life, that very few will not be so far engaged in other pursuits, as to have no inducement to become monks or nuns; and the authority of parents, who often found it convenient to dispose of their younger children in this way, is now generally set aside. consequence of this, and other causes, which have been operating more silently ever since the Reformation, the religious houses are in general but thinly Some of their revenues have already been diverted to other uses, and such is the aspect of things at present, and the wants of the several potentates of Europe, that it is justly to be apprehended, that all the rest will soon share the same fate.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Mosheim, III. p. 62. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii.

Ch. ii. Sect. XXX.

<sup>2</sup> By "a bloody decree, beginning 'Gloriosam Ecclesiam.'" Limborch, Hist. I. p. 104.

<sup>3</sup> Mosheim, III. p. 76. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii.

Ch. ii. Sect. xxxix.

<sup>4</sup> Fleury's Eighth Discourse, p. 30. Mosheim, III. p. 74. (P.) Cent. xiii. Pt. ii, Ch. ii. Scot XXXIX. Note.

5 Eighth Discourse, p. 47. (P.)

PART XIII.

THE HISTORY OF CHURCH REVENUES.

THE INTRODUCTION.

In the preceding parts of this work we have taken a view of the changes which, in the course of time, have taken place with respect to the rank and character of Christian ministers; by what steps it came to pass, that, from having no authority whatever, besides what their greater virtue or ability gave them, and especially from having no dominion over the faith of their fellow-christians, the authority of the bishops, with respect to articles of faith, as well as matters of discipline and worship, came to be absolute and despotic; and how, from living in a state of the most submissive subjection to all the temporal powers of the world, and keeping as far as possible from interfering in all civil affairs, they came to be temporal princes and sovereigns themselves, and to control all the temporal princes of Europe, even in the exercise of their civil power. In this part I shall exhibit a similar view of the changes which have taken place with respect to the revenues of the church; and shall show by what steps ministers of the gospel, from living on the alms of Christian societies, together with the poor that belonged to them. came to have independent and even princely incomes, and to engross to themselves a very considerable part of the wealth and even of the landed property of Europe.

SECTION I.

THE HISTORY OF CHURCH REVENUES, TILL THE FALL OF THE WESTERN EMPIRE.

In the constitution of the primitive church, the apostles followed the custom of the Jewish synagogues, the members of which contributed every week what they could spare, and entrusted it with those who distributed alms. Like the Jews, also, the Christians sent alms to distant places, and gave to those who came from a distance with proper recommendations. They were so liberal upon these occasions, that Lucian says, that, to become rich in a short time, a man had nothing to do but to pretend to be a Christian. In those times both alms and stipends were often called honoraries. Thus when Paul bid Timothy honour widows that are widows indeed, he means rewarding them for discharging particular offices, which in those days widows held in churches. So also the phrase worthy of double honour, signifies worthy of a double or a larger reward.

besides these voluntary alms till the time of Constantine. Indeed, before that time, the Christian churches were considered as unlawful assemblies, and therefore could no more acquire property, than the Jewish synagogues, or other communities not authorized by the state; though in the reign of Marcus Aurelius, the senate permitting any person to give whatever he pleased to communities already formed, the church began, in the third century, by toleration or connivance, to possess estates. But under Constantine, Christian churches were considered as respectable societies, and from that time they began to grow rich. In 321 this emperor made an edict, addressed to the people of Rome, by which he gave all persons the liberty of leaving by will to the churches, and especially that of Rome, whatever they pleased.

He also ordained that what had been

The church had no other revenues given to the churches.1

had what was called their patrimony, bably, of some abuse of this discreand that of Rome in the sixth century tionary power, we find afterwards, that had a very great one, not only in Italy, not the bishop alone, but the whole but in other countries; and to inspire body of the presbyters made that a greater respect for these patrimonies, distribution. Still, however, it cannot they were denominated by the saints but be supposed that, the bishops that were most respected in each par-having superior influence, more would ticular church. Thus the territories be in their power in this respect, than belonging to the Church of Rome were in that of the presbyters; and these, called the patrimony of St. Peter. But being subject to the bishops in other these patrimonies were, like other es- things, would not choose to disoblige tates, subject to the laws of the counthem in this. tries in which they were.2

great was the confidence which the the clergy.3 primitive Christians reposed in their These offices of stewards became so bishops, (and with reason, no doubt, at considerable in the church of Constantaken from the churches in the perse- first,) that they alone were allowed to cution of Dioclesian should be restored superintend the distribution of the to them, and that the estates of the common church stock to the inferior martyrs who had no heirs should be clergy, as well as to the poor, accordven to the churches.<sup>1</sup> ing to the merits or occasions of each By this means, in time, all churches individual. But, in consequence, pro-

We do find, however, that when Though the bishops and priests had churches grew very rich, the bishops originally no property of their own, often embezzled the estates belonging but lived upon the stock of the church, to them. This evil grew to so great a Cyprian complains that some of them, height, that at the Council of Gangres, in his time, not content with a subsist- in Paphlagonia, held in 324, they were ence in common, began to live in allowed to give some of the church separate houses of their own, and to stock to their relations, if they were have each their allowance paid in poor, but were prohibited selling the money, daily, monthly, or for a longer estates belonging to their churches, time, and this was soon tolerated. and were ordered to give an account of And, whereas part of the church stock their administration of these tempohad always been given to the poor, the ralities. And that the goods which clergy began to encroach upon this properly belonged to the bishops might part, and to appropriate it almost not be confounded with those that wholly to themselves. That part also belonged to the church, every bishop, which used to be employed in the upon his election, was ordered to give repairs of churches, &c. was inter- an account of his possessions, that he cepted in the same manner. might bequeath them, and nothing All the civil affairs of Christian else, by will. But still the bishops societies were at first managed by abusing the power that was left them, deacons, but the disposal of money, as stewards were afterwards appointed to well as of everything else, was in the take care of the temporalities of the power of the presbyters, by whose church, and the bishops were confined general directions the deacons acted; to the cure of souls. These stewards, and the bishops having encroached however, being at first chosen by the upon the presbyters in other things, bishops, the same abuses were resumed; did not neglect to avail themselves of and therefore, at the Council of Chaltheir authority with respect to the cedon, in 451, the stewards were temporalities of the church. And so appointed to be chosen by the body of tinople, that the emperors themselves inheritances left to his church, giving took the nomination of them, till Isaac them to the lawful heir, and he would Comnenus gave it to the patriarch. never make any purchases for the use The power of the steward was not so of his church.<sup>2</sup> Jerome says that the great in the Western churches, but priests of his time spared no tricks or abuses in them being very flagrant, a artifices to get the estates of private custom was at length adopted, of persons; and he mentions many low dividing the church revenues into four and sordid offices, to which priests and parts, of which one was for the bishop, monks stooped, in order to get the another for the rest of the clergy, the favour and the estates of old men and third for the poor, and the fourth for women, who had no children.2 repairs, or probably a kind of church The disorders of the clergy must penses. independence have never been favour- besides the bishop and other officers.5 able to virtue with the bulk of mankind, or the bulk of any order of men whatever.

&lt;sup>1</sup> Anecdotes, pp. 129, 131. (P.)

■ Ibid. p. 231. (P.)

■ Simon on Church Revenues, pp. 18, 20. (P.)

But those corruptions of the clergy which arose from the riches of the church began to be peculiarly conspicuous, when, after the time of Constan- THE tine, the church came to be possessed of fixed and large revenues. Jerome says, that the church had indeed become more rich and powerful under the Christian emperors, but less virtuous; and Chrysostom says that the bishops forsook their employments to sell their corn and wine, and to look after their glebes and farms, besides spending much time in law-suits. Austin was very sensible of this, and often refused stock, to defray any contingent ex- have been very great in the time of Jerome, since the emperors were then This distribution of the church stock obliged to make many laws to restrain was the cause of great animosities and them. In 370, Valentinian made a contentions between the bishops and law to put a stop to the avarice of the the inferior clergy, in which the popes clergy, forbidding priests and monks were often obliged to interpose with to receive anything, either by gift or their advice and authority; and Father will, from widows, virgins, or any Simon ascribes to it most of the dis-women. Twenty years after, he made orders which arose in the Western another law, to forbid deaconesses to church; the Eastern, where that par- give or bequeath their effects to the tition was never made, being free from clergy, or the monks, or to make the them. For while no division was made, churches their heirs; but Theodosius the idea of the property being in the revoked that edict. We may form whole society continued, and consessome idea of the riches of the Church quently the clergy were considered as of Rome towards the middle of the the servants and beneficiaries of the third century, from this circumstance, society at large. But that partition that in that time, according to Eusemade them absolute masters of their bius, it maintained one thousand five respective shares, and gave them inde- hundred persons, widows, orphans, and pendent property; and riches and poor; and it had then forty-six priests,

1 Simon on Church Revenues, pp. 29. 21. (P.

SECTION II.

HISTORY OF CHURCH REVENUES AFTER THE FALL OF THE WESTERN EMPIRE.

Upon the invasion of the Roman empire by the Norman nations, both the ecclesiastical laws and revenues underwent a great alteration, and upon the whole very favourable to the church, as a political system, though for some

Ibid. p. 17. (P.)
 Ibid. pp. 27, 28. (P.)
 Anecdotes, p. 133, &c. (P.)
 Hist. L. vi. C. xliii. p. 312. (P.)

time, and in some cases, it was un- the rage of conquest was over. In and other property, but distributed property. both as they thought proper, even to transferred to monasteries.

custom of granting estates to ecclesificalty; and it was natural that this astical persons in the same manner, law should affect churchmen as well as and upon the same terms, as they had laymen. This, however, interfered with been granted to laymen, viz. for the the ancient custom of the church. lives of particular bishops or abbots, as For, during the vacancy of a bishopwe find about the year 500, under Pope ric, the profits were usually managed Symmachus, but afterwards to the by the clergy and archdeacons, for the allegiance for them, and rendering the princes first demanded the revenues of same services that the lay lords ren- those estates which they had granted dered for their estates. Hence the term to the church, and afterwards of all benefice came to be applied to church church livings without distinction; and upon condition of military service. third race of their kings, and was pro-

as in Germany, where whole principal- Emperor Henry.2 ities were given to churches and mo- Lewis the Young is the first king of nasteries; whereby bishops became, France who mentions the right of rein all respects, independent sovereign gale, in the year 1161. And we find princes, as they are at this day. This in the History of England, that this was chiefly the effect of the liberality right of regale was established in this of the emperors of the name of Otho. kingdom at the same time that it was Churchmen, both bishops and abbots, in France, and that it occasioned many being at this time principally employed troubles here.3 in all the great affairs of state, it was not difficult for them to obtain what- which had been long in the possession several lives. The property being in The emperor Frederic II. remitted this the church, it was held more sacred, right to the church, as if it had been especially after the entire settlement of the Northern nations in the western part of the Roman empire, and when favourable to the clergy. For these these circumstances a lease for a few savage conquerors made little distinc- lives, on an easy rent, was of more tion between the goods of the church value to individuals than the absolute

The possession of benefices was atlaymen; and children often succeeded tended, however, with one incumbrance. to their fathers in church livings, as from which the church did not very well as in other estates. Also many soon free itself. According to the anestates belonging to churches were cient feudal laws, when a tenant died. the lord enjoyed the revenues till his About this time, however, began the successor was invested, and had sworn churches and monasteries in general; use of the future bishop. But after the ecclesiastics swearing fealty and the general collation of benefices, the livings. For that term was originally this was called regale. This right of applied to estates granted to laymen regale was not settled in France in the In no part of the world were the bably first established upon the agree-clergy so great gainers by this system ment between Pope Calixtus and the

By degrees, however, the estates ever they desired of princes. of the clergy began to be considered as
In those times of confusion, when so much theirs, and the temper of the property in land, and everything else, times was so favourable to the claims was very precarious, many persons of the church, that it was thought chose to make over the property of wrong for laymen to meddle with any their estates to churches and monas- part of it; and many princes were interies, obtaining from them a lease for duced to relinquish the right of regale.

2 Ibid. p. 97. (P.) Ibid. p. 98. (P.)

<sup>1</sup> Simon on Church Revenues, p. 94. (P.)

an usurpation; and several councils being above all canon and positive law. prohibited princes and other laymen from invading the goods and revenues of churchmen after their death.1

Afterwards, however, when the popes usurped the nomination to ecclesia stical benefices, they thought proper to claim what had been the regale, or the value of one year's income, (for to that it had been reduced, as a medium of what had been due to the lord during a vacancy,) and then this perquisite was called annates. This claim is said to have been first made by pope Urban VI.,2 and was paid "not only in England but throughout the western parts of Christendom."3 In this country the annates were transferred to the crown in the reign of Henry VIII., and so they continue to this day, except that small livings were released from this burthen in the reign of queen Anne.

On account of the benefit accruing to the popes from these annates, they encouraged resignations and the changing of livings among the clergy. For upon every event of this nature this tax to themselves became due. Originally resignations were made absolutely, into the hands of those who had a right to dispose of the benefice; and when it appeared that there was no lawful reason for the resignation, it was not admitted. But afterwards resignations were made in favorem, or upon condition that the benefice should go to some person in whose favour it was made, and with whom a contract had been made for that purpose. This custom is so new, that no mention is made of it in the canon law, the Decretals, or the Sext. The new canonists called the contract a simoniacal one, and therefore there is a necessity for the Pope to grant a dispensation for it, he

Nothing derogated more from the right of ordinaries and patrons than these resignations in favorem; for by this means they who possessed benefices disposed of them as of their own inheritance. By this means they even descended in families.4

Another deduction from the value of livings the clergy suffered by the popes claiming the tenth of their value, which was done about the same time that annates were demanded. This they did upon the pretence that the high-priest among the Jews had a tenth of the tythes which were paid to the other priests.5 Another pretence for making this exaction arose from the crusades. The contributions of those who did not serve in person being casual, the popes imposed a tax upon all ecclesiastical revenues, and the first of the kind was on the occasion of the loss of Jerusalem. Afterwards the popes pretended to a right of disposing of all ecclesiastical goods, and sometimes demanded a twentieth, and even a tenth of their revenues, for other purposes besides the crusades. They also made them over to the kings, who by this means shared with the popes in the plunder of the people.6 This tenth the popes obtained occasionally in England, from the time of Edward I., when the demand was first made. In the twenty-sixth of Henry VIII. an act was made to annex these tenths to the crown for ever; but they were given to the poor clergy towards an augmentation of their maintenance by queen Anne, and at the same time all small livings were discharged from paying them.

The holy wars in the eleventh century were the cause of great accessions of wealth to the church. Most of the knights made their wills before their departure, and never failed to leave a

p. 178.

6 Fleury's Sixth Discourse, p. 19. (P.)

<sup>1</sup> Simon on Church Revenues, p. 100. (P.)
2 "Of this godly gentleman's invention, as some authors report, were the payments to the Pope called annates, ... which ... are no other than primities, the first-fruits or profits of every spiritual living for one year, to be paid by the purson that is invested in it, at his first entrance thereupon." Hist. of Popery, 1736, II. p. 177.

Hist. of Popery, IV. p. 37. (P.) 1736, II. p. 178.

<sup>4</sup> Simon on Church Revenues, p. 239. (P.) 5 "The Pope, as pastor pastorum, claimed decimas decimarum, — by example of the Jewish High-Priest." Hist. of Popery, 1736, II.

giving for their preservation; so that selves by the law of Moses. whether they returned or not, the

the nature of it the most impolitic in various respects, and the most burthenis a great discouragement to the imthe clear produce, without any deducwhatever. It would be far better to lay whereas the present mode of taxation is a discouragement to it. Besides, continual source of dispute between the people consider as enemies those whom repose the greatest confidence.

of tythes was the most groundless imaginable, as it arose from considering Christian ministers as an order of men priests under the Jewish law. This long time before there was any idea of the public funds. claiming those tythes as a right. Even were paid by themselves after the dethere arose a custom, as some say, of to churches and monasteries, "souls paying tythes to the church, which in considerable share of their possessions time became general; till from the force to the church; and they built churches of example, the omission of it was and monasteries with ample endow- deemed reproachful, and the clergy ments at their return, by way of thanks- began to claim them as due to them-

For some centuries, however, it was church generally received some per- usual to give tythes to the poor, and manent advantage from the expedition. for other charitable purposes. Thus, One of the most valuable acquisitions at a council of Macon, in 586, it was to the revenues of the church, but from ordered that a tenth part of the fruits the nature of it the most impolitic in of the earth should be brought into sacred places, to be employed for the some to the state, is that of tythes. It relief of the poor, and the redemption is a great discouragement to the im- of captives. By degrees, however, the provement of land, that a tenth part of clergy excluded the poor, and appropriated the tythes to themselves. And tion for the advanced expense of raising about the year 600, tythes, from being that produce, should go from the culti- established as a custom, became in vator of the land to any other person some instances legal rights; because many estates were bequeathed with an an equivalent tax upon all estates, cul- obligation to pay tythes to particular tivated or not cultivated. For then it churches. When these tythes were left would operate as a motive to industry; to distant churches, the priests of the parish in which the estate lay used to complain; and at length, in the reign this method of paying the minister is a of King John, the Pope made a law, ordering that all tythes should be paid clergy and the parishioners, which is of to the parish priest, and after some a most pernicious nature; making the time they were levied by law in all parishes without exception. At the they ought to respect as their best Reformation, though those who took friends, and in whom they ought to the lead in it were sincerely disposed to abolish tythes, they found themselves The original reason for the payment obliged to continue, and to secure them by act of parliament, in order to conciliate the minds of the popish clergy. Thus this most intolerable evil conwho succeeded to the rights of the tinues to this day, whereas in other Protestant countries, and especially in idea was observed to prevail very much Holland, the civil magistrates have about the time of the utter desolation adopted a wiser plan, by allowing their of Judea under Adrian. But it was a ministers a fixed stipend, paid out of

The progress of superstition in the the Jews acknowledge that no tythes dark ages supplied many resources for the augmentation of the wealth of the struction of the temple. But about clergy. In those times "the world was the fifth century laws being made by made to believe that by the virtue of so the emperor, by which the tenth part many masses," the recitation of which of the mines and quarries were paid to might be purchased with money, and themselves, and the lords of the soil; especially with permanent endowments were redeemed out of purgatory; and scenes of visions and apparitions, sometimes of the tormented, and sometimes of the delivered souls, were published Which had so wonderful in all places. an effect, that in two or three centuries endowments increased to so vast a degree, that if the scandals of the clergy on the one hand, and the statutes of mortmain on the other, had not restrained the profuseness that the world was wrought up to, upon this account, it is not easy to imagine how far this might have gone, perhaps to an entire subjecting of the temporality to the spirituality." 1 And it was carefully inculcated by the priests, that rights nues of many churches, numbers of acquired to the church belonged to suffer more from papal usurpations than almost any other part of Christendom. One tax to the Church of Rome was peculiar to this country. which was Peter pence,2 or a tax of a penny a year for every house in which there were eighty pennyworth of goods. This was "first granted, in the year 725, by Ina, king of the West Saxons, for the establishment and support of an English college at Rome." It was "afterwards extended, in the year 794, by Offa, over all Mercia and East Anglia;" and in the days of Athelwolf, though the popes appropriated the profits of this tax to themselves, it was extended over all England. "It was confirmed by the laws of Canute, Edward the Confessor, William the Conqueror." and of several succeeding princes, though it was long considered as a free alms on the part of the nation, and was often refused to be paid, especially by Edward III. However, it "was never totally abolished till the reign of Henry VIII."3

1 Sueur. (P.)

away without sacrilege.

So far did the popish exactions in this country, on one account or other, go, that, in the reign of Henry III., the popes received from England more than the king's revenue, or one hundred and twenty thousand pounds. In 1366, the lord chancellor assured the parliament, that the taxes paid to the Pope were five times as much as the king's revenue; and at length the church is said to have got possession of one third of all the landed property in England.4

Notwithstanding the ample revethe clergy contrived to make large God, and therefore could not be taken additions to them, by appropriating to themselves the emoluments of seve-It was the fate of this country to ral church livings; though they could not reside, and do duty at them all, and nothing could be more contrary to the natural reason of things, or the original constitution of the Christian church. Indeed, the maxim that. where no duty is done, no reward is due, was so obvious, that this was one of the last abuses that crept into the church. But it grew, under various pretences, to a most enormous height: though several attempts were made, at different times, to lessen the evil.

> About the year 500, when what we now call benefices, came into use, it became customary to ordain without any title, or designation to a particular cure; and many persons got themselves ordained priests, for secular purposes. Also many prelates wanted to increase their authority by attaching to themselves a number of dependents, and many of the people wanted spiritual privileges, in order to exempt them from the jurisdiction of princes. Even bishops (though this was done with more caution) were ordained without any diocese, except in infidel countries, which they never visited; and

Burnet, Exposition, p. 280. (P.) Art. xxii.

&quot;Burnet, Exposition, p. 280. (P.) Art. xxii. Ed. 4, p. 206.

2 "Denarii sancti Petri" . . . . in the Saxon . . . . tongue Romefech: the fee (or rent) of Rome . . . . to be paid yearly on fammas-day, celebrated . . . as a festival by the title of Sancti retrivincula, Peter's bonds "Hist. of Popery, 1735, I. pp. 168, 169. See also Romescot, Rapin, Hist. L. iii. I. p. 182.

<sup>Mosheim, H. p. 278. (P.) Cent. xi. Pt. if.
Ch. ii. Sect. x. Note (e). See also Rapin's Hist.
An. 794, L. iii. I. pp 182, 183.
Hist. of Popery, III. pp. 60, 570. V. p. 266.
(P.) 1736, H. pp. 53, 180, 397, 413.</sup> bishops who were too lazy, or too much employed in secular affairs, to do duty themselves. This corruption had arisen to a most enormous height before the Council of Trent.

The consequence of titular ordination was non-residence, and where curates were employed the principal could follow his other business. Accordingly the bishops in France, and even the parish priests, substituting some poor priests in their room, passed much of their time at court. And if a bishop could hold one living without residing upon it, it was plain that he might hold two or more, and get them supplied in the same manner. Titular ordinations, however, which first introduced non-residence, were not the only cause of pluralities, which are said to have had their origin about the sixth century. Among benefices bestowed upon the churches, some, as prebends, &c., had no cure of souls annexed to them. These were judged had other livings with cure of souls. Also parishes which were not able to maintain a minister were allowed to neighbourhood, but a dispensation from the Pope was necessary for this purpose. By this means, however, the greatest scandal in pluralities was offence, but dispensations of this kind were so necessary to support the dignity of cardinals, that they were made perpetual in the court of Rome. The cardinal of Lorrain, who held some of the best benefices in France, and some in Scotland too, was particularly vehement in his declamation against pluralities in general, at the Council of Trent, without imagining that his own were liable to any objection.

The first account of any flagrant abuse of pluralities occurs in the year 936, when Manasseh, bishop of Arles, obtained of his relation, Hugh, king that in all he had four or five at these acted as substitutes for those the same time. Baronius says, that this was a new and great evil, which began to stain the church of God, and by which it has been wonderfully

A person is said to hold a church in commendam, when he is empowered to have the care and the profits of it till the appointment of another incumbent. This practice was of great antiquity, in order to prevent churches receiving any detriment during a vacancy. But on this pretence livings were afterwards granted for a certain time, which was made longer and longer, or till an event which it was known could not take place, and at length for life. This was done by the plenary power of the Pope. In this manner Clement VII. brought pluralities to perfection, by making his nephew, the Cardinal de Medicis, commendatory universal; granting him all the vacant benefices in the world, whether secular or regular, dignities, parsonages, simple, or with cure of capable of being held by priests who souls, for six months, and appointing him usufructuary from the first day of his possession. In England, in which every abuse and imposition be served by another minister in the in ecclesiastical matters were carried to their greatest extent, the richest and best benefices were engrossed by the Pope, and given in commendam to Italians, who never visited the country, practised. This abuse gave very great but employed questors to collect their revenues.

> Other methods of making pluralities, and disposing of church revenues, were contrived by the court of Rome, such as provisions and exemptions, which are hardly worth describing, and selling the reversions of livings, called expectatives, as well as livings actually vacant.

The first attempt that we meet with to check these evils, of pluralities and non-residence, was made by Charlemagne, who made several regulations for that purpose; but they were soon neglected. Several popes also, as John XXII. and Clement V., pretended to of Italy, several other bishoprics, so reform the same abuses, but without any real effect; and by the evasion It is to be lamented that these abuses of them even illiterate persons and were not corrected at the reformation children, who were never intended to of the Church of England. On the take orders, might enjoy benefices. contrary, it is apprehended that many The Council of Trent pretended to of them are increased since that period, remedy the evil of pluralities, but they so as to exceed what is generally to be made it worse by admitting of pensions, found of that nature in some Roman as an equivalent for the change of Catholic countries. In consequence of benefices and other purposes. For this, though the funds for the mainthese came to be granted by the court tenance of the clergy are sufficiently of Rome without any consideration, ample, the inequality in the distribuand even to children. They were also tion of them is shameful, and they more convenient, and made church pre- bear no proportion to the services or ferment a more easy traffic in many merit of those who receive them. This respects. For instance, resignations is an evil that calls loudly for redress, were not deemed valid, unless the per- and strikes many persons who give no son who resigned lived twenty days attention to articles of faith, or of disafterwards; whereas a pension might cipline in other respects. Probably, be transferred at the point of death. however, this evil will be tolerated, till Besides it might be turned into ready the whole system be reformed, or demoney, whereas a benefice could not stroyed. But without the serious reformation of this and other crying abuses, the utter destruction of the Pennington on Pluralities, p. 58. (P.)

1 Sueur, A. D. 936. (P.)

without simony.2

2 F. Faul on Ecclesiastical Benefices, 1736, Ed. 3, pp. 223, 224. (P.)

abuses, the utter destruction of the present hierarchy must, in the natural course of things, be expected.

THE GENERAL CONCLUSION.

PART I.

CONTAINING

CONSIDERATIONS ADDRESSED TO UNBELIEVERS, AND ESPECIALLY TO MR. GIBBON.

called a system) of Christianity à he wrought many miracles, and after a outline of it is, that the Universal to his religion should be admitted by tice of virtue, by the assurance of his memoration of his death. mercy to the penitent, and of his pur- Here is nothing that any person pose to raise to immortal life and hap- could imagine would lead to much piness all the virtuous and the good, subtle speculation at least such as could but to inflict an adequate punishment excite much animosity. The doctrine

To consider the system (if it may be on the wicked. In proof of this priori, one would think it very little public execution he rose again from the liable to corruption, or abuse. The great dead. He also directed that proselytes Parent of mankind commissioned Jesus baptism, and that his disciples should Christ to invite men to the prac- eat bread and drink wine in com-the doctrine which they taught, and even subversive of it.

succeeding corruptions did then exist; them, with a long train of other absurd and accordingly, without anything more opinions and superstitious practices. than their natural operation, all the its primitive beauty and glory. .

braced Christianity, they mixed their body. former tenets and prejudices with it. As to the abuses in the government reproach.

The opinion of the mental faculties laity in this respect.

itself is so plain, that one would think before his incarnation. On this printhe learned and the unlearned were ciple went the Gnostics, deriving their upon a level with respect to it. And doctrine from the received oriental phia person unacquainted with the state lophy. Afterwards the philosophizing of things at the time of its promulga- Christians went upon another principle. tion would look in vain for any pro- porsonifying the wisdom or hoyos of God bable source of the monstrous corrup- the Father. But this was mere Plations and abuses which crept into the tonism, and therefore cannot be said to system afterwards. Our Lord, how- have been unnatural in their circumever, and his apostles, foretold, that stances, though at length they came. there would be a great departure from in the natural progress of things, to the truth, and that something would believe that Christ was, in power and arise in the church altogether unlike glory, equal to God the Father himself.

From the same opinion of the soul distinct from the body came the practice of In reality, however, the causes of the praying, first for the dead, and then to

The abuses of the positive instituabuses rose to their full height; and tions of Christianity, monstrous as what is more wonderful still, by the they were, naturally arose from the operation of natural causes also, with- opinion of the purifying and sanctifyout any miraculous interposition of ing virtue of rites and ceremonies, which Providence, we see the abuses gradually was the very basis of all the worship of corrected, and Christianity recovering the Heathens: and they were also similar to the abuses of the Jewish religion. The causes of the corruptions were We likewise see the rudiments of all almost wholly contained in the esta- the monkish austerities in the opinions blished opinions of the heathen world, and practices of the Heathens, who and especially the philosophical part of thought to purify and exalt the soul it; so that when those Heathens em- by macerating and mortifying the

Also, both Jews and Heathens were so of the church, they are as easily acmuch scandalized at the idea of being counted for as abuses in civil go-the disciples of a man who had been vernment; worldly-minded men being crucified as a common malefactor, that always ready to lay hold of every Christians in general were sufficiently opportunity of increasing their power; disposed to adopt any opinion that and in the dark ages too many circumwould most effectually wipe away this stances concurred to give the Christian clergy peculiar advantages over the of man belonging to a substance dis- Upon the whole, I flatter myself that, tinct from his body, or brain, and of to an attentive reader of this work, it this invisible spiritual part, or soul, will appear, that the corruption of being capable of subsisting before and Christianity, in every article of faith or after its union to the body, which had practice, was the natural consequence taken the deepest root in all the schools of the circumstances in which it was of philosophy, was wonderfully calcu- promulgated; and also that its recovery lated to answer this purpose. For by from these corruptions is the natural this means Christians were enabled to consequence of different circumstances. give to the soul of Christ what rank Let unbelievers, if they can, account as they pleased in the heavenly regions well for the first rise and establishment blem which historians and philosophers then have adopted without objection, (bound to believe that no effect is pro- what they were afterwards so prone to duced without an adequate cause) will abandon for the rites of any of their find to be of more difficult solution the neighbours; or, that when, by severe more closely it is attended to.

The circumstances that Mr. Gibbon tachment to it which they are after-enumerates as the immediate causes of wards known to have done, and which the spread of Christianity were them-continues to this day, it be probable selves effects, and necessarily required they would have invented or have such causes as, I imagine, he would adopted another, which they conceived be unwilling to allow. The revolution to be so different from, and subversive produced by Christianity in the opinions of their own. If they had been so and conduct of men, as he himself de-fertile of invention, it might have been scribes it, was truly astonishing; and expected that they would have struck this, he cannot deny, was produced out some other since the time of Christ, without the concurrence, nay, notwith- a period of near two thousand years. standing the opposition, of all the civil On this subject Mr. Gibbon says, powers of the world; and what is per- that "in contradiction to every known haps more, it was opposed by all the principle of the human mind, that learning, genius, and wit of the age too. singular people seems to have yielded For Christianity was assailed as much a stronger and more ready assent to by ridicule and reproach as it was by the traditions of their remote ancesopen persecution; and, be the spread tors, than to the evidence of their own of it what Mr. Gibbon pleases, he can-senses." A singular people, indeed, not deny that it kept uniformly gain- if this was the case; for then they ing ground, taking in all descriptions must not have been men, but beings in of men without distinction, before it the shape of men only, though interhad any foreign aid; and what then nally constituted in some very difremained of the old religions was not ferent manner. But what facts in sufficient to occasion any sensible ob- history may not be represented as struction to the full establishment of probable or improbable, on such loose it. The Jewish religion alone was an suppositions as these? Such liberties exception; and this circumstance, to- as these I shall neither take nor grant. gether with the rise of Christianity Jews are men, and men are beings, Mr. Gibbon's particular attention. ject to as strict rules as those of the them, should receive a religion from influence men.

vented a religion so essentially differevents. We never talk of the trarent from any other in the world, as that which is described in the books of History, Ch. xv. I. p. 539. (P.)

of Christianity itself. This is a pro- Moses; that the whole nation should discipline, they had acquired the at-

among the Jews, are facts that deserve whose affections and actions are sub-Of all mankind, the Jews were the animate or inanimate parts of nature. most unlikely to set up any religion, Their conduct, therefore, must be acso different from their own; and as counted for on such principles as unlikely was it that other nations, and always have influenced the conduct of especially the polite and learned among men, and such as we observe still to

Jews, and those some of the most igno- I wish Mr. Gibbon would consider rant of that despised nation. whether he does not, in the passage Let Mr. Gibbon recollect his own above quoted, use the word tradition idea of the Jews, which seems to be in an improper manner. By tradition much the same with that of Voltaire, we generally mean something for and think whether it be at all probable, which we have not the evidence of that they should have originally in- histories written at the time of the dition of the wars of Julius Cæsar, or as Mr. Gibbon says, is the very reverse of his death in the senate house, nor of the truth. He could not himself of Alexander the Great; because there were histories of those events written at the time, or so near to the time, as to be fully within the memory of those who were witnesses of them.

Now Moses, and the other writers of the Old Testament, were as much present at the time of the transactions they relate, as the historians of Julius Cæsar or Alexander. An incautious reader (and there are too many such) would be apt to imagine from Mr. Gibbon's manner of expressing himself, that the Jews did not even pretend to have written histories of the same age with the origin of their religion, but that it was in the same predicament with what he calls "the elegant mythology of Greece and Rome;" wherewas committed to writing at the time. It is generally in such an indirect stition."2 manner as this, and not by a fair and candid representation of facts, that unbelievers endeavour to discredit the system of revelation.

Let Mr. Gibbon, as an historian, compare the rise and progress of Maof Christianity, and attend to the difsword, which Christianity certainly revelations. If these had not been firmly believed in the time of Mahomet, what credit would his religion have gained? In these circumstances. he must have invented some other darkness and credulity. That Christianity grew up in silence and obscurity, even of the tradition of the conquests imagine circumstances in which the principal facts on which Christianity is founded should be subject to a more rigid scrutiny. These things, as Paul said to king Agrippa, were not done in a corner. Acts xxvi. 26.

> It appears to me that, admitting all the miraculous events which the evangelical history asserts, it was not probable that Christianity should have been received with less difficulty than it was; but without that assistance, absolutely impossible for it to have been received at all.

Mr. Gibbon represents the discredit into which the old religions were fallen. as having made way for the new one. "So urgent," says he, "on the vulgar is the necessity of believing, that the fall of any system of mythology will as the fact is, that every tittle of it most probably be succeeded by the introduction of some other mode of super-

But are not the vulgar, men, as well as the learned, their understandings being naturally as good and as various, and certainly subject to the same laws; and necessity of believing or proneness to belief, is not greater in the one than hometanism with that of Judaism or in the other; but the expression is loose and inaccurate, and calculated to ference. Besides the influence of the impose on superficial readers. Besides. if any set of men had this property of had not, Mahometanism stood on the proneness to believe, they must, to be basis of the Jewish and Christian all of a piece, have a proportionable unwillingness to quit their belief, at least without very sufficient evidence; and yet those vulgar of all nations are supposed by Mr. Gibbon to have abandoned the belief of their own mythosystem, which would have required logy, some time before Christianity visible miracles of its own, which he came, to supply the vacancy. Such might have found some difficulty in vulgar as those I should think entitled passing upon his followers; though to the more respectable appellation of they were in circumstances far more free-thinkers, which with many is easy to be imposed upon than the Jews synonymous to philosophers. And, in or the Heathens, in the time of our fact, it was not with the vulgar, but Saviour. This was an age of light with the philosophers, that the reliand of suspicion; the other, if any, of gions of Greece and Rome were fallen account, seem disposed to adopt any it on somewhat less evidence.

&lt;sup>1</sup> History, Ch. xv. I. p. 535. <sup>2</sup> Ibid. p. 602. (P<sub>1</sub>)

have been accepted by great numbers corresponding to those facts. of every religion, of every rank, and of every province in the Roman em- Mr. Gibbon's own language, adopt the

pire." 1

Christianity, that the views it exhibits unless its tenets appeared to him to be of a future state appeared more rational reasonable? What would Mr. Gibbon and more inviting, than the accounts take to believe the doctrine of the Triof Tartarus and the Elysian shades. nity, or what would be sacrifice in this But besides appearing more inviting, life for the most magnificent promise they must also have appeared more in a future one, made by a person eredible, from the general external evi- whose ability to make good that prodence of the truth of Christianity. And here also Mr. Gibbon seems to doctrine of the immortality of the soul have been inattentive to the principles was sufficiently flattering; but whom

In general, the more extraordinary any event appears to be, the more evidence we require of it. It is this con-

into discredit. We ought, therefore, sideration that makes more definite to judge of their case by that of the evidence necessary for a miracle, than philosophical part of the world at pre- for an ordinary fact; though it is acknowledged that the desirableness With many of them Christianity is of any particular event, by interesting now rejected; but do they, on that our wishes, will tend to make us admit other mode of religion, or any other great advantages, therefore, proposed system of mythology in its place? And to men from any scheme, especially would not such men as Mr. Hume or one in which they were to run some Helvetius among the dead, and Mr. risk, and in which they were to make Gibbon himself among the living, ex- great sacrifices, would not dispose them amine with scrupulous exactness the to receive it without evidence. It is pretensions of any system of divine too good news to be true, is a remark revelation, especially before he would perpetually made by the very vulgar regulate his life by it, and go to the of whom Mr. Gibbon is speaking. stake for it? And yet philosophers of When the disciples of our Lord saw antiquity, men of as good understand- him for the first time after his resuring as Mr. Gibbon, and who, no doubt, rection, it is said (Luke xxiv. 41), that loved life, and the pleasures and ad- they believed not through joy; and vantages of it, as much as he does, when, before this, they were told by embraced Christianity, and died for it. three or four women of character, and But besides the urgency of this ne- for whom they had the highest respect, cessity of believing, another cause of that they had themselves seen him the rapid spread of Christianity was, alive, and had a message from him to alive, and had a message from him to. that it held out to mankind something them, Their words seemed to them as worth believing. "When the promise idle tales, and they believed them not. of eternal happiness," he says, "was Ibid. ver. 11. This was perfectly naproposed to mankind, on condition of tural; and such circumstances as adopting the faith, and observing the these are strong internal evidence of precepts of the gospel, it is no wonder the historian's describing real facts, that so advantageous an offer should and real feelings of the human heart

Besides, how can any man, to use faith of the gospel, whatever promises Now it is certainly no discredit to might be made to him for so doing, mise he at all suspected? Plato's was it ever known to influence, like the Christian doctrine of a resurrection? The plain reason was, that the latter was proposed with sufficient evidence. whereas the former was altogether destitute of it.

very differently Mr. Gibbon represents the state of the heathen world with respect to Christianity, when he would insinuate an apology for the persecution of the Christians. "It might be expected," he says, "that they would unite with indignation against any sect or people, which should separate itself from the communion of mankind, and, claiming the exclusive possession of divine knowledge, should disdain every form of worship except its own, as impious and idolatrous."1 Mr. Gibbon, I suppose, never asked himself whether it was natural for the same kind of people to be so very differently affected towards the same thing. But, unfortunately, his purpose required that, to account for the ready reception of Christianity upon insufficient evidence, some of those Heathens must be furnished with an urgent necessity of believing any new religion that was proposed to them, especially one that promised such great the difficulty and uncertainty of such and glorious things as Christianity did; while, on the other hand, to acposition to hate and detest those who pretended to so much. I do not know anything that can help Mr. Gibbon in this case better than the known principles of his favourite mythology. As the present race of mankind are derived from the stones which Deucalion and Pyrrha threw over their heads, (when perhaps they were in too much haste to repeople the vacant world,) they might not be sufficiently attentive to the nature of those materials of the future race of mortals, but take stones of different degrees of hardness. In consequence of this, some of them may have been of a softer disposition, and more easy of belief than others. Being, therefore, so differently constituted, the descendants of some of them might

It is amusing enough to observe how be instinctive believers, and others instinctive persecutors of those believers. They would then be, of course, as hostile to each other as those men who sprung out of the earth, from the sowing of the serpent's teeth, in the elegant mythology of Greece, as the story is most elegantly related by Ovid.2

Besides these considerations, Mr. Gibbon mentions the zeal of the primitive Christians, and the strictness of their discipline, as causes of the spread of the new religion. should have told us whence came that zeal, and that strictness of discipline. If no sufficient cause of it had appeared, their zeal would have exposed them to contempt; and their discipline would have discouraged, rather than have invited proselytes.

Any person may hold himself excused from investigating the causes that gave birth to the opinions of individuals of mankind, on account of an investigation. The same may, in some degree, be said of particular count also for the very ill reception classes of men. But Christianity rethat the preachers of Christianity met commended itself to every description with, (which he cannot deny,) others of men then existing, and influenced of them must be furnished with a dis- them not for a short time only, which might be accounted for from temporary and local circumstances, but permanently; so as to leave no reasonable doubt, but that it would have gone on to establish itself in the world, and to extirpate idolatry, if the civil powers had continued to oppose its progress three thousand, as they did three hundred years; and what is more, notwithstanding the gross corruptions and abuses which soon crept into it.

A fact of this kind requires to be

<sup>2</sup> I have heard of a young gentleman of a sceptical and jocular turn, taking off his hat to a statue of Jupiter, (who makes the most respectable figure in this system of mythology,) and saying, "If ever you come into power again, please to remember that I showed you respect when nobody else did." Mr. Gibbon, I hope, has no serious views in complimenting the religion of Greece and Rome, meaning to pay his court to the powers that may be, as others do to those that are. (P.) to those that are. (P.)

<sup>1</sup> History, Ch. xv. I. p. 622.

plainest and most cogent causes of stand upon as good ground as that of assent, deserve to be attended to any other history whatever. This assent to the truth of Christianity motive to pay any regard to them, some degree of attention to a subject could not refuse their assent to them; which cannot be denied to be, in the that is, it was such evidence as we highest degree, interesting. ourselves must have been determined to be so.

selves possible, must be allowed, so of nature, viz. the production of hap- porting prospect. piness. We have nothing, therefore, to do but to examine, by the known such a prospect, and really to wish to rules of estimating the value of testi- see no more of the wonders of nature, accounted for from the most obvious mony, whether there be reason to think principles of human nature, principles that such miracles have been wrought, common to all men, and all classes of orwhether the evidence of Christianity, men; and therefore none but the or of the Christian history, does not

Now, though I am far from holding could only be produced by such evidence as always will, and always tianity, against all the world, I own I ought to determine the assent of the shall have no objection to discuss this subject with Mr. Gibbon, as an his-It is acknowledged that, to be a torian and a philosopher. We are Christian, a man must believe some only two individuals, and no other facts that are of an extraordinary persons can be bound by the result of nature, such as we have no opportu- our discussion. But those who have nity of observing at present. But given less attention to the subject than those facts were so circumstanced, we have done, may be instructed by it, that persons who cannot be denied to and be assisted in forming their own have had the best opportunity of exjudgment, according to the evidence amining the evidence of them, and that shall be laid before them. At who, if they had not been true, had no least, it may be a means of drawing

Indeed, if any man can say that it is by, if we had been in their place; and not an interesting question, whether therefore, if not fully equivalent to the his existence terminate at death, or is evidence of our own senses at present, to be resumed at a future period, and is, at least, all the evidence that, at then to continue for ever, he must be at this distance of time, we can have of a low and abject mind. To a rain the case. It goes upon the prin- tional being, capable of contemplating ciple that human nature was the same the wonders of nature, and of investhing then that it is now; and cer- tigating the laws of it, and to a being tainly in all other respects it appears of a social disposition, his existence, and the continuance of his rational That miracles are things in them- faculties, must be an object of unspeakable value to him; and consequently long as it is evident that there is in he must ardently wish that Chris-nature a power equal to the working tianity (which alone brings life and of them. And certainly the power, immortality to light) may be true. principle, or being, by whatever name it be denominated, which produced the universe, and established the laws of it, is fully equal to any occasional desisting and acting when the body is in partures from them. The object and the grave, will never give any satisuse of those miracles on which the faction. To every person, therefore, Christian religion is founded, is also who is capable of enjoying his existmaintained to be consonant to the ence, the Christian doctrine of a resurobject and use of the general system rection opens a glorious and trans-and of the progress of being, and especially of the human race, towards perfection, but to hide one's head in everlasting obscurity, must be to have a disposition as grovelling, base, and abject, as that of the lowest of the brute creation. A man of the least elevation of mind, and of a cultivated and improved understanding, must, surely, lament such a catastrophe.

Voluntarily to shut one's eyes on

The fear might be, that every truly sensible and virtuous man would be too strongly biassed in favour of Christianity, and (if Mr. Gibbon's observation abovementioned betrue) give his assent long before he had waited to weigh the evidence as he ought to do. I do not, however, wish Mr. Gibbon to show this disposition. On the contrary, I wish him to examine everything with the greatest rigour, and I will not contend with him for trifles. With respect to some points which he has laboured, though I am satisfied his representations are partial and unfair, I have no objection to concede almost all that he contends for, because, though he has taken very liberally, he has left me enough.

When the circumstances of the Jews and Heathens, at the time of the promulgation of Christianity, shall be sufficiently considered, (but to which it is evident Mr. Gibbon has given but a slight attention,) the reception that this new religion met with among them, and the total subversion of the several systems of Paganism by it, will be found to be a more extraordinary thing, on the supposition of the gospel history not being true, more contrary to the present course of nature, and consequently more improbable, than the history of Christ and the apostles, as contained in the New Testament, which makes the whole of the subsequent history perfectly easy and natural. In short, the question is, whether Mr. Gibbon, or myself, believe in more numerous, more extraordinary, or more useless miracles. On this fair, unexceptionable ground I am willing to meet him.

I also shall not contend with him for quite so much as his late antagonists, members of the Church of England, must include in the system of Christianity. But by abandoning their outworks, I may perhaps be better able to make an effectual defence.

My religion does not suppose, with Bishop Hurd, "that the offices in which the Godhead was employed are either degrading, or such as imply an immoderate and inconceivable condescension." I shall not urge Mr. Gibbon to admit, (as "the great things of which Christ spake,") "that a divine person, divine in the highest sense of the word, should descend from heaven and ... suffer death,"2 or that "the divine nature condescended to leave the mansions of glory, was made man, dwelled among us, and died for us." "

I shall not pretend, with the same learned bishop, that "a third divine person ministered...in giving "this second divine person "the power to cast out devils," and "in raising him from the dead." Neither shall I urge him with "a purpose...to save and sanctify" mankind "by such means as" he himself can think "fanciful and delusive,"5 or maintain that Christ, "in virtue of his all-atoning death," did "open the gates of eternal life to the whole race of mortal man,"6 which the bishop enumerates among "the great things of which Christ spake," and "the amazing topics with which he filled his discourses."7

See Bishop Hurd's Sermons, III. p. 34. (P.) Strictly speaking, this representation is not the supposal of Bishop H., but what he attributes, p. 32, to "the pride of reason;" though it may be more justly charged to the absurdity of systematical systematics. matic theology.

2 Ibid. p. 63.

3 That the divine nature of Christ should die, is, surely, more than Dr. Hurd's Christian creed obliges him to assert, unless he may think that without this, his doctrine of atonement could not be completed. (P.) Dr. Priestley has not given his authority for the passage here noticed; nor can I find the words in Bishop Hurd's nor can I and the words in Bishop Hurds Sermons, though the substance of them frequently occurs.

Bishop Hurd's Sermons, II. p. 337. (P.)
Bibid. III. p. 33. (P.)
Bibid. p. 63. (P.)
Bibid. pp. 63, 64. (P.) A common reader might peruse our Lord's discourses many times doctrines as these should make a part. They are things that no miracles can him the belief of Mahomet's journey to the third heavens, and all his conversations with God while a pitcher of ing to any man as this is. water was falling, or the doctrine of transubstantiation, neither of which are more absurd, and both of them are much more innocent.

I am sorry, however, to have occasion to admonish Mr. Gibbon, that he should have distinguished better than he has done between Christianity itself and the corruptions of it. A serious Christian, strongly attached to some particular tenets, may be excused if, in reading ecclesiastical history, he should not make the proper distinctions; but this allowance cannot be made for so cool and philosophical a spectator as Mr. Gibbon.

He should not have taken it for granted, that the doctrine of three persons in one God, or the doctrine of atonement for the sins of all mankind, by the death of one man, were any parts of the Christian system; when, if he had read the New Testament for himself, he must have seen the doctrine of the proper unity of God, and also before he found any such topics as these, with before he found any such topics as these, with which they are here said to be filled. But I the less wonder at this when I find this writer attempting to prove at large, that by weaking the disciples' feet, our Lord meant to teach the great doctrine of atonement by his blood and wondering (I. p. 188, note), that Grotius and other commentators should not see it in the same light. Sermons, I. pp. 177, &c.

But I own I am surprised that he should maintain, III. p. 67, that Christ "spake by virtue of his own essential right, from himself, and in his own name," as well as "by the special appointment of God the Father," when he himself, in the most unequivocal language, repeatedly asserts the contrary; as John v. 30: "I can of mine own self do nothing." vii. 16: "My doctrine is not mine, but his that sent me." xiv. 10: "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me, he doeth the works." It must be strong bias in favour of a system that can make a person overlook such toxts as these. But even the greatest and best of men have been misled in the same and best of men have been misled in the same way. (P.)

I am sensible that it would be in that of his free mercy to the penitent, vain to urge any external historical in almost every page of it. As he does evidence of a revelation, of which such speak of the corruptions of Christianity, he should have examined farther, both as an historian and as a man. For as prove. As soon should I propose to an individual, he is as much interested in the inquiry as any other person; and no inquiry whatever is so interest-

As to what Mr. Gibbon, with a sneer of triumph, says, of Plato having "360 years before Christ" "ventured to explore the mysterious nature of the Deity," and of "the theology of Plato" having been "confirmed by the celestial pen of the last and most sublime of the evangelists," ninety-seven years after that era; like all his other sarcasms against Christianity, it is founded on ignorance. But he is more excusable in this than in other cases, as too many Christians have been chargeable with the same; confounding the Logos of Plato with that of John, and making of it a second person in the Trinity, than which no two things can be more different, as has been clearly explained by my excellent and judicious friend Mr. Lindsey, especially in his Catechist, in the preface to which he has very properly animadverted upon this passage of Mr. Gibbon.2

Mr. Gibbon has much to learn concerning the gospel before he can be properly qualified to write against it. Hitherto he seems to have been acquainted with nothing but the corrupt establishments of what is very improperly called Christianity; whereas it is incumbent upon him to read and study the New Testament for himself. There he will find nothing like Platonism, but doctrines in every respect the reverse of that system of philosophy, which weak and undistinguishing Christians afterwards incorporated with it.

Had Mr. Gibbon lived in France, Spain or Italy, he might, with the same reason, have ranked the doctrine of transubstantiation, and the worship

History, Ch. xxi. II. pp. 237, 240.
 Sce Pref. Ed. 1818, pp. xix.-xxiv.

of saints and angels, among the essentials of Christianity, as the doctrines of the Trinity and of atonement.

add of rational Christianity, have not, however, on the whole, much reason to regret that their enemies have not made these distinctions; since, by this means, we have been taught to make them ourselves: so that Christianity is perhaps as much indebted to its enemies, as to its friends, for this important service. In their indiscriminate attacks, whatever has been found to be untenable has been gradually abandoned, and I hope the attack will be will be found in the centre, a fortress built upon a rock, against which the gates of death will not prevail.

When the present crisis is over, (and I think we may see that the period is not far distant,) that by means of the objections of unbelievers, and the attention given to the subject, by believers, Chrisof mankind will, in this very circumtruth; and thus even the corruptions of Christianity will have answered a very valuable purpose; as having been the means of supplying such an evidence of its truth, as could not have been derived from any other circumstance. Let any other religion be named that ever was so much corrupted, and that recovered itself from such corruption, and continued to be professed with unquestionable seal by men of reflection and understanding, and I shall look upon it with respect, and not reject it without a very particular examination. The revival of a zeal for the religion of Greece and Rome under Julian, is not to be compared with the attachment to Christianity by inquisitive and learned men in the present age. Let literature and science flourish but one century in Repos. X. p. 8, Note.

Asia, and what would be the state of Mahometanism, the religion of the the Trinity and of atonement. Hindoos, or that of the Tartars, sub-The friends of genuine, and I will ject to the Grand Lama? I should rejoice to hear of such a challenge as I give Mr. Gibbon, being sent from a Mahometan Mufti to the Christian world.1

Should what I call pure Christianity, (the most essential articles of which I consider to be the proper unity of God, and the proper humanity of Christ,) continue to spread as it now does, and as, from the operation of the same causes, I have no doubt but that, in spite of all opposition, it will do, and litecontinued till nothing of the wretched rature revive among the Jews and Maoutworks be left; and then, I doubt hometans, (who, it is remarkable, were not, a safe and impregnable fortress never learned and inquisitive, but in an age in which all the Christianity they could see must have struck them with horror, as a sytem of abominable and gross idolatry, to which their own systems are totally repugnant): should learning and inquiry, I say, once more revive among the Jews and Mahomewhich, in consequence of it, will be tans, at the same time that a great part of the Christian world should be tianity shall be restored to its primitive free from that idolatry which has given purity, the cool and truly sensible part them such just offence, they would be much more favourably impressed with stance, perceive an argument for its the idea of Christianity than they were in former times.

It, also, can hardly be supposed, but that the general conversion of the Jews, after a state of such long and violent opposition, (which will in all future time exclude the idea of their having acted in concert with the Christians,) will be followed by the conversion of all the thinking part of the world. And if, before or after this time, the Jews should return to their own country. the whole will be such a manifest fulfilment of the prophecies of Scripture, as will leave no reasonable colour for infidelity.

&lt;sup>1</sup> This passage was sarcastically noticed by Mr. Gibbon, in the Correspondence, which Dr. Priestley published in 1794, at the end of his Discourses. It is also among the Letters in Mr. Gibbon's Miscollaneous Works. See on the temper discovered by the Historian, Mon.

contribute a little towards hastening I think to be really a part of it. To its approach, both by unfolding the this, all the friends of genuine Chrishistory of Christianity, with all the tianity will cheerfully say, AMEN.

In the prospect of this great and corruptions of it, and submitting to glorious event I rejoice; and I wish to the most rigid examination whatever

PART II. OF THE GENERAL CONCLUSION:

CONTAINING

CONSIDERATIONS ADDRESSED TO THE ADVOCATES FOR THE PRESENT CIVIL ESTABLISHMENTS OF CHRISTIANITY, AND ESPECIALLY BISHOP HURD.

the rise, progress, and present state, of so far as I do. Many excellent men what I deem to be Corruptions of among the clergy of the Church of Christianity, and especially in the England are exceedingly distressed established systems of it, all of which with the obligation to subscribe what I consider as antichristian, being both they cannot believe, and to recite what exceedingly corrupt in their principles, they utterly condemn; and yet their and supported by a power totally circumstances are such, as too strongly foreign to that of the kingdom of tempt them to make the best of their Christ; I cannot help expressing my situation, rather than absolutely starve; earnest wishes, that something may be and many others are continually predone by those who have influence, to vented from entering the church by remove these evils, or at least to pal- the same state of things in it. Even liate them. And I cannot help con- the guilt of those men who are induced sidering those prelates who really have to comply, to the disquiet of their influence in these matters, as highly consciences, will lie, in a great measure, criminal, in this enlightened age, if at the door of those who could relieve they are not apprised of the abuses, them, if they were in earnest to do it. and if they do not use their endea- Those who have any principle themyours to rectify them.

for myself, much may, and ought to gospel, Matt. xix. 29, they cannot be

AFTER relating, with so much freedom, be done for those who do not look quite selves must feel something for those It will not be imagined that I have who find themselves obliged by a printhe least prospect of being benefited ciple of conscience absolutely to aban-myself by any alteration that can take don their preferment in the church, place in the ecclesiastical system of Many and painful must have been my own country. All I wish, as a their struggles, before they could bring. Christian, from the powers of this themselves to execute a resolution, world, is, that they would not inter-which is viewed with wonder and meddle at all in the business of reli-regret by many of their best friends, gion, and that they would give no and with indifference or contempt by countenance whatever to any mode of the world at large. But they have it, my own, or that of others, but shew respect to other spectators, at present so much confidence in the principles of invisible, but whose approbation will what they themselves deem to be true hereafter be of more value than all religion, as to think it able to guard things else; and while they are conscious that what they forsake in this But though I have nothing to ask world is for the sake of Christ, and the unhappy even now. Few of these reproachful to us, at least, not to keep disturb.1 But while such is the state of things in this country, and the cry for reformation grows louder every honour, and even the flourishing state day, "Woe to them that are thus at of our country. ease in our Zion." Amos vi. 1.

in the situation of those prelates who have influence in the present state of things in this country, (but, indeed, I am far from considering their situation as an enviable one, thinking my own, as a Dissenting minister, despicable as I am sensible it must appear to them, to be in reality more useful, more honourable, and more happy,) it would be to acquire that immortal renown which it is in their power to secure by promoting such a Reformation. the same situation would probably lead me to see things in the same light in which they see them; and being easy myself, I might feel as little as they do for those who were ill at ease under me.

It is, I am sensible, extremely difficult to put one's self exactly in the place of another person, and therefore it is equally difficult to make proper allowance for the sentiments and conduct of other persons. But if it be a situation that necessarily leads any set of men to judge and act wrong, it should be a reason with those who see the influence of that situation, to remove the cause of offence. This work we may assure ourselves, will be done: and if those in whose power it now is, be not the proper instruments for it, others will be found, in God's own-time, both in Roman Catholic countries, and in this.

The work of reformation is advancing apace in several Roman Catholic countries,2 and this will make it doubly

In the course of the last six months only I have heard of five fresh instances of clergymen who on account of becoming Unitarians, have abandoned either actual preferment, or considerable prospects in the church. It is probable there are others that I have not heard of. (P.)

See supra, p. xv., and Note.

cases, it is probable, come to the hear- the lead we have hitherto plumed ouring of those whom no such scruples selves upon taking, in what relates to religious liberty, and to which we must be sensible that we owe much of the

One of the worst symptoms of the If I could for a moment wish myself present time is, that men of the greatest eminence in the church, and of the most unquestionable ability, appear to be either wholly indifferent to the subject, or instead of promoting a farther reformation, employ all their ingenuity to make men acquiesce in the present system; when all they can urge is so palpably weak, that it is barely possible they should be in earnest; not indeed in their wishes to keep things as they are, but in thinking their arguments have that weight in themselves which they wish them to have with > so little respectable, when he is qualified to class with Tillotson, Hoadley and Clarke, equally excites one's pity and indignation.

> others. To see such men as Bishop

Hurd in this class of writers, a class

This truly able writer has all the appearance of being really serious, in alleging that the Reformers of the church of England were as well qualified to judge concerning the system of Christianity as we now are. "They had only," he says, " to copy, or rather to inspect . . . . the Sacred Scriptures, which lay open to them as they do to us; "3 as if it required nothing more than eyes, capable of distinguishing the words of Scripture, to enter into their real meaning. But had not the Papists, the Lutherans, the Calvinists. the Anabaptists, and the Socinians, of the same age, eyes, as well as the Reformers of the Church of England?

And, I may add, were they not men of as good understanding?

But he adds, "The Sacred Scriptures.... being taken by them .... for their sole rule of faith, what should hinder them, when they read those Scriptures, from seeing as distinctly as same thing, whatever it is, that makes different periods, in which it was fixed men interpret the Scriptures so diffe- (and which is here called being checked rently from the truth, at this day, and kept back) by one prince, or ad-Was that an age exempt from preju-vanced by another, as well as where it dice; or were the Reformers in Eng- was checked and kept back (for this, land the only persons so privileged? Bishop Hurd cannot deny to have been All the classes of Reformers above the case) by Queen Elizabeth. enumerated appealed to the Scriptures would also have been equally applicaalike.

<sup>3</sup> Sermons, I. p. 235. (P.)

that the English Reformers, whatever formation had been moving on a comthey might pretend, were determined plete half century, as well as nearly by the authority of Scripture only. one, or if it had gone on afterwards It is evident to most persons, though (still under the controlling eye of the it may not be so to Bishop Hurd, that magistrate) to this day. For why they were much influenced by the doc-should not our present civil governors trines of the second, the third, and even be as good judges in matters of relilater centuries. What else could have gion as any persons in the same situa-led them to adopt the Nicene, and espetions could have been two hundred cially the Athanasian Creed? This years ago? Just so much more time was going far beyond the canon of the has elapsed since "the first contentions Scriptures. Or should the English in Germany on the account of reli-Reformers have seriously proposed to gion," and consequently more time themselves to make the Scriptures their would have been allowed for taking only rule, how was it possible for them, the full benefit of all the discoveries educated as they were, in the complithat have been made both at home cated system of Popery, to read them and abroad, &c. And it cannot be with unprejudiced eyes?

cipitate, tumultuary manner, as it was, ably different from the present. for the most part, on the Continent. On the other hand, had all our sove-

Sermons, I. pp. 235, 236. (P.)
 Ibid. pp. 239, 240. (P.)

we do at this day?" I answer, the if it had been fixed in any of the ble to any different establishment that However, it is far from being true should have been made after the Redoubted but that if a new establish-But "the Reformation," he says, ment should be made at this day, it "was not carried on with us in a pre- would be, in many respects, consider-

On the other hand, it advanced, under reigns after Queen Mary been Papists, the eye of the magistrate, by slow and the Reformation never been redegrees: nay, it was more than once sumed, a present bishop of Worcester checked and kept back by him. Hence might have said that the experiment it came to pass, that there was time had been tried, and had not answered, allowed for taking the full benefit of and that what had been established by all discoveries made abroad;" and the wisdom of ages, in all the countries "for studying the chief points of con- of Europe, it could not be safe to alter. troversy with care. . . . În short, . . . Besides, what can a Christian, jealous between the first contentions in Gerfor the purity of his religion, expect many on the account of religion, and from the controlling eye of the magisthe final establishment of it in the trate, but such a modification of it, or Church of England under Elizabeth, something bearing its name, as should there was a space of near half a cen- be thought to be most subservient to his own interest? It does not require It is obvious to remark, that the the understanding of Bishop Hurd to very same encomium might have been see the full force of this reply; but it bestowed upon the Church of England, may require a mind less fascinated by prejudice in favour of long-established forms.

"no peculiar charge of ignorance can "chosen in Christ out of mankind, ingenuous, he must acknowledge that ligion." Let Mr. Madan, 6 Dr. Hurd, the English Reformers did not see quite and the excellent bishop of Carlisle, so clearly as he himself now does. He together with some unbelievers among says, "the Christian system has.... the clergy, all subscribers to the same been reviled by such as have seen or articles, confer together, and tell us would only see it through the false what this consent touching true relimedium of Popish, or Calvinistical gion is. ideas."2 Calvinism, therefore, according to him, is not true Christianity. any important doctrinal articles of re-But let any competent judge of the ligion, when Bishop Hurd expresses subject read the Thirty-nine Articles himself so strongly, as we have seen, of the Church of England, and say in favour of the divinity of Christ, in whether they have not a strong tinge the highest sense of the word? By of Calvinism.3

It is not merely from such a general expression as that above quoted, that I conclude Bishop Hurd is no friend of Father and our Father, his God and Calvinism. He directly contradicts our God. It was a long time, as I have the fundamental article of that system shown, before any Christians, after they when he says, that "a divine person, &c., in virtue of his all-atoning death," has opened "the gates of eternal life to the whole race of mortal man."4

According to the plainest sense of the articles of the Church of England,

Sermons, I. pp. 240, 241. (P.)
Ibid. p. 37. (P.)
Hence the first Lord Chatham is said to have 8 Hence the first Lord Chatham is said to have described the Church of England as possessing "a Calvinistic Creed, a Popish Liturgy, and an Arminian Clergy." Burnet, who was too honest to deny what it ill-suited him to admit, says on Art. xvii. that "it is very probable that those who penned it, meant that the Decree was absolute." Yet "since they have not said it," absolute." Yet "since they have not said it," he provides a convenient sense for the Remonstrants, though he confesses, that "the Calvinists have less occasion for scruple, since the article does seem more plainly to favour them." Expos. Ed. 4, p. 165. See also The Confessional, Ed. 3, pp. 331-333.

4 Sermons, III. p. 63. (P.)

In one respect this learned prelate the gates of eternal life are not opened acknowledges that the English Re- to the whole race of mortal man; but formers were not sufficiently enlight- only to those who "by the everlasting ened, and that was with respect to the purpose of God, .... before the foundadoctrine of toleration. But he says, tions of the world were laid," being be brought against the Reformers for are "decreed by his counsel, secret to misapprehending a subject not only us," and are delivered "from curse and difficult in itself, but perplexed with damnation." It must be a strange endless prejudices." But surely Bishop latitude of interpretation, (for which Hurd himself will not say, that the his Lordship is an advocate,) that can doctrine of toleration is more difficult reconcile these two contrary positions; in itself, or more perplexed with and yet in the preface to these articles prejudices, than the doctrine of the it is said, "that they were agreed upon for avoiding diversity of opinions, and In another case, also, if he be at all establishing consent touching true re-

> What reformation can we expect in which he must mean that he is fully equal, in power and glory, to the Father, whom Christ himself styles his contended that Christ was God, had any idea of his being so, except in some qualified sense. I will venture to say that no person before, or at the Council of Nice, would have used such language as this of Bishop Hurd.

> With respect to the doctrine of atonement, which I think I have proved to be quite a modern thing, and hardly to have been known before the Reformation, Bishop Hurd says, "The Scriptures are unintelligible, and language itself has no meaning, if the blood of the Lamb slain had not a > true, direct and proper efficacy (considered in the literal sense of blood), 6 Art. xvii. (P.) 6 A rector in Birmingham, who gave occasion to the Familiar Letters. 1790.

in freeing us from the guilt of sin, or, in other words, from the punishment of it.1

It is impossible, however, not to observe, that the Papists use the same language in defence of the doctrine of transubstantiation, appealing also to the literal sense of more texts of Scripture than one. Besides, how is it possible that the blood of any man (and the divinity of Christ certainly had no blood), considered in a literal sense, should cleanse from sin? Surely there must be something figurative in such language as this; and why should the figurative sense end just where Bishop Hurd would fix it, rather than where Socinus would choose?

Nay, it should seem that, according to Bishop Hurd, our salvation depends upon the belief of this novel doctrine of atonement. For I can see no other natural interpretation of what he says: "They must place their entire hope and confidence in the blood of the covenant, who would share in the blessings of it."2 If this is to be understood according to the literal sense of the words, all the heathen world are excluded from salvation, as well as Socinians. To me it appears extraordinary, that a man of Bishop Hurd's good sense should not be more staggered than he appears to have been, at the very manner in which he himself describes the doctrines of the divinity of Christ, and of atonement for sin by his death, every sentence, and every clause of a sentence, being calculated to excite astonishment; but I shall only transcribe a part of it. After describing the gradual unfolding of the scheme under the Jewish dispensation, he

"At length Jesus Christ came into the world, to fulfil and to declare the whole will of God on this interesting subject; and from him, and from those commissioned by him, we learn what the wisest men, and even angels had desired to look into, and could at most discern but imperfectly, through the types and shadows of the patriarchal and Mosaic dispensations. The great mystery, now unveiled, was briefly this, that God . . . . would only confer this mighty privilege at the instance, as it were, and for the sake, of a transcendently divine person, his only-begotten Son, the second person in the glorious Trinity, as we now style him; that this divine person . . . . should descend from heaven, should become incarnate, .... should even pour out his blood unto death, and by that blood should wash away the stain of guilt. . . . In this awfully stupendous manner (at which reason stands aghast, and faith herself is half confounded) was the grace of God to man at length manifested."3

The natural effect of such a pause of astonishment as this, should be a close examination, whether a thing that even supernatural evidence can barely make credible, did ever take place; for in all cases, the more extraordinary any thing, any event, or any proposition is, the more evidence it requires. And when we consider the true meaning of the figurative language of Scripture, it will be found to assert nothing on this subject at which even reason can stand aghast.

Our author himself, after enumerating the strongest figurative expressions of the Scriptures on this subject. as those in which the terms redemption, ransom, propitiation, sacrifice, &c., occur, closes the whole with this observation: "Now let men use what art they will in torturing such expressions as these, they will hardly prevent our seeing what the plain doctrine of Scripture is, [viz.] That it pleased God to give us eternal life only in his Son, and in his Son only as suffering and dying for us."4 All this I readily admit, believing as firmly as Bishop Hurd can do, that it was expedient and necessary that such a person as Jesus Christ

&lt;sup>1</sup> Sermons, I. p. 193. (P.) ■ Ibid. I. p. 194. (P.)

Ibid. II. pp. 285-287. (P.)
 Ibid. II. pp. 288, 289. (P.)

should preach as he did, and that he should die and rise again, or the end of the gospel, in forming men to a happy immortality, could not have been gained. This is certainly the doctrine of the New Testament, but then it is far from being the doctrine of atonement; which I think I have shown to be a very different thing from that which was taught by Christ and the apostles, and indeed to have been unknown for several centuries after Christ.

It is no wonder that this writer should say, that "no Christian is bound to make this solicitous inquiry into the doctrinal . . . . part of the gospel; and that very "possibly his conduct is then most acceptable, when he looks no farther than to the authority of the gospel, agreeably to that well-known decision of our Lord himself, Blessed is he who hath not seen, and yet hath believed."1 For certainly such tenets as those above cited can never be believed on any other terms. Faith in them must be implicit, and without inquiry. is rather extraordinary, however, that this writer did not perceive that the saying which he quotes of our Saviour relates only to a matter of fact, of which it was not possible that more than a very few persons could be evewitnesses; whereas the things that he is contending for are doctrines, of which all persons at this day are competent judges, provided they make use of their reason, and examine the Scriptures for themselves. But even the looking no farther than to the authority of the gospel for articles of faith, may make a very solicitous inquiry absolutely necessary, considering how much, and how long, some articles of faith have been misrepresented.

In fact, if the learned prelate could fancy himself out of the fetters of his church's creed, he might find the very articles which he so zealously contends for among the "quibbles and...metaphysics which" (with a strain of pleasantry not usual to him, and indeed

1 Sermons, III. p. 52. (P.)

rather uncommon in a sermon) he says the Pagan philosophers, when they "pressed into the church, in their haste, forgot to leave behind them."<sup>2</sup>

But however these doctrines came in, to repeat the bishop's own words. "the presumptuous positions of particular men, or churches, are forwardly taken for the genuine doctrines of Christianity; and these positions being notunfrequently either wholly unintelligible. or even contrary to the plainest reason, the charge of nonsense, or of falsehood. is thus dexterously transferred on the gospelitself."3 This very just and wellexpressed observation I cannot help thinking to be peculiarly applicable to several articles of the creed of Bishop Hurd himself, as I think must be sufficiently evident from the preceding history.

nstory. This writer, not content with what he himself had advanced against all improvements, or alterations, in the church in which he presides, quotes with the highest approbation what Mr. Burgh, in his reply to Mr. Lindsey, says against the idea of a progressive religion, viz. that "All that" the Bible "contains was as perspicuous to those who first perused it, after the rejection of the papal yoke, as it can be to us now, or as it can be to our posterity in the fiftieth generation."4

This is evidently a mis-stating of the case; because it is not a progressive religion, but a progressive reformation of a corrupted religion, that is pleaded And as it cannot be denied that the corruption of Christianity was a gradual and progressive thing, can it be so very unnatural to expect that the restoration of it to its primitive purity should be gradual and progressive also? If the Reformation was not progressive. why does not this bishop prefer the state of it under John Huss and Jerome of Prague to that of Luther and Cran. mer? He may say that they had not then completely rejected the papal yoke.

&lt;sup>2</sup> Ibid. III. p. 205. (P.)

■ Ibid. p. 209. (P)

4 Ibid. I. [Note] p. 244. (P.)

corruptions of Christianity contained not. in the system of Popery, and which partial.

of the divines of that particular age, sanction of the civil powers, which be removed, in order to make way for those of Socinus, and others of the it! same age, and who were equally well

But if by papal yoke he meant all the qualified to judge for themselves, had

It is nothing but the alliance of the had been enforced by the authority of kingdom of Christ with the kingdoms the see of Rome, I say, that neither of this world (an alliance which our Luther nor Cranmer rejected the papal Lord himself expressly disclaimed) yoke, because their reformations were that supports the grossest corruptions rtial. of Christianity; and perhaps we must Besides, if we make the sentiments wait for the fall of the civil powers before this most unnatural alliance be which Mr. Burgh and Bishop Hurd broken. Calamitous, no doubt, will may call the proper æra of the Refor- that time be. But what convulsion in mation, to be our standard, why should the political world ought to be a subwe adopt those of Luther or Cranmer ject of lamentation, if it be attended in preference to those of Socinus, or with so desirable an event? May the even those of the Anabaptists of Mun- kingdom of God, and of Christ (that ster, who were all of the same age? which I conceive to be intended in the I know of no reason but that the opin- Lord's Prayer), truly and fully come, ions of Luther and Cranmer had the though all the kingdoms of the world

APPENDIX TO THE GENERAL CONCLUSION;

CONTAINING

A SUMMARY VIEW OF THE EVIDENCE FOR THE PRIMITIVE CHRISTIANS HOLDING THE DOCTRINE OF THE SIMPLE HUMANITY OF CHRIST.

church, and especially by the Jewish be thought probable that he should Christians, is of particular conse- pass over the former without censure, quence, it may give satisfaction to if he had thought it to be an error? some of my readers, to see the evidence circumstances relating to it.

ters of the orthodox persuasion, that belief of the divinity of Christ by two kinds of heresy existed in the degrees. He adds, that the Jews times of the apostles, viz. that of those being in this error (which he states as who held that Christ was simply a their believing Christ to be \psi\lambda\lambdass man, and the other that he was man aνθρωπος) drew the Gentiles into it only in appearance. Now the apostle also. John animadverts with the greatest 3. It is acknowledged by Eusebius

As the doctrine held by the primitive severity upon the latter; and can it

2. Athanasius is so far from denyfor their holding the simple humanity ing this, that he endeavours to account of Christ stated in a more concise and for Christ being spoken of as a man distinct manner than it is done in the only, in several parts of the New body of this work. I shall, therefore, Testament, and especially in the book attempt it in this place, and take the of Acts, from the apostles not being opportunity of introducing a few more willing to offend the Jews (meaning the Jewish Christians) of those times, 1. It is acknowledged by early wri- and that they might bring them to the time of Victor.

apostles.

from calling the contrary opinion a ject is evidently an apology for his own. As Hegesippus was contemporary with Justin, he must have heard at least of the doctrine of the simple humanity of Christ; but he might not have heard much about the opinion of Justin, which was different from that of the Gnostics, though the pre-existence of Christ was a part of both.

6. Irenæus, who wrote after Justin, only calls the opinion of those who held that Christ was the son of Joseph as well as of Mary, a heresy. He says nothing of those who, believing him to be a mere man, allowed that he had no human father.

7. Those whom Epiphanius calls Alogi, among the Gentiles, held that Christ was merely a man; and as they had no peculiar appellation before his time, and had no separate assemblies, it is evident they could not have been distinguished as heretics in early times.

8. The first who held, and discussed, the doctrine of the divinity of Christ, acknowledged that their opinion was exceedingly unpopular with the unlearned Christians, and that these latter were pious persons, who dreaded the doctrine of the Trinity, as thinking that it infringed upon that of the supremacy of God the Father.

9. The divinity of Christ was first and others, that the ancient Unitarians advanced and urged by those who had themselves, constantly asserted that been heathen philosophers, and espetheir doctrine was the universal opin- cially those who were admirers of the ion of the Christian church till the doctrine of Plato, who held the opinion of a second God. Austin says, that 4. Hegesippus, the first Christian he considered Christ as no other than historian, himself a Jew, enumerating a most excellent man, and had no susthe heresies of his time, mentions picion of the word of God being incarseveral of the Gnostic kind, but not nate in him, or how "the catholic that of Christ being a mere man. He faith differed from the error of Phomoreover says, that, in travelling to tinus," (the last of the proper Unita-Rome, where he arrived in the time of rians whose name is come down to us,) Anicetus, he found all the churches till he read the books of Plato; and that he visited held the faith which that he was afterwards confirmed in had been taught by Christ and the his opinion by reading the Scriptures.1 Constantine, in his oration to the 5. Justin Martyr, who maintains fathers of the Council of Nice, speaks the pre-existence of Christ, is so far with commendation of Plato, as having taught the doctrine of "a second God. heresy, that what he says on the sub- derived from the supreme God, and subservient to his will.2

10. There is a pretty easy gradation in the progress of the doctrine of the divinity of Christ; as he was first thought to be a God in some qualified sense of the word, a distinguished emanation from the supreme mind, and then the logos or wisdom of God personified; and it was not till near four hundred years after Christ that he was thought to be properly equal to the Father. Whereas, on the other hand, it is now pretended, that the apostles taught the doctrine of the proper divinity of Christ; and yet it cannot be denied that, in the very times of the apostles, the Jewish church, and many of the Gentiles. held the opinion of his being a mere man. Here the transition is quite sudden, without any gradation at all. This must naturally have given the greatest alarm, such as is now given to those who are called orthodox by the present Socinians; and yet nothing of this kind can be perceived. Besides, it was certainly more probable that the Christians of those times, urged as they were with the meanness of their Master, should incline to add to rather than take from, his natural rank and dignity.

<sup>1</sup> Confessiones, L. vii. C. 19, &c. (P.) C. ix. p. 684. (P.)

New Appendix.

CONSIDERATIONS

IN EVIDENCE THAT

THE APOSTOLIC AND PRIMITIVE CHURCH WAS UNITARIAN.

These Considerations are derived from the letters of Dr. Priestley, addressed to Bishop Horsley, the Bench of Bishops, and others, and from his work called "An History of the Early Opinions concerning Jesus Christ." The above volumes are out of print and very scarce. The matter here presented is an abridgement, but, we may add, it is additional to what was promised to the subscribers to this Volume.]

THE UNITY OF GOD: THE FATHER THE ONLY TRUE GOD.

THE most express declarations concerning the unity of God, and the importance of the belief of it, are frequent in the Old Testament. The first commandment is, Exod. xx. 3: "Thou shalt have no other gods before me." This is repeated in the most emphatical manner, Deut. vi. 4: "Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord.", .

In the New Testament we find the same doctrine concerning God that we do in the Old. To the Scribe who enquired which was the first and greatest commandment, our Sariour answered, Mark xii. 29: "The first of all the commandments is, 'Hear, O Israel, the Lord our God is one Lord.' And the Scribe said unto him, ver. 32: "Well, Master, thou hast said the truth; for there is one God, and there is none other but

Why is this ONE GOD in the New Testament always called the Father, and even the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ? And why are we nowhere told that this one God is the Trinity, consisting of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost? . . . .

There are many, very many, passages of Scripture which inculcate the doctrine of the divine unity in the clearest and strongest manner. Let one such passage be produced in favour of the Trinity. And why should we believe things so mysterious without the clearest and most express evidence? . . .

Had there been any distinctions of persons in the divine nature, such as the doctrine of the Trinity supposes, it is at least so like an infringement of the fundamental doctrine of the Jewish religion, that it certainly required to be explained, and the obvious inference from it to be guarded against. . . . .

I will venture to say, that for one text in which you can pretend to find anything harsh or difficult to me, I will engage to produce ten that shall create more difficulty to you. How strangely must you torture the plainest language, and in which there is not a shadow of figure, to interpret to your purpose, 1 Tim. ii. 3: "There is one God, and one mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus; 1 Cor. viii. 6: "To us there is but one God, the Father, of whom are all things and we in him, and one Lord Jesus Christ, by whom are all things, and we by him;" or that expression of our Saviour himself, John xvii. 2: "That they might know thee, the only true God, and Jesus Christ whom thou hast sent." Never upbraid us Unitarians with torturing the Scriptures, while you have these and a hundred other plain texts to bend to your Athanasian hypothesis, besides many general arguments, from reason and the Scriptures, of more real force than any particular texts, to answer. . . . .

You cannot say that this is a matter of no great consequence in Christianity. It affects the most fundamental principles of all religion, the first and the greatest of all the commandments, which says, "Thou shalt have no other God besides me;" and such is the nature of this great doctrine of the Unity of God, that there never was a departure from it which did not draw after it very alarming practical consequences. . . . .

THE JEWS IN ALL AGES WERE BELIEVERS IN THE DIVINE UNITY.

The Jews always interpreted their Scriptures as teaching that God is simply one. . . . .

"The Jews," says Eusebius, "were not taught the doctrine of the Trinity, on account of their infant state." Basil gives the same account. . . . . .

"The doctrine of the Trinity," says the Rabbi Isaac, 'as held by learned Christians, rests on the slightest evidence, and is contrary to the doctrine of the prophets, the law, and right reason, and even the writings of the New Testament. For the divine law gives its sanction to the Unity of God, and removes all plurality from him."....

Some writers of yesterday have maintained that the Jews always believed in a Trinity, and that they expected that their Messiah would be the Second Person in that Trinity; but the Christian fathers, who say just the contrary, were as much interested as any men could be, in finding that doctrine among the Jews, and they were nearer the source of information. . . . .

Basnage, who studied the history and opinions of the Jews more carefully, perhaps, than any other modern writer, and who has written largely on this very subject, though a Trinitarian himself, has exploded all the pretences of Cudworth and others, to find the doctrine of the Trinity, either among the ancient or the modern Jews. "The Christians and the Jews," he says, "separate at the second step in religion. For after having adored together one God.

absolutely perfect, they find immediately after, the abyss of the Trinity, which entirely separates them. . . . . .

RELIGIOUS WORSHIP.

Jesus Christ, says, "The true worshippers shall worship the Father." . . . . .

Our Saviour directs his disciples to pray to the same great Being, whom only we ought to serve.

Accordingly, the practice of praying to the Father only, was long universal in the Christian church, the short addresses to Christ, as those in the Litany, "Lord have mercy upon us, Christ have mercy upon us," being comparatively of late date.

Origen speaks of no Christian praying to any other than the God who is over all. "If we know," says he, "what prayer is, we must not pray to any created being, not to Christ himself, but only to God, the Father of all, to whom our Saviour himself prayed." . . . "In this we are all agreed, and are not divided about the method of prayer; but should we not be divided, if some prayed to the Father, and some to the Son? The strinitarian, I remember praying conscientiously to all three persons without distinction, only beginning with the Father; and what I myself did in the serious simplicity of my heart, when young, would, I doubt not, have been done by all Christians from the beginning, if their minds had been impressed as mine was, with the firm persuasion that all the three persons were fully equal in power, wisdom, goodness, omnipresence, and all divine attributes.

In the Clementine liturgy, the oldest that is extant, contained in the Apostolical Constitutions, which were probably composed about the fourth century, there is no trace of any such thing as prayers to Christ.

Idolatry, which began with the worship of Jesus Christ, soon proceeded to that of the Virgin Mary, and terminated in as many objects of worship as the heathens ever adored, and sufficiently similar to them.

With idolatry, which is paying divine worship to that which is not God, you cannot charge me, because the being that I worship is also the object of worship with you; and the far greater part of your public devotions are addressed to no other. But the charge will fall with all its weight upon you, if the Father only be God, and you worship two other persons besides him. . . . .

You cannot but acknowledge that the a truth? And why is the doctrine of the proper object of prayer is God the Father, whom you call the first person in the Trinity. Indeed, you cannot find in the Scriptures any precept that will authorize us to address ourselves to any other person, nor any proper example of it... Our Saviour himself always prayed to his Father, and with as much humility and resignation as the most dependent being in the universe could possibly do; always addressing him as his father, or the author of his being; and he directs his disciples to pray to the same great being, whom only, he says, we ought to serve. . . .

To conclude, from the single case of Stephen, that all Christians are authorized to pray to Christ, is like concluding that all matter has a tendency to go upwards, because a needle will do so when a magnet is held over it. When you shall be in the same circumstances with Stephen, having your mind strongly impressed with a vision of Christ sitting at the right hand of God, you may then, perhaps, be authorized to address yourself to him as he did; but the whole tenor of the Scriptures proves that, otherwise, you have no authority at all for any thing that is requisite to constitute a comsuch practice. . . . . .

THE TRINITY.

DIVINES are content to build so strange and inexplicable a doctrine as that of the Trinity upon mere inferences from casual expressions, and cannot pretend to one clear, express, and unequivocal lesson on the subject. . . . .

I wish you would reflect a little on the subject, and then inform us what there is in the doctrine of the Trinity, in itself con- a few particular texts, not only with common sidered, that can recommend it as a part of sense, but also with the general and the a system of religious truth. For there is obvious tenor of the Scriptures themselves. neither any fact in nature, nor any one purpose of morals, which are the object and wears so disagreeable an aspect, that I think is, no doubt, in the highest degree importo the Athanasian Creed, "I wish we were tant and interesting. Since, therefore, the well rid of it." This is not setting up reatance, it may be safely inferred that it was with themselves. . . . .

unknown to them. . . . .

taught as explicitly, and in as definite a the Trinity, which I consider as one of its manner, in the New Testament at least, as most radical corruptions, should be rethe doctrine of the divine Unity is taught in nounced in the most open and unequivocal both the Old and New Testaments, if it be manner by all those whose minds are so far

Unity always delivered in so unguarded a manner, and without any exception made in favour of the Trinity, to prevent any mis-take with respect to it, as is always now done in our orthodox catechisms, creeds, and discourses on the subject? . . . . .

The doctrine of Transubstantiation implies physical impossibility, whereas that of the Trinity, as unfolded in the Athanasian Creed, implies a mathematical one; and to this only we usually give the name of con-

Now I ask, Wherein does the Athanasian doctrine of the Trinity differ from a contradiction? It asserts, in effect, that nothing is wanting to either the Father, the Son, or the Spirit, to constitute each of them truly and properly God; each being equal in eternity and all divine perfections; and yet that these three are not three Gods, but only one God. They are, therefore, both one and many in the same respect, viz., in each being perfect God. This is certainly as much a contradiction as to say that Peter, James, and John, having each of them everyplete man, are yet, all together, not three men, but only one man. For the ideas annexed to the words God or man cannot make any difference in the nature of the two propositions. . . . .

Why, then, should you be so desirous of retaining such a doctrine as this of the Trinity, which you must acknowledge has an uncouth appearance, has always confounded the best reason of mankind, and drives us to the undesirable doctrine of inexplicable mysteries? Try, then, whether you cannot hit upon some method or other of reconciling In the meantime, this doctrine of the Trinity end of all religion, that requires it. . . . . every reasonable man must say, with the If the doctrine of the Trinity be true, it excellent Archbishop Tillotson, with respect evangelists give no certain and distinct ac- son against the Scriptures, but reconciling count of it, and say nothing of its impor- reason with the Scriptures, and the Scriptures

I therefore think it of the greatest conse-Why was not the doctrine of the Trinity quence to Christianity, that this doctrine of enlightened as to be convinced that it is a corruption and an innovation in the Christian doctrine, the reverse of what it was in its primitive purity; and that they should exert themselves to enlighten the minds of others.

THE ATHANASIAN CREED.

THIS creed of Athanasius is no act of any council. You neither know who composed it, when it made its first appearance, or how it came into the public offices of the church.

Bishop Taylor says, "If it were considered concerning Athanasius's Creed, how many people understand it not, how contrary to natural reason it seems, how little the Scripture says of those curiosities of explication—it had not been amiss if the final judgment had been left to Jesus Christ.".

Many, no doubt, do subscribe to this creed in this light and careless manner; which shows the dreadful effect of the habit of subscribing. It leads to the utter perversion of the plainest meaning of words, and opens a door to every kind of insincerity. By your lordship's own confession, you yourself no more believe what you have subscribed with respect to this creed, than you do the Koran.

If your lordship defends these damnatory at all by them, you vindicate the common cursing and swearing that we every day hear in our streets. If the phrase perish everlastingly does not mean perish everlastingly, your lordship should have informed us what it does mean. It is certainly no blessing, but a curse of some kind or other.

We think it our duty to cry aloud, and not spare, when we see such abominations in the public worship of Almighty God as are to be found in all the civil establishments of Christianity in the world; corruptions borrowed from heathen polytheism, and which in their nature and effects are very similar to it. . . . . . .

CHRIST PROPERLY AND ONLY A MAN.

CHRIST was a man, naturally possessed of no other powers than other men have, but a distinguished messenger of God, and the chief instrument in his hands for the good of men; this was the original faith of the Christian church, consisting both of Jews and Gentiles. . . . . .

It must strike every person who gives the least attention to the phraseology of the New Testament, that the terms Christ and God, are perpetually used in contradistinction to each other, as much as God and man.

Christ himself always prayed to this one God, as his God and Father. He always spoke of himself as receiving his doctrine and his power from him, and again and again disclaimed having any power of his own, John v. 19: "Then answered Jesus and said unto them, Verily, verily, I say unto you, the Son can do nothing of himself." Ch. xiv. 10: "The words that I speak unto you, I speak not of myself, but the Father that dwelleth in me."

He calls his disciples his brethren, John xx. 17: "Go to my brethren, and say unto them, I ascend unto my Father and your Father, and to my God and your God." Can any person read this, and say that the Unitarians wrest the Scriptures, and are not guided by the plain sense of them?....

What else will be suggested by the description which Moses is supposed to give of the Messiah, Deut. xviii. 18: "I will raise them up a prophet, from among their brethren, like unto thee, and will put my words in his mouth, and he shall speak unto them all that I shall command him"? . . .

Here is nothing like a second person in the Trinity, a person equal to the Father, but a mere prophet, delivering, in the name of God, whatever he is ordered so to do. . .

Had the apostle Paul considered Christ as being anything more than a man, with respect to his nature, he would never have urged, with the least propriety or effect, that "Since by man came death, by man came also the resurrection of the dead." For it might have been unanswerably replied, This is not the case; for, indeed, by man comes death, but not by man, but by God, or by God the creator of man, under God, comes the resurrection of the dead.....

The disciples certainly saw and conversed with him at first on the supposition of his being a man as much as themselves. Of this there can be no doubt. Their surprise, therefore, upon being informed that he was not a man, but really God, or even the maker of the world under God, would be idea of his being possessed of any proper just as great as ours would now be on dis- power of his own, more than other men had. covering that any of our acquaintance, or at If Christ was the maker of the world, us consider, then, how we should feel, how we one, I am confident, would ever call that being a man, after he was convinced that he was God. . . . . .

I would further recommend it to your consideration, how the apostles could continue to call Christ a man, as they always do, both in the book of Acts and in their Epistles, after they had discovered him to be God. After this it must have been highly degrading, unnatural, and improper, notwithstanding his appearance in human form.

THE DEITY OF CHRIST.

Is not one self-existent, almighty, infinitely wise, and perfectly good being fully equal to the production of all things, and also to the support and government of the worlds which he has made ? A second person in the godhead cannot be really wanted for this purpose, as far we can conceive. . . .

You speak of the impiety of the Unitarians. Before you repeat any expressions of this kind, I beg you would pause a little, and consider how such language might be retorted upon yourself. If it be impiety to reduce a God to the state of a man, is it not equally impious to raise any man to a state of equality with God, -that God who has declared that he will not give his glory to another, who has no equal, and who in this respect styles himself a jealous God? . . . .

As Christ expressly says, that he did not know the day of judgment, he certainly either was, or pretended to be, ignorant of something which, at least in his divine nature, he must have known. Here, then, is a question worthy of an Apollo to answer; and it may be amusing to observe what different solutions have been given of this difficulty. . . . . .

There is also another consideration which I would recommend to you who maintain that Christ was either God, or the maker of the world under God. It is this. The manner in which our Lord speaks of himself, and of the power by which he worked miracles, is inconsistent, according to the common construction of language, with the least a very good man and a prophet, was in and if in the creation he exerted no power reality God, or the maker of the world. Let but what properly belonged to himself, and what was as much his own as the power of should behave towards such a person, and speaking or walking belongs to man-though how we should speak of him afterwards. No depending ultimately upon that supreme power in which we all live, and move, and have our being-he could not with any propriety, and without knowing that he must be misunderstood, have said that of himself he could do nothing, that the words which he spake were not his own, and that the Father within him did the works. . . . .

It would also be a shocking abuse of language, and would warrant any kind of deception and imposition, if Christ could be supposed to say that his Father was greater than he, and at the same time secretly mean only his human nature, whereas his divine nature was at the same time fully equal to that of the Father. Upon the same principle a man might say that Christ never suffered, that he never died, or rose again from the dead, meaning his divine nature only, and not his human. Indeed, there is no use in language, nor any guard against deception, if such liberties as these are to be allowed.

SON OF GOD NOT GOD THE SON.

WITH respect to calling Jesus the Son of God, this phrase was, in the mouth of a Jew, synonymous to the Messiah. . . .

If the mere appellation Son of God implies equality with God, Adam must have been a God, for he is called the Son of God, Luke iii. 38. Solomon also must have been God; and so must all Christians, for they are called Sons of God, 1 John iii. 2. John i. 12. Rom. viii, 14. Phil. ii. 15.

OPINIONS WHICH PREPARED THE WAY FOR THE DEITY OF CHRIST.

THE great obstacle to the reception of Christianity, especially with persons distinguished for their learning, or their rank in life, was the meanness of the person and condition of Christ, and especially the circumstance of his having been crucified as a common malefactor. . .

Not content with alleging that though their Master died the death of a malefactor he had not lived the life of one; that his death had answered the greatest purposes in the plan of Divine Providence . . . . the of the philosophy of their age, and said that the Christ was a person of much higher rank than he appeared to be, even much higher than that of any other man, a great superangelic-spirit sent down from heaven . . . for it was the opinion of many that angels in the shape of men had appeared, and were only temporary forms of flesh and blood.

If any new opinions be introduced into a society, they are more likely to have introduced them who held opinions similar to them before they joined that society. . . . .

The divinity of Christ was first advanced and urged by those who had been heathen philosophers, and especially those who were admirers of the doctrine of Plato, who held the opinion of a second God. . . . . .

It happened that the philosophy which was most in vogue in that age was Platonism, the principles of which have been seen to be more conformable to those of revealed religion in general than those of any other system that was taught in the Grecian schools, as it contained the doctrines of the unity of God, the reality of providence, and the immortality of the soul. . . . .

Platonism unhappily making a difference between the Supreme Being himself and his mind or ideas, and giving an obscure notion of its being by means of a divine efflux that all truth is perceived by the mind, as common objects are seen by the beams of the sun, they imagined that a ray of this wisdom, or the great second divine principle in their system, might illuminate Jesus Christ, and even had permanently attached itself to him. . . . . . Some of those Greek philosophers having embraced Christianity, and being, as was natural, desirous of making converts of others, therefore wished to recommend it to them, by exhibiting it in such a light as they imagined would make it appear to the most advantage and; in order to do this, they endeavoured to make it seem to be as little different from the philosophy to which they had been addicted as possible. . .

When Christians had found two natures in Christ, a divine as well as a human nature, they would easily answer this reproach of the "Who was it," says Arnobius, "that was seen hanging on the cross? The man whom he put on, and whom he carried with him. The death you speak of was that of the man he had assumed—that of the burthen, not of the bearer." This was an be given, but that we may learn of our Lord more learned among them availed themselves answer that we do not find to have occurred to the apostles. . . . . .

There is a pretty easy gradation in the progress of the doctrine of the divinity of Christ; as he was first thought to be a God in some qualified sense of the word, a distinguished emanation from the Supreme Mind; and then the logos, or the wisdom of God personified; and this logos was first thought to be only occasionally detached from the Deity, and then drawn into his essence again, before it was imagined that it had a permanent personality, distinct from that of the source from which it sprung. And it was not till the fourth century that this logos, or Christ, was thought to be properly equal to the Father. . . . . .

GREATER THAN THE THE FATHER

[We here adduce only a tithe of the evidence found by Dr. Priestley in the writings of the Christian Fathers before the Council of Nice, 325, that they regarded the Son as subordinate to the Father.]

THE great object of the orthodox in the second century, was to make a God of Christ, but a far inferior God, and also a God of or out of God the Father, lest he should be thought to be another God, and independent of the Father. On the other hand, the great object of the orthodoxy of a later period, was to exalt the Son to a perfect equality with the Father. . . . .

Bishop Bull acknowledges that Justin Martyr, Tertullian, and Novatian thought that the Father could not be confined to place, but the Son might. . . . . .

Justin Martyr, who insists so much on the pre-existence and divinity of Christ, speaking of the logos, says, "Than whom we know no prince more kingly, and more righteous, after the God who generated him." Speaking of the God in heaven and the God upon earth, who conversed with Abraham, he says, "The former is the Lord of that Lord who was upon earth as his Father and God, the cause of his existence, and of his being powerful, and Lord and Irenœus evidently supposed, that the time of the day of judgment was altogether unknown to the Son, and he advises us to acquiesce in our ignorance of many things, after his example. . . . No better reason can his mind; a light, the copy of the light, and man the image of the logos." He calls the Father the only true God. . . He speaks of Christ as subservient to his Father's will, and only called God by way of figure. . . .

The early fathers, before the Council of Nice, say that the Son was generated in time, that there was me time when God was without a Son, and that this generation took place immediately before the creation, in order to the Son's being instrumental in it. . .

Tertullian expressly says, that "God was not always a father or | judge; since he could not be Father before he had a Son, nor | judge before there was sin; and there was time when both sin and the Son, which made God to be a judge and a father, were not." . . . .

Tertullian considers "The monarchy of Ged as not infringed by being committed to the Son, especially as it is not infringed by being committed to innumerable angels, who are said to be subservient to the commands of God." "How," says he, "do I destroy the monarchy, who suppose the Son derived from the substance of the Father. and does nothing without the Father's will; he being a servant to his Father?" He says that Paul is speaking of the Father only, when he speaks of him whom no man has seen, or can see, and as the king eternal, immortal, and invisible, the only God. "According to the economy of the gospel, the Father chose that the Son should be on earth and himself in heaven; wherefore, the Son himself, looking upwards, prayed to the Father, and teaches us to pray, saying, Our Father, who art in heaven." . . . . .

Origen says, that "God is the wex" (the origin) to Christ, as Christ is the agan to those things which were made in the image of God." "Both the Father and the Son," he says, "are fountains: the Father, of divinity; the Son, of logos." "The Father only is the good, and the Saviour, as he is the image of the invisible God, so he is the image of his goodness." "The logos did whatever the Father ordered." "The Saviour and the Holy Spirit," he says, "are more excelled by the Father, than he and the Holy Spirit excel other things." . . . . .

Novatian, whose orthodoxy, with respect to the doctrine of the Trinity, was never questioned, says, "The Father only is the only Messiah. . . . . .

himself, that the Father is above all ; for he good God." "The rule of truth teaches us said. "The Father is greater than I." . . . . to believe, after the Father, in the Son of Clement Alexandrinus calls the logos God, Christ Jesus, our Lord God, but the "the image of God, the legitimate son of Son of God, of that God who is one and alone the maker of all things." "Though he was in the form of God, he did not attempt the robbery of being equal with God. For, though he knew he was God of God the Father, he never compared himself with God the Father; remembering that he was of the Father, and that he had what the Father gave him." . . .

Arnobius says, that "the Omnipotent. and only God, sent Christ." And again, "Christ, a God, spake by the order of the and ordainer of all things, before he undertook the construction of this world, generated an incorruptible spirit, which he called his Son." . . . . .

"The Son patiently obeys the will of the Father, and does nothing but what the Father wills or orders." "He approved his fidelity to God; for he taught that there is one God, and that he only ought to be worshipped; nor did he ever say he was God. For he would not have preserved his allegiance, if, being sent to take away multiplicity of gods, and to preach one God, he had brought in another, besides that one." . . .

The same language was held by Eusebius, who wrote about the time of the Council of Nice. "Christ," he says, "the only begotten Son of God, and the first-born of every creature, teaches us to call his Father the only true God, and commands us to worship him only." "There is one God, and the only-begotten comes out of him." "Christ being neither the supreme God, nor an angel, is of a middle nature between them; and being neither the supreme God, nor a man, but the mediator, is in the middle between them, the only-begotten Son of God." . . . . .

THE REASON WHY THE APOSTLES DID NOT AT FIRST TEACH THE - DEITY OF CHRIST.

THE Christian Fathers in general represent the apostles as obliged to use great caution not to offend their first converts with the doctrine of Christ's divinity, and as forbearing to urge that topic till they were first well established in the belief of his being the

After treating pretty largely of the con- therefore, have received this doctrine from one Lord, and besides him there is no other; yet able to bear them. . . . . . having seen him (Jesus) nailed to a cross.

men of that time would not bear it." This of Christ]. . . . . writer also says, that the Apostle Paul, in so much offended at having a new law superadded to their former, how much more would they have been offended if Christ had taught his own divinity." He represents the EARLY OPINIONS ABOUT THE HOLY apostle as beginning his epistle to the Hebrews with saying, "that it was God who spake by the prophets, and by his Son, and Ir is remarkable, that, notwithstanding the because their minds were weak, and they further, and for a good reason. For if, when duct of the apostles with respect to their in- fishermen, especially after speaking of him sisting on the doctrine of the Resurrection as crucified. And why do I speak of the of Christ, rather than that of his Divinity, Jews, when at that time, even the disciples immediately after the descent of the Holy of Christ himself were often disturbed, and Spirit, Athanasius says, "As to the Jews, scandalized at him, when they heard subline who had daily heard, and been taught out of doctrines; on which account he said, I have the law, Hear O Israel, the Lord thy God is many things to say to you, but ye are not

I cannot help observing how extremely yea, having killed and buried him them- improbable is this account of the conduct of selves, and not having seen him risen again, the apostles given by Athanasius, Chrysosif they had heard that this person was God, tom, and other orthodox fathers of the equal to the Father, would not they have re- church, considering what we know of the jected and spurned at it?" "On this ac- character and the instructions of the apostles. count," he adds, "they (the apostles) They were plain men, and little qualified to brought them forwards gently, and by slow act the cautious part ascribed to them. And degrees, and used great art in condescend- their instructions certainly were to teach all ing to their weakness." . . . . . that they knew, even what their master com-Now if we look into the book of Acts, we municated to them in the greatest privacy. shall clearly see that they had not got beyond Whereas, they must have suffered numbers the first lesson in the apostolic age; the to die in the ignorance of the most important great burden of the preaching of the apostles truth in the gospel, lest, by divulging it too being to persuade the Jews that Jesus was soon, the conversion of others should have the Christ. That he was likewise God, been prevented. The case evidently was, they evidently left to their successors; who, that these fathers did not know how to indeed, did it most effectually, though it re- account for the great prevalence of the Unitaquired a long course of time to do it. . . . . rian doctrine among the Gentiles as well as Theodoret observes, that in the genealogy the Jews in the early ages of Christianity. of Christ given by Matthew, this writer did but upon such a hypothesis as this [that not add according to the flesh, "because the the apostles did not at first teach the deity

In how unworthy a manner, and how unmentioning the subjection of Christ to the suitably to their real character and conduct, Father, in his Epistle to the Corinthians, these fathers represent the apostles as act-"spake of him more lowly than was necesing. They were all plain men, far from sary on account of their weakness." . . . . being qualified or disposed to act so cunning Chrysostom says, that "if the Jews were a part as is here ascribed to them. . . .

not that Christ himself had spoken by them, doctrine concerning the person of Christ had been the great subject of controversy were not able to bear the doctrine concerning ever since the promulgation of Christianity, Christ." He even says that "when he there is no mention made of any difference speaks of Christ as above the angels, he still of opinion concerning the Holy Spirit, that spoke of his humanity. See," says he, "his attracted any notice, till after the comgreat caution." He adds, at Athens Paul mencement of the Arian controversy, and calls him (Jesus) simply a man, and nothing even till after the Council of Nice. . . . .

Justin Martyr, to whom we are inthey had heard Christ himself speaking of debted for the first rudiments of the dochis equality to the Father, they would on trine of the divinity of Christ, says but that account have often stoned him, and little concerning the Holy Spirit; and from called him a blasphemer; they would hardly, that little it is not easy to conclude what he considered the Spirit as a created being, since he represents him as inferior to Christ. . . . . .

Irenœus seems to have considered the Holy Spirit as a divine influence, and no proper person. "By the name of Christ," he says, "we are given to understand one who anoints, one who is anointed, and the unction with which he is anointed. It is the Father who anoints, but the Son is anointed in the Spirit." . .

Valentinus thought the Holy Spirit to be of the same rank with the angels. . . . . .

Origen considered it as doubtful whether, since all things are made by Christ, the Holy Spirit was not made by him. And after discussing the question a little, he says, "We who maintain three hypostases, the Father, Son, and Spirit, and believe that the Father only is unbegotten, think it more agreeable to piety and truth, to maintain that the Holy Spirit is superior to all things that were made by Christ."....

Tertullian seems to have thought that the Holy Spirit was derived from Christ, in the same manner as Christ was derived with respect to the Trinity as any person of his age, certainly did not believe in the divinity of the Holy Spirit, whom he represents as inferior to the Son, whom also he makes greatly inferior to the Father. "Christ," says he, "is greater than the Paraclete; for he would not receive of Christ if he was not less than he." . .

Athenagoras considered the Holy Spirit as an efflux from the Deity, flowing out and drawn into him again at pleasure, as a beam from the sun. . . . .

Eusebius, who appears to have been as orthodox as other writers of his age with respect to the Son, (if his writings may be allowed to testify for him,) and who certainly was not bold in heresy, scrupled not to consider the Spirit as made by the Son. "The Holy Spirit," says he, "is neither God nor the Son, because he did not derive his birth from the Father, like the Son, but in one of the things that was made by the Son; because all things were made by him, and without him was nothing made." . . . .

Even Hilary, who wrote so largely concerning the divinity of the Son, seems not to have had the same persuasion concerning that of the Holy Spirit; but, in the little that he says on the subject, seems rather to have his real opinion was. But it is probable that considered the Spirit as a divine influence. . . .

The reasoning of the fathers concerning the divinity of the Holy Spirit lies in a much smaller compass than that concerning the divinity of the Son. One principal reason of this is, that so little mention is made of the Holy Spirit in the Scriptures, and still less that can possibly be construed into an evidence of his being a divine per-This is a circumstance that could not escape notice, and which required to be accounted for by the orthodox. . . . . .

Among others, Epiphanius has advanced a reason which is curious enough. It goes upon the idea of the Holy Spirit being that person of the three which immediately dictated the Scriptures. He says, that "the Holy Spirit says little concerning himself, that he might not commend himself, the Scriptures being written to give us examples."...

It was Athanasius, the great advocate for the divinity of Christ, and his consubstantiality with the Father, who also exerted himself strenuously and effectually in behalf of that of the Holy Spirit, whose divinity was denied by Macedonius. He informs us, that he was in the deserts of Egypt when he heard of that heresy, and that he wrote from thence to prevent the spread of it. He had so much influence in Egypt, that a Synod was immediately called there, which he attended, and where the Holy Spirit was for the first time decreed to be consubstantial with the Father and the

Not long after this, the divinity of the Holy Spirit was more solemnly determined at a council held in Constantinople, and from that time it was deemed equally heretical to deny the divinity of the Spirit as that of the Son.

THE FIRST APOSTLES STRICTLY UNITARIAN.

When the apostles first attached themselves to Jesus, it is evident they only considered him as being such a Messiah as the rest of the Jews expected, viz. a man, and a king. When Nathaniel was introduced to him it was evidently in that light, John i. 45. "Philip findeth Nathaniel, and saith unto him, We have found him of whom Moses in the law, and the prophets, did write, Jesus of Nazareth, the son of Joseph." . . . . .

that he was John risen from the dead; but against him fell far short of this. . . . none of them imagined that he was either the most high God himself, or the maker of the world under God. It was not so much as supposed by any person that Jesus performed his own. . . . .

If he was known to be a God at all before his death, it could only have been revealed to his disciples, perhaps the apostles, or only his chief confidents among them, Peter, James, and John, suppose on the mount of transfiguration, though nothing is said concerning it in the history of that transaction. Certainly what they saw in the garden of Gethsemane could not have led them to suspect any such thing. But if it had ever been known to Peter, can we suppose he could have denied him as he did? . . . . .

If the doctrine of the deity of Christ had the Jewish converts in general had adopted it, at that time, and have been ever since, so exceedingly zealous with respect to the doctrine of the divine unity, not have taken Gods than one, in the apostolic age? . . . .

hement in urging this their great objection to suffering of death, crowned with glory and Christianity. To answer the charge of hold-honour," &c. ing two or three Gods, is a very considerable ancient Christian fathers. Why then do we apostles themselves were once imperfect in find nothing of this kind in the age of the the faith, but never heretics. For while they apostles? The only answer is, that there believed too little concerning Christ, they Athanasius strongly expresses this objection, them, and gave them a commission. If, as made by both Jews and Gentiles, to the therefore, the apostles, in the very time of incarnation of the Son of God, though as a their ignorance, were not heretics, how can thing that was gloried in by Christians. any one call these so who died such?" . . .

Ephesus (Acts xx. 27) that "he had not was urged by Photinus (A.D. 346, a Unita-But if we attend Paul thither, where we to it. . . . . .

At the time that Herod heard Jesus, it was have a very particular account of all the proconjectured by some that he was Elias, by ceedings against him, we shall find no trace others that he was a prophet, and by some of anything of the kind. All their complaints

Considering the known prejudices, and the inveteracy of the Jews, no reasonable man need desire any clearer proof than this, that neither Paul, nor any of the apostles, had his mighty works by any proper power of ever taught the doctrine of the divinity of Christ. . . . .

If we consider the charge that was advanced against Peter and John at the first promulgation of the gospel, we shall find it amounts to nothing but their being disturbers of the people, by preaching in the name of Jesus. What was the accusation against Stephen, but his speaking blasphemous words against the temple and the law? . . .

The apostles, to the latest period of their writings, speak the same language; representing the Father as the only true God, and Christ as a man, the servant of God, who raised him from the dead, and gave him all been actually preached by the apostles, and the power of which he is possessed, as a reward of his obedience. Peter says, Acts it could not but have been well known to the ii. 22, 24, "Ye men of Israel, hear these unbelieving Jews; and would they, who were words: Jesus of Nazareth, a man approved of God among you, by miracles, and wonders, and signs, which God did by him, &c., whom God hath raised up." Paul also says, the alarm, and have urged this objection to 1 Tim. ii. 5, "There is one God, and one Christianity, as teaching the belief in more Mediator between God and men, the man Gods than one, in the apostolic age? . . . . Christ Jesus." Heb. ii. 9, 10: "We see As soon as ever the Jews had any pretence Jesus, who was made a little lower than the for it, we find them sufficiently quick and veangels," i.e., who was a man, "for the

Speaking of those who believed Christ to article in the writings of several of the be a mere man, Facundus says, "The was no occasion for it, the doctrine of the received power to cast out unclean spirits, divinity of Christ not having been started. and to cure diseases, when our Lord sent

"The Jews," says he, "reproach us for it; The Apostles' Creed affords a strong argument Gentiles laugh at it; but we adore it... ment for the antiquity and purity of the Paul tells the elders of the church of ancient Unitarian doctrine. This argument failed to declare unto them the whole counsel rian), who, according to Ruffinus, pleaded of God." We may be confident, therefore, that the "Apostles Creed, literally underthat, if he had any such doctrine (the deity stood, was in his favour." Marcellus (A.D. of Christ) to divulge, he must have taught it 330, a Unitarian) in his epistle, quotes the in the three years that he spent in that city. whole of the Apostles' Creed, and assents

THE PRIMITIVE CHURCH UNITA-RIAN.

It is owned by Eusebius and others, that the ancient Unitarians themselves constantly asserted that their doctrine was the prevailing opinion of the Christian church till the time of Victor. The Trinitarians denied the very age of the apostles as any who are so termed at this day (myself by no means excepted), and differing as much from what is now called the orthodox faith, I will venture to say was never questioned; and that these ancient Unitarians were not then expelled from Christian societies as heretics, is, I believe, as generally allowed. . . . . .

Facundus says that "Martha and Mary would never have said to Christ if thou hadst been there, had they thought him to be God omnipresent." He adds, "neither would Philip have said to him Show us the of him." . . . . .

As one argument that the primitive church of Jerusalem was properly Unitarian, maintaining the simple humanity of Christ, I observe, that "Athanasius himself was so far from denying it, that he endeavoured to account for it by saying that all the Jews were so firmly persuaded that their Messiah was to be nothing more than a man like themselves, that the apostles were obliged to use great caution in divulging the doctrine of the proper divinity of Christ." . . . . .

Theodoret, commenting on 1 Cor. viii. 6, "To us there is but one God the Father,and one Lord Jesus Christ," says, "Here Paul calls the one, God, and the other, Lord, lest he should give those just freed from heathenism, and had learned the truth, a pretence for returning to their heathenism and idolatry. In his exposition of 1 Cor. xv. 28, in which the apostle says, that the Son was subject to the Father, says, "The divine apostle, fearing the evil that might arise from the Grecian mythology, added these things, speaking in low terms for their advantage." And the plain inference from this is, that the orthodox fathers must necessarily have supposed, that the Christian church in general was at first Unitarian, and that it continued to be so m considerable time. . . . . .

"Hegesippus" (a Jewish Christian), Eusebius says. "wrote the history of the preachwith many bishops in his journey to Rome, he found the same doctrine with them all "....

That Hegesippus (A.D. 170), though a Unitarian himself, should speak as he does of the state of opinions in the several churches which he visited, as then retaining the true faith, is, I think, very natural. The only heresy that disturbed the apostle John, and therefore other Jewish Christians in general, was that of the Gnostics.

THE GOSPEL OF JOHN AND THE GNOSTICS.

The Gnostics were a sect of Christians who. among other things, believed that Jesus Christ was a man, only in appearance, and it was against this sect John's writings were directed, not the Unitarians.]

IRENÆUS, speaking of the Cerinthians and Nicolaitans, says, that "John meant to re-Father, if he had entertained any such idea fute them, and show that there is only one omnipotent God, who made all things by his word, visible and invisible, in the introduction to his gospel." "No heretics," he says, "hold that the word was made flesh." Again, he says, "John alludes to the Gnostics both in his gospel and in his epistle, and describes them by the name of Antichrist, and those who were not in communion those who denied that Christ was come in the flesh, John meant the Gnostics, and that by those who denied that Jesus was the son of God, he meant the Ebionites [Unitarians who did not believe in the miraculous conception]. He had no idea that the former expression only could include both. But as the Gnostics maintained that Jesus and the Christ were different persons, the latter having come from heaven, and being the son of God, whereas Jesus was the son of man only, the expression of Jesus being the son of God is as directly opposed to the doctrine of the Gnostics as that of Christ coming in the flesh. . . . . . It is remarkable, however, and really curious, that before the Unitarians were considered as heretics, we find a very different account of the reasons that induced John to write both his epistles and his gospel: Ignatius says it was solely with a view to the Gnostics, and so does Irenœus, again and again. This, therefore, was the more ancient ing of the apostles in five books. Conversing opinion on the subject; and, I doubt not, the occurs) that it was imagined that the apostle had any view to the Unitarians in any of his writings. This is a circumstance that well deserves to be attended to. . . . . .

Is it not extraordinary that, if this apostle conceived the indignation that you suppose him to have entertained against the Unitarians, he should give no intimation of it except in this one ambiguous expression? You own that he marks the Gnostics clearly enough, and expresses the strongest aversion to them. How came he then to spare the Unitarians, who have been so odious since ? You must own that, in the course of his gospel, he inserts many expressions which. when literally interpreted, militate strongly against the doctrine of the divinity of Christ; as when, according to him, our Saviour says, "The Father is greater than I; I can do nothing of myself; I live by the Father; the Father within me he doth the works. The Father is the only true God," &c. If Jewish Christians who observed the law of the apostle knew that there were in his time Moses, provided they did not impose it those who believed that Christ was a mere upon others. Now, who could those be but man, while he himself believed him to be Jewish Unitarians? for, agreeable to the God, is it not extraordinary that he should evidence of all antiquity, all the Jewish give them such an advantage from the lan- Christians were such as a guage of our Saviour in his own gospel; and Tertullian is the first Christian writer that he should have taken no care to qualify who expressly calls the Ebionites heretics. or explain it? Persons who are aware of a Irenæus, in his large treatise concerning dangerous opinion, and wish to guard others heresy, expresses great dislike of their doc-

JEWISH CHRISTIANS; EBIONITES AND NAZARENES.

THE Nazarenes, as well as the Ebionites, the genuine descendants of the old Jewish HAVING proved that the great body of nity of Christ; and certainly the presump. communion with the Catholic church. . . . . tion is, that they learned this doctrine from Justin Martyr treats the ancient Unitateachers? ....

It is plain there was a very great agreement between these two ancient sects; and the Ebionites had made some addition to the old Nazarene system. For Origen expressly tells us, "They were called Ebion ites, who from among the Jews own Jesus to be the Christ." . . . . .

true one. And it was not till long after this Jewish Christians in the time of Origen, is (Tertullian, I believe, is the first in whom it evident from the passage, "When you consider what belief they, of the Jewish race, who believe in Jesus, entertain of their redeemer, some thinking that he took his being from Mary and Joseph, some indeed from Mary only and the divine Spirit, but still without any belief of his divinity you will understand." . . . . . . . . . The peculiar opinions of the Ebionites and the Nazarenes are represented by the most respectable authorities as the very same; only some have thought that the Nazarenes believed the miraculous conception, and the Ebionites not. But this has no authority whatever among the ancients. . . . . .

Theodoret, who, living in Syria, had a great opportunity of being acquainted with the Nazarenes, describes them as follows: -"The Nazarenes are Jews who honour Christ as a righteous man. . . . .

Justin particularly mentions his having no objection to hold communion with those against it, do not write as he does. . . . . trine, always representing them as believing that Jesus was the son of Joseph; but he never confounds them with the heretics.

UNITARIANS NOT AT FIRST RE-GARDED AS HERETICS.

Christians, and who cannot be proved to Christians in early times were Unitarians, have departed from the faith of their ances- it follows that they could not have been tors, were all believers in the simple huma- considered as heretics, or persons out of the apostles. For who else were their rians in a way as evidently showing that in his time his own doctrine stood in need of an apology. There are two passages in this writer in which he speaks of heretics though they went under different names, yet with great indignation, as "not Christians, they seem only to have differed in this, that but as persons whose tenets were absurd, impious, and blasphemous, with whom Christians held no communion;" but in both the passages he evidently had a view to the Gnostics only. . . . . .

Hegesippus, the first Christian historian, That the Ebionites comprised all the enumerating the heresies of his time, menthat of Christ being a mere man. He, moreover, says, that in travelling to Rome, where he arrived in the time of Anicetus, he found all the churches that he visited held the faith which had been taught by Christ and the apostles, which, in his opinion, was probably that of Christ being, not God, but man only. . . . . .

Ignatius also frequently mentions heresy and heretics, and, like John and Polycarp, with great indignation: but it is evident to every person who is at all acquainted with the history, learning, and language of those had no persons in his eye but the Gnostics only. . . . .

thought meanly of those Christians who did inferior rank; but I believe he never classes them with heretics. . . . . .

which he speaks of them, his idea of heresy who may have objected to my opinion, speaks of heresy as "borrowed from a har-barous philosophy;" and says of heretics, that "though they say there is one God, Nothing can well be more evident than Ebionites were pretty soon considered as tians, since the rule of faith," meaning, heretics, and a reason which did not affect probably, the Apostles' Creed, "transfers the Unitarians among the Gentiles. For the the worship of many gods to the one true Jewish Christians, on account of their using God, not understanding that the unity of a different language, held separate assemblies God is to be maintained but with the acofrom those who used the Greek tongue; and nomy, dread this economy; imagining that besides, Jerome expressly says they were deemed heretics only on the account of their attachment to the institutions of Moses. . .

THE UNITARIANS WERE THE GREAT BODY OF THE CHRISTIAN CHURCH UP TO THE FOURTH CENTURY.

WHEN this investigation shall be completely finished, it will, probably, be matter

tions several of the Gnostic kind, but not of surprise to many, that it was not sooner discovered that the Unitarians must have been, and certainly were, the great body of common Christians till after the Council of Nice. . . . . .

The common or unlearned people in any country, who do not speculate much, retain longest any opinions with which their minds have been much impressed; and therefore we always look for the oldest opinions in any country, or any class of men, among the common people, and not among the learned. . . . . .

There can be no doubt, therefore, but times, and of the subsequent ones, that he that the doctrine of the Trinity was a long time very unpopular with the common people among Christians; and this is a fact No man took more pains to inculcate the that cannot be satisfactorily accounted for, doctrine of the logos than Origen, and he but on the supposition that the doctrine of the simple humanity of Christ was that not adopt it, considering them as of an which had been handed down to them by tradition from the apostles. . . . . .

em with heretics. . . . . . . Justin Martyr, A.D. 140, is generally Clemens Alexandrinus makes frequent supposed to have been the first platonising mention of heretics, and expresses as much Christian, and it would appear his doctrine abhorrence of them as Justin Martyr does; was not popular from the phyase, "neither but it is evident that, in all the places in do I agree with the majority of Christians, was confined to Gnosticism. He considers it which is nearly the most literal rendering of as an answer to all heretics to prove that the passage, (though I would not be under-"there is one God, the almighty Lord, who stood to lay much stress on that circumwas preached by the law and the prophets, stance,) will naturally be construed to mean and also in the blessed gospel." He also that the majority actually did make the oband sing hymns to Christ, it was not ac- that Tertullian represents the great body of cording to truth; for that they introduced unlearned Christians in his time as Unitaanother God, and such a Christ as the pro- rians, and even holding the doctrine of the phets had not foretold." He never includes Trinity in great abhorrence. "The simple, the Gentile Unitarians among heretics. . . . the ignorant, and unlearned; who are al-But there is an evident reason why the ways the greater part of the body of Christhis number and disposition of a Trinity is a division of the Unity. They, therefore, will have it that we are worshippers of two, and even of three Gods, but that they are the worshippers of one God only. We, they say, hold the monarchy. Even the Latins have learned to bawl out for the monarchy, and the Greeks themselves will not understand the aconomy." It is hardly possible in any words to describe the state of things is the language of strong feeling and com- it. . .. plaint, the clearest of all proofs that he did not misstate things on that side, as it would have been for the purpose of his argument to have represented the Unitarians as being inconsiderable on account of their numbers. as well as despicable on account of their want of learning. . . . .

It is evident to me that in the time of Origen, viz. the beginning of the third century, the doctrine of the divinity of Christ was so far from being generally received, except by the bishops and the more learned of the clergy, that it was considered as a sublime doctrine, proper indeed for persons who had made advances in divine knowledge, but not adapted to the vulgar, who were content with the plain doctrine of Jesus Christ, he says, "the multitudes (i.e. the great mass or body) of believers are instructed in the shadow of the logos, and not in the true logos of God, which is in the Wherefore the gospel must open heaven. be taught both corporeally and spiritually; and, when it is necessary, we must preach the corporeal gospel, saying to the carnal that we know nothing but Jesus Christ and him crucified. But when persons are found confirmed in the spirit, bringing forth fruits in it, and in love with heavenly wisdom, we must impart to them the logos returning from his bodily state, in that he was in the beginning with God."—Origen. . . . . .

Origen well describes the different classes of Unitarians of his time in the following passage: "Hence may be solved the doubts which disturb many who allege a principle of piety, and a fear of making two Gods, and by this means fall into false and impious opinions; either denying that the identity of the Son differs from that of the Father, saying, that the Son is God only in name; or denying the divinity of the Son, while they allow his identity, and that he is a different person from the Father," &c. The first that he describes were the philosophical Unitarians, who allowed the divinity of the Son, but said it was the same with more clearly than Tertullian here does. It with the article prefixed, and the Son without Athanasius also acknowledged that the Unitarian doctrine was very prevalent among the lower class of people in his time. He calls them oi wollow, the many, and describes them as persons of low understanding. "It grieves," he says, "those who stand up for the holy faith that the multitude, and especially persons of low understanding, should be infected with those blasphemies. Things that are sublime and difficult are not to be apprehended, except by faith; and ignorant people must fall, if they cannot be persuaded to rest in faith, and avoid curious questions."

Gregory Nazienzen, who was contemporary with Basil, complains of the small number of the orthodox, saying, "They were the smallest of the tribes of Israel." He represents the common people as excusable for their errors, and safe, from not being disposed to scrutinize into things. . .

I think we may learn from Facundus, who wrote so late as the reign of Justinian, that in his time many of the common people were well known to consider Christ as a mere man. and yet were not disturbed on that account. As the passage in his writings from which I infer this is a pretty remarkable one, I shall cite it at full length. Speaking of the condemnation of Theodorus, in whose favour he is writing, he says, that "in condemning him they condemned all those who thought as he did, even though they afterwards changed their opinion....What will they do with Martha, and then with Mary, the sisters of Lazarus, who were particularly attached to our Lord while he was upon earth? And yet both of them, first Martha and then Mary, are said to speak to him thus: "Lord, if thou hadst been here, my brother had not died;" who, though they thought that he was the Son of God who was to come into the world, yet would they not have said if thou hadst been here, if they had believed him to be God omnipresent. They therefore only thought as Theodorus is said to have done, and were excommunithat of the Father; whereas the latter cated along with him; and how many of (probably the common people) denied the this kind do we know, by the writings of divinity of the Son altogether. It is evithe apostles and evangelists, there were at dent from this passage, that the Unitarians, that time, and how many even now are in the time of Origen, were numerous; for there still in the common herd of the faithhe calls them many, which he would not ful, who, by only partaking in the holy have done unnecessarily. The argument by mysteries, and by a simple observance of which he solves their doubts has been menthe commandments, we see pleasing God; tioned before, viz. that the Father is God when even the apostles themselves, the first to be included in this condemnation of Theo-

all of the common people, and unlearned. There were several considerable writers among them. "Beryllus of Bostra," Nice-phorus says, "left elegant writings behind him." Marcellus and Photinus distinguished themselves as writers, and Gregory Nazianzen says that the heretics boasted of the number of their books. Unhappily there are none of them now extant.

OPPOSITION TO THE DOCTRINE THE DEITY OF CHRIST AND THE TRINITY IN THE EARLY CHURCH.

Tertullian testified that the greater part of the body of Christians complained that their teachers were worshippers of two, and even of three Gods. . . . . .

Tertullian appears, however, not a little embarrassed with the question, how the Father can be called the one God, if the Son, though connected with him, can, in any proper sense, even where the Father is not mentioned, be called God; but he seems to satisfy himself with saying, that as the proper style of the Father before he had a Son was that of the one God, he could not lose it in consequence of having a Son, especially as that Son derives his divinity from his inseparable connection with the Father. "Without injuring the rights of the Son, the Father," he says, "may be called the only God."....

With a view to the Unitarians, who were the majority of the common Christians in the time of Tertullian, as he particularly acknowledges, he is obliged to use a good deal of management, and though he contends for the propriety of calling the Son God, as a branch from God the Father, yet so great was the superiority of the Father to the Son, that he says he does not choose to call the Son God, when the Father had been mentioned immediately before. . . . .

Origen says, "It is probable that some will be offended with our saying, that the Father being called the only true God, there are other gods besides him partaking of his Novatian speaks of the Unitadivinity." Novatian speaks of the Unita-rians as "scandalized at the doctrine of the divinity of Christ." And the state of things was not different about the time of teachers, only thought as those whom we see the Council of Nice. Eusebius, in his controversy with Marcellus, says, "If they are afraid of making two Gods."-"Some, for Unitarians, however, were far from being fear of introducing a second God, make of the common people, and unlearned. the Father and the Sou the same."—"But you are dreadfully afraid lest you should be obliged to acknowledge two hypostases of the Father and Son." . . . . .

Alluding to the Unitarians, with whom, it is plain, Origen wished to stand on good terms, says, "We may by this means solve the doubts which terrify many men, who pretend to great piety, and who are afraid of making two Gods."....

Photius very truly observes that, "to recite all the answers which the fathers have given to the question, why, when the Father, Son, and Spirit are each of them separately God, we should not say that there are three Gods? would make a book, instead of an tics, both Arians and Unitarians, as in the bosom of the church. "Now," says he, "there is an apostacy; for men have departed from the right faith, some confounding the Son with the Father," meaning the Sabellians, "others daring to say that Christ was created out of nothing," meaning the Arians. "Formerly heretics were open, but now the church is full of concealed heretics." . . . .

"We are torn in pieces," Basil says, "on the one side by the Anomeans, and on the other by Sabellius." "Is not the mystery of godliness everywhere laughed at; the bishops continuing without people and without clergy, having nothing but an empty name, able to do nothing for the advancement of the gospel of peace and salvation? Are there not discords concerning God, and blaspheming from the old impiety of vain Sabellius?" "You know," says he, "my dear brethren, that the doctrine of Marcellus overturns all our hopes, not acknowledging the Son in his proper person-

"When I was lately praying before the people," says Basil, "and sometimes concluding with the doxology to the Father, with the Son, and Holy Spirit, and sometimes through the Son in the Holy Spirit, some who were present said, that I used phrases which were not only new, but contradictory." He says that "he was accused of novelty, and as an inventor of new phrases, and that they spared no kind of reproach, because he made the Son equal to the Father, and did not separate the Holy baptism, one God and Father of all, who is Spirit from the Son." . . . . .

The authority of the church was also had recourse to, as an argument to enforce the reception of what could not be proved or explained. "Some tenets in the church." says Basil, "we receive as preserved in writing, but some are of apostolic tradition, handed down as mysteries, both of which have the same force with respect to piety, and no one will question them, who is at all acquainted with the laws of the church."

Austin pleaded for implicit faith by the authority of the prophet Tsaiah. "It was, therefore," he says, "rationally said by the prophet (chap. vi.), Unless ye believe, ye will not understand; where he doubtless distinguishes these two things, and advises that we first believe that we may be able to understand what we believe; so it seems reasonable that faith should precede reason."...

Nor were the Heathens less backward than the Christians to upbraid the orthodox fathers with their own Polytheism, while they pretended to reclaim them from theirs. The Heathens, according to Chrysostom, would say to them, "Who is this Father, who is this Son, or this Holy Spirit? Do not you make three Gods, while you accuse us of Polytheism?"....

PRINCIPLES AND ARGUMENTS OF THE ANCIENT UNITARIANS.

THE great stronghold of Unitarians was the Scriptures, and the plain literal sense of them. "They bawl out," says Basil, "with their proofs from Scripture, and make no account of the unwritten traditions of the fathers." And Photinus, in his dispute with Basil, said that "he could prove his doctrine by a hundred passages of Scripture." The orthodox in general complained of the advantage which the Unitarians had in appealing to the literal sense of the Scripture. "If," says Gregory Nyssen, "a man rests in the bare letter, so far he Judaizes in opinion, and has not learned that a Christian is not the disciple of the letter, but of the spirit; for the letter killeth, but the spirit giveth life." . . . . . . The two decisive texts in proof of the unity of God, and the proper humanity of Christ, in these epistles are the following:

above all, and through all, and in you all':" which was urged, as Eusebius informs us, by Marcellus; and 1 Tim. ii. 5, "There is one God, and one Mediator between God and man, the man Christ Jesus," which was pleaded by the same. This was also alleged by Photinus. . . . .

Epiphanius says that Theodorus argued from Acts ii. 22, where Peter calls Christ "a man approved of God." And indeed it was acknowledged by the orthodox, that, in all the period to which the history of Luke extends, the apostles did not openly preach such offensive doctrines as those of the preexistence and divinity of Christ. . . . .

We learn from Epiphanius that Theodotus urged Luke i. 35 : "The spirit of the Lord shall come upon thee;" arguing that he did not enter into her, as the orthodox supposed. And John viii. 40, "Ye seek to kill me, a MAN who told you the truth." Austin says that the Sabellians urged John vii. 16, "My doctrine is not mine." Basil's enemies quoted against him John vi. 57, "I live by the Father." . . . . .

When the Unitarians were urged with the Father and the Son being said to be one, they said that they were one by consent and harmony, and proved it from Christ's saving that his disciples might be one with them, as they two were one. . . . . .

That the ancient Unitarians had much recourse to reasoning, and that they often disputed with great acuteness and subtilty. so as to puzzle their opponents, may be inferred from what is said of them by Eusebius, viz. that "they neglected the Scriptures, and reasoned in syllogisms." [They used both reason and Scripture. ] . . . .

UNITARIANS HAD NO SEPARATE ASSEMBLIES.

THE ANCIENT UNITARIANS were known by the names of Ebionites, Nazarenes, Paulians, Arians, Monarchists, &c. &c.]

THE Unitarians were originally nothing less than the whole body of Christians, and that the Trinitarians were the innovators; appearing at first modest and candid, as was natural while they were a small minority, but bold and imperious when they became the majority. . . . . .

There was no creed used in the Christian church, besides that which was commonly Eph. iv. 5, 6, "One Lord, one faith, one called the Apostle's, before the Council of Nice; and even after that there was no equal to that also? If his creatures offend other generally used at baptism. This creed, him, and by repentance and reformation beculated to exclude them. . . . . .

Accordingly, we find that all the Unitarians continued in communion with the Catholic church till the time of Theodotus, about the year 200, when it is possible that, upon his excommunication, some of his more zealous followers might form themselves into separate societies. . . . . .

We have no certain account of any separate societies of Unitarians till the excommunication of Paulus Samosatensis, about the year 250, when, after him, they were called Paulians, or Paulianists. "Others also, about the same time, or rather after that time, formed separate societies in Africa, on the excommunication of Sabellius, being, after him, called Sabellians. . . . . .

"Sabellianism," which was precisely the same thing with Unitarianism in former times, Dr. Lardner says (Credibility, vol. iv. p. 606), "must have been very agreeable to the apprehensions of many people. Eusebius speaks of its increasing very much in Egypt, when Dionysius of Alexandria opposed it. According to Athanasius, the occasion of Dionysius writing upon that head was, that some of the bishops of Africa followed the doctrine of Subellius, and they prevailed to such a degree, that the Son of God was scarce any longer preached in the churches. It is also remarkable that the first treatise that was ever written against the Unitarian doctrine was that of Tertullian against Praxeas, with whom he was particularly provoked, on account of the active part he had taken against Montanus, in getting him excommunicated and expelled from the church of Rome. This, says Le Sueur, was the cause of the bitterness with which Tertullian wrote against him. Now there were treatises against the Gnostics in a much earlier period. Why, then, were none written against the Unitarians, since pure Unitarianism was certainly as old as Gnosticism; and if it had been deemed a heresy at all, it would certainly have been thought to be of the most alarming nature, as it is considered at present? . . . . .

REDEMPTION OF MANKIND.

WHATEVER may be meant by the redemption of the world, is not the Being who made it as has been seen, contains no article that come the proper objects of his forgiveness, could exclude Unitarians; and there was is it not more natural to suppose that he has nothing in the public services that was cal- within himself a power of forgiving them, and of restoring them to his favour, without the strange expedient of another person, fully equal to himself, condescending to animate a human body, and dying for us? We never think of any similar expedient in order to forgive, with the greatest propriety and effect, offences committed by our children against ourselves. . . . . .

Whatever you suppose to be the use of a third person, in the Trinity, is not the influence of the first person sufficient for that also? The descent of the Holy Spirit upon the apostles was to enable them to work miracles. But when our Saviour was on earth, the Father within him, and acting by him, did the same thing. You also cannot deny that, exclusive of some particular texts, the general tenor of Scripture does not suppose such a Trinity as you contend for. it not the general tenor of the Old and New Testaments, that the supreme God himself, and not any other person acting under him, was the proper maker of the world; and that he himself, and not any other being, supports and governs it? Is not the same great Being, the God and Father of us all, and even the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, represented as forgiving the sins of his penitent offspring freely, and exhorting us to forgive as we ourselves hope to be forgiven? And are we to require any ransom, recompense, or atonement of a penitent brother ? . . . . .

If there be any religious truth of practical importance, next to that of a future state of rewards and punishments, it is that which leads us to consider all adorable and amiable attributes as centring in one undivided being, whom we can look up to as our maker, preserver, and benefactor, the author of all good; who has within himself mercy for the penitent, not requiring to be made placable by the sufferings of another, but by the repentance of the sinner only, and whose constant presence with us is sufficient for all the purposes of providential care respecting the mind or body; so that we have not to look to one divine person for one thing, and to another for something else. . . . .

This, you know, has been not only the tendency, but also the actual consequence of the belief of the doctrine of the Trinity, at least with the vulgar. With them mercy is constant invigorating influence the sole province of the Spirit; and nothing but power, and that not of a benevolent and engaging nature, but something unknown and terrific only, is left to the Father. . . . .

THE CAUSE OF SCHISM.

WE Unitarians should never exclude you from joining in our devotions, because we should not use any language that you could not adopt; but your Trinitarian forms absolutely exclude us. If there be any sin in schism, it lies wholly at your door; because it is you who force us to separate ourselves, when, without any violation of your consciences, you might admit us to join with What, then, is there unreasonable in our demands, when you might grant them in their utmost extent without the least injury to yourselves? Thus the unity of the church, and the extinction of all sects, which is your own favourite object, depend entirely upon yourselves. . . .

How glorious would it be to the heads of any Christian establishment to require nothing of the members of it besides the profession of our common Christianity, and to leave all particular opinions to every man's own conscience! Every cause of unpleasing contention would then be removed, and one of the most popular objections to Christianity would be removed with it, viz. the want of harmony among Christians. We the exclusive attribute of the Son, and a should then meet as brethren, and the disciples of one common master; and with respect to all our differences, having no object but truth, they would be discussed without animosity. No opinion having then anything in its favour besides its own proper evidence, all prejudice would much sooner give way; and truth, which we all profess to aim at, would be much sooner attained, and become universal. . . . . .

But the honour of producing so great and glorious a revolution is, I believe, too great for any powers, civil or ecclesiastical, that will be able to effect it. It is a scheme worthy of God only, and which in due time will be brought about by his good providence, contrary to the wishes of all the ruling powers of the world, or of those who direct their councils. In the meantime we Unitarians shall not fail to do everything in our power to exhibit these enlarged views of things; confident that in this we are the instruments in the hands of providence; that our principles, being frequently exposed to view, will in time recommend themselves to all who are truly liberal and unprejudiced; and that all bigotry, like the darkness which it resembles, will at length give way before the light of truth. . . . . .

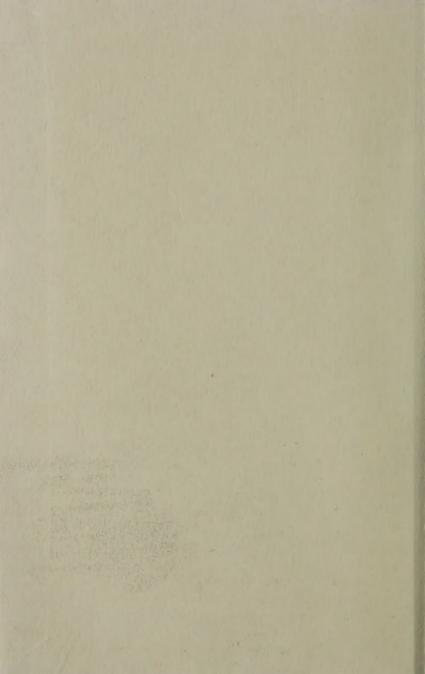

With this glorious prospect before us, we willingly bear all the obloquy and every temporal inconvenience to which the open profession of our faith can expose us, and are infinitely happier in being opposed and frowned upon by the powers of the world, than you are in opposing us, with every advantage that the world can give you. . . . .

University of Southern Californ

BX9840 .P7 1871 Priestley, Joseph, 1733-1804. A history of the corruptions of Christi 9840 P7 1871 Priestley, Joseph, 1733-1804.

A history of the corruptions of Christianity. Reprinted from Rutt's edition, with notes. To which are appended Considerations in evidence that the Apostolic and primitive church was Unitarian, extracted from Priestley's replies to Bishop Horsley,
The Bench of Bishops, and others. 10th thousand. London, British and Foreign Unitarian Association, 1871, 32887 xvi,336p. 20cm.

1.Unitarianism. 2.Theology - Hist. 3.

Heresies and heretics. I.Title:

The corruptions of Christianity.

